"Any person who has been in office six years as governor, taken controversial positions, and is a Republican in a Democratic state doesn't have to look at the polls to know he's the underdog," Sargent said at a news conference.

"I recognized from the very beginning that the bosses were going to be with Dukakis," Sargent said. "I recognized that today we are the underdogs."

The governor declined to name the alleged "bosses" but described them as Democratic leaders and labor leaders.

The debates, Sargent said, "should provide the opportunity for the candidates to state their programs and positions and to be questioned by reporters."

Taking another look back

So you don't like politics. What else is new? And things just aren't like they used to be.

And when Jack Kennedy walked through a crowd, things just seemed a little better — just because it was Jack. There were parties and picnics and dreams, and everyone was into it. There were Bundy and Galbraith and Brother Bob, and the rest of the merry clan from King Arthur's court. And nobody was really afraid to be too free. And then they shot Jack in the head, and there was Lyndon.

So America went all the way with L.B.J. — through the jungles and the rice patties and the walls — all the way. And there were brave men who fought. And there were braver men who fought. The nation turned its head from the whisper of freedom, and looked to the thunder of "democracy".

It was only when a fickle land grew tired of losing that the change began, and Clean Gene was there to show us the way. There were riots and revolts and flag burnings, and even the vanishing hope for change within. There were Brother Bob and Sirhan and Daley and Humphrey and then of course, there was Nixon.

Buster Brown and his bosom buddies coming to clean up the land. And the nation was slowly cleared from dissent and disorder in the crucial summer of the invasions. And all the peasants watched — step by step, phase by phase, trick by trick. And the last great electoral binge seemed to be at hand. And amidst a cast of thousands, the "New Politics" made a brief appearance to the world, but nobody really believes in Santa Claus. They'd much rather have the Grinch.

And the world experienced a cruel tide — a tide of thieves and crooks and spies and saboteurs and perhaps even murderers. And the government went down and down and Dean and Haldeman and Ehrilichman and Kleindeinst and Magruder and Liddy and Mitchell and McCord and Gray and Hunt and Agnew and all the rest of Fagen's children. Until the only one left was Fagen himself.

And Mr. Clean came along to run the country as it should be run — zigzagging his way from touchdown to touchdown until he stopped at the fifty yard line and threw a block for his old boss. And he says "I'll let you come back if you want to work for me!" And the world is still crying — crying for Jack and for Brother Bob. Crying for Roosevelt and for Lincoln — crying for Jefferson and for Washington.

We view ourselves as a nation of leaders, yet we've no one to lead us. We see our duty as being the policemen of the world, while our own policemen can barely control their own power. We picture ourselves as the saviors from hunger and disease, even as dead bodies clutter up our own back yard. And we learn of our being the most prosperous nation in the world as we streak towards a depression.

Where are we, America? Take another look.

Keeping off sidewalks

All existing paved walkways should be torn up and replanted with grass. Within two months there would be new footpaths showing the most heavily traveled and direct routes between all buildings. These newly discovered pathways, as well as those that have existed for years, would then be repaved. This would end those unaesthetic dirt short cuts so prevalent on campus. This seems to be a radical undertaking, but I think that most of you rational readers can see that this is a revolutionary but sound approach to an age old problem.

With the exception of a handful of truly well placed walkways, nobody uses them anyway. Most were placed for reasons of artistic symmetry by architects that don't have 15 minutes between classes, that are upwards to a couple of miles apart. All over campus multitudes of students race across the grass cutting corners and dodging bodies to make that next oversubscribed lecture.

It is a crisp autumn afternoon as I swiftly move through the bowels of the Student Union Building. From the heated tunnel, I leap the stairs three at a time and sprint to the rather sparse grass between the pond and the library. If I were to use the walk that winds near the water, I could lose at least 45 seconds. Without hesitation, I jog across the grass.

This common occurance must happen at least once a day in the life of an average UMie. Think of all those little trampled blades of grass. Some of them never recover and become new short cuts, new cut corners. Imagine the interaction between a couple of blades, a friend fantasized.

"Duck! Here comes a 250 pounder! Phew, that was close!"

"This one's wearing cleats — brace yourself!"

"It wasn't so bad really. I was one of the lucky ones. The one that got me was wearing sneakers."

For some, this system would be useless. I've met students who shunned all paved pathways as a minor revolt. One in particular is beginning his fourth and final year in a Southwest tower. When he finds grass, he has a tendency to overdose himself, walking barefoot in a state of ecstacy which he stores for those many hours spent in brick and concrete block. For him, direct paths would be worthless. He'd still wander joyously across the grass.

There is a way to take care of even the worst of grass fiends, but I find it unacceptable. It is the Southwest approach. Leaving only a few yards of grass to reminds those that walk by that it existed, all the other wast spaces could be paved over. This solves the problems I have previously mentioned adequately. We wouldn't even have to worry about wading through mud puddles as the snow begins to thaw.

The next new building on campus could utilize these very basic concepts. First, the architect would find out which paths receive the greatest usage. Next, the construction would be done with care to avoid altering existing pathways. Then, the areas around the building would be planted. Lastly, the new sidewalks would be ready to pave after two months.

This proposal would have major impact on architecture and design as we know it. When employed, this concept would help to generate feelings of warmth and community because of the input of literally all that walk the streets. Presently, I'm studying other possible applications of participatory architecture. One that seems full of promise, is the building of dormitories by residents. The materials are delivered to the students who then build to their own specifications. This would eliminate the problem of on campus residents being unhappy with their living conditions. If anybody reading this can think of any other useful solutions to this problem, please leave your idea addressed to me at the Collegian office. Thank you.

The dilemma in Boston

By ANTHONY BARNES

"What's he here for?" The question was asked concerning the presence of a priest in the large crowd of children, teenagers, and full grown adults. "He's here to give last rites to the niggers," was the hastily replied answer offered by a woman of about thirty-five. All over the buildings were the signs of bitterness and hate, "nigors suck," "No niggers." The streets, lined with police on horseback and armed with riot equipment renewed old memories of streets in Black ghettos during the rebellions of past years. But in this instance the people police were assigned to "protect" are Black. Whether the job was adequately done is food for your own opinions.

The energy, apprehension and hatred had reached it's peak as the first school buses, less than half full, rolled down the street toward the school. And then, the racial slurs, the cat-calls and slogans began to fly, along with the rocks and bottles that injured nine of the Black students on that first eventful day of school intergration.

It must be understood that these incidents did not take place in Alabama, Georgia or Mississippi, the better known areas of racism in this country. These incidents happened in "libral, conscientious" Boston. More specifically, South Boston.

"Southie," as it is called, is home for many of Boston's working class Irish people. The sense of a unified community is quite strong there in comparison to other areas of the city. A lot of the people are of low income and are poorly educated. Southie is the part of town where racism runs as rampant as the crowds that fill the streets each morning before the school buses come. Southie is also the part of town where Blacks just don't go.

Much was made of the woman who was burned to death in Roxbury just one year ago. At the same time, numerous incidents occuring in South Boston are generally disregarded. Such was the case of the 17 year old Black youth who was shot and killed by a sniper in a notorious South Boston housing project.or the Black couple who were dragged from their car as they waited for a traffic light a few years back, they were beaten and the male occupant died as a result of the beating. But the people in South Boston maintain that racism is not the reason that they are against busing. I guess they also feel that racism is not the reason that they shout and write "nigger" all over the place and throw rocks and bottles at school buses carrying Black students. Or for threating the lives of Black teachers who, by terrible misfortune were assigned to teach in South Boston. They say that the reason that they are against bussing is because it is forced bussing, which would be a legitimate reason if their actions did not prove otherwise. But it must be understood that many Black parents are against forced bussing too. Yet the violence that permeates Southie has yet to appear in "crime-infested" Roxbury and other Black communities in Boston where a few whites have appeared for classes.

All that this writer can offer is prayers for their safety for the coureagous Black children who brave the hostile crowds of "anti-bussing" supporters each day as they travel to Southie's schools to seek an education which is the long run will produce them as functional illiterates. Despite the promise that violence would not be tolerated, arrests have been startlingly few for such a violence-filled week in South Boston.

The continued calm in the Black community in the face of this violence is a mixed blessing, because surely any violent reaction in the Black community will ultimately benefit the racists who started this whole thing. But is is our children who are being threatened. Monday it took one fourth of the entire Boston Police Dept. to restrain the people of South Boston. It is a miracle that one of our children hasn't been killed. Let us hope that the latter statement is not one of prophecy.

The situation in South Boston is just a bitter extension of the way this government pits the poor against each other. We are living in a country that has been described as moving into two separate societies. As a lifetime participant of Bostons Public Schools this writer feels that bussing is not the answer for Boston's schools on the question of quality education for all students. The quality of education depends on the quality of teachers, schools and equipment. All the bussing in the world will not help the children if the administrators of the schools that they are bussed to just don't care. That is the case with the majority of the schools in the Boston School System. The Boston School Committee is completely to blame.

The problem as this writer sees it is quality education for all, not the intergration of schools. The bussing of students from one rotten school to another one, at the risk of the students own personal safety does little to solve this problem.

Asian in America

By MAGARET CORNELL

Did you ever have a nickname or a pet name that you didn't like, but people kept calling you that name? "Anyway, what does it matter? "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." You know that in your head but not in your guts. You still don't like the name Ronnie, because you're not a little boy anymore, and just as soon drop the "ie". Or take me. I hate my father's nickname for me. "Monkey". Isn't that silly? I'm not the little girl who wailed and shook the sides of her crib. Anyway that's personal, and not very earth-shaking. Or there's another — not nickname exactly — perhaps pet name: Oriental.

Not an individual issue, more like a group issue tucked away in the back of my head that pops out now and then. How in the world can Oriental be an issue? It's not the word exactly but...There is a poem I came across by a woman named Beverly Lee:

to be oriental is to be ding and dong cling and clang tinkle trinkle.
identity is singing windchimes blasting firecrackers the old bum sleeping at the door of the sun sing theatre
        chopsticks and clean laundry the ping yuen housing project rice and tea and more identity is me.
oriental is a color, a culture, a language, a tradition oriental is often a role — high. low. middle.
  i am me.
oriental is snicker, snicker sigh
        ooh ahh
        ling ling dong
        huh?
oriental is our history and history is just our present — without a past i am not our history
  i am my present with a past.
  When is oriental?

Do you feel it? Suzy Wong, the golden-hearted prostitute or Charlie (not Charles) Chan who walked like a penguin and was about as emotional as a wooden doll. The nurses's aide I worked with this summer who thought all of Southeast Asia and China and Japan had one language and one culture. Or more sophisticated. The high school French teacher who said, "Oriental do not value the individual human life."

Or conversations with other students. I hate to tell you that Asians don't have slanted eyes. Eyes that are shaped differently , yes, but no slanted eyes. Nor do the Kamikaze pilots in World War II. A lot of students bring that up as a fundamental difference between East and West: attitudes toward death. But the kamikaze pilots were not volunteers and had to be conditioned for months — especially to accept their "glorious deaths". And wasn't there a Nathan Hale and a Patrick Henry in America? Just like any other people.

You need not stumble over "Asian" (which I prefer) if you are used to "Oriental". Some of us refer to ourselves as Orientals. But there is a conditioned attitude sometimes subtle, sometimes not. The exotic and mysterious just go with Oriental. I know there is more. What about you? The time for reconciliation is now.

Letters to the editor

Collegian deserves whammy

To the Editor:

Now I've really had it! For quite some time I have been putting up with little articles in the Collegian that have been outright lies about what happens to be a very serious religion for some of us. The religion? Witchcraft. The lies? Just about everything printed!

People apparently love to cling on to the traditional beliefs that Witches fly around on broomsticks, cast spells on people, and prance around in the nude. The article in last Thursday's paper by Sharon Hughes proves just that. I would like to clear up a few of the false statements I found in the article. Of course I realize that these mistakes are not all Ms. Hughes' fault, most of the fault lies in the fact that she used The ABC of Witchcraft as one of her sources.

First I would like to say that there never has been and never will be any power struggle between the Church and the Wicca. Also, the Wicca is not a totally female religion. Anyone who is even vaguely familiar with the Laws should know that our High Priests are quite important to the coven. We aren't trying to control anything but our own personal lives, and we'd like to do that in peace, but unfortunately the media can't leave us alone.

Another faulty statement was that 13 gained significance as the number of coveners as Witchcraft went underground. Covens have always been limiting their numbers to 13 since the Craft was begun. Many covens allow 14 members — six couples, a High Priest, and a High Priestess.

Now I come to the portion of the article that prompted me to write this letter. How dare you mention Witchcraft along with the devil! We do not believe in any such deity. He was invented by the Christians. Don't blame us for a concept that was developed by the Christians! I think I had better end this letter at this point before I begin to get carried away. This letter probably won't do a bit of good, anyway. If you're running true to form you probably won't even print it, not verbatum anyway! By the way, the term "warlock" is not used in the Craft.

Blessed Be!

To The Editor:

Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended and the Massachusetts state law cover employment discrimination on the basis of race, religion, national origin, and sex. The law specifically states that people must receive equal pay for substantially the same work regardless of sex. One might assume that in an "enlightened" community such as this that unfair employment and hiring practices in this regard would no longer exist. More and more women, however, are rapidly learning what the situation really is.

The existence of discrimination is something that all women must face. Sometimes its so subtle that one can hardly define it much less find a weapon to combat it. At other times its as glaring as a deliberate slap in the face. Hurt, anger, and frustration are unfortunately the familiar results. What is needed is affirmative action by women who are struggling to make a way for themselves. Intelligence and ability should not be wasted nor taken advantage of.

Discrimination in employment is something that women must fight on all fronts. They have the right to file a charge with the Massachusetts Commission against Discrimination for any unfair employment practices. While doing so they are guaranteed protection against harrassment.

Change can only occur if women work together to become aware of their problems and what action can be taken to solve them. Further information and someone to rap to is always available at Everywoman's Center.

Boltwood

To the Editor:

This year, as in the past, the Boltwood-Belchertown Project will be offering a variety of programs through which volunteers may work with residents of Belchertown State school. Each of these programs was developed by a student working in conjunction with the residents, professionals and direct care staff of a specific residential area at Belchertown. Through consultation, the developmental needs of the residents were assessed, and a variety of possible activities were designed. As the needs with each area are dependent upon the age and capabilities of the people who live there, the activities vary considerably from program to program. Undoubtedly, a program exists which would satisfy the interests of most student volunteers.

Boltwood programs will be run Monday through Thursday evenings from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Transportation will be provided. Volunteers will have the opportunity to select the program that most interests them, and will be asked in return to consistently attend one night per week for at least the duration of the semester.

Any member of the five-college community interested in working with the people who live at Belchertown State School has something to offer the Boltwood Project, regardless of his/ her academic major or background. If you would like to learn more about our project, please plan to attend one of our information meetings during the week of September 16-19th. The times and places of these meetings are posted around campus. If you want to serve in a way that really counts, join Boltwood. "No one can do it for you, and no one can do it but you."

Veterans

To the Editor:

I wish to address my remarks to all the veterans in the UMass student body. As you may or may not know, the bill for the extension and raise of Veteran's benefits is dead..at least for the time being.

On August 19, 1974 a bill came out of the Joint Committee on Veteran's Affairs allowing a 23 percent increase in the monthly amount of educational allowances, a nine month extension of eligibility from 36 to 45 months, an out-right $1,000 educational loan, and an appropriation for tuition assistance. Because of some descrepencies in the Committee's approval, a "point of order" on the bill was raised by Rep. H.R. Gross of Iowa, and was unopposed by other members of the House. This maneuver forced the bill into amendment, which, in effect has placed it back to the stage where it was six months ago. New legislation must now be proposed.

Representative who supposedly supported veterans have mysteriously allowed the bill to go back for amendment, amounting to a SELL OUT of veteran's interests! Vets are urged to contact their Congressmen to find out the whole story, and [importantly in this election year] to find out how they, our elected representatives, voted on this issue.

Positive action to reenact the initial proposal may still be taken. The 2500 student veterans receiving benefits in the Five College area can, and should put pressure on Senators Kennedy and Brooke to vote against the ammended bill in the Senate, and push for passage of the first [and legitimate] bill which came out of Joint Committee on August 19th.

UMass: it's really not that big at all

By BETH LESLIE EDELBERG
Staff Writer

I'm in the midst of a rude awakening. I thought the college experience was basically universal.

I went to a small State College in New Hampshire to do my undergraduate work. There are 2,200 students enrolled on a campus that can be thoroughly covered in a ten minute walk. What did this small intimate college mean to me? It meant knowing the President, the Deans, professors and janitors. It meant recognizing transfer students because they had unfamiliar faces.

Unfortunately a small college tends to establish cliques. Fraternities sitting in front of the Student Union Coffee Shop playing whist, freaks monopolizing the back, while theatre people sat on the right side. It wasn't easy to move around. You were pretty much established to a certain group.

Academically a small college offers a small but good variety of courses and some innovative programs as well, ie. independent study, course contract course major, studies abroad, reciprocal studies with neighboring colleges.

Classes were generally small. professors led fairly informal classes. A personalized feeling was present and felt within/ without. This type of informality gave me an extra amount of confidence, enabling me to participate to my fullest ability.

Granted it was neat being known by everyone and being close with lots of people, but who's to say one cannot maintain a closeness here at UMass.

I'm finding enough to keep busy here that I can barely find time to breathe. Academically UMass is keeping me on my toes. I've been spending a lot of time reading and taking advantage of that towering monster of a library. I still can't quite believe the peace and quiet one observes there.

As in all educational institutions professors seem to think that their course is the only one that you are taking, ergo the assignments start piling up. I guess that is a universal college trait.

Despite that, I do feel privileged to be taking courses from such prominently noted professors, and plan to absorb their lecture to the fullest. I'm absolutely amazed that many of the professors here are one and the same that one reads about in texts conducting experiments and such. I always wondered where all those people were? There certainly is a wider path here for one to step concerning alternative educational programs. There's BDIC, studies abroad, continuing ed., Outreach, independent study, Womens Studies, University Without Walls, Honors Program and still others.

The resources here that provide counseling services are many. This is extremely gratifying to know, as well as healthy for a University this big.

Everywomens Center offers counseling services as well as a place to just rap or get information about other programs or to take courses affiliated with Womens Studies. Everywomens Center, Room to Move, Counseling Center, the Mental Health Clinic, are services that provide excellent counseling. This is all a bit overwhelming for me as the college I attended had no counseling services per se, except for perhaps the infirmary or the campus minister.

Now that University of Massachusetts is slowly getting smaller, I'm finding it easier to meet people and do things. Professors are friendly and seem accessible.

I've got the freedom to move.

"Now I lay me down to sleep...."

SUSAN LUNTER
Staff Writer

Reliable Noah Webster defines sleep as "A natural, regularly recurring rest for the body, during which there is little or no conscious thought."

I have inhabited my dorm for a week now, and wonder if the word even exists. I didn't come here with the notion that I'd be abiding in an elderly nursing home, but sleep seems to be a foreign word around here.

Last week I encountered the usual freshmen hassles of waiting in registration and parking permit lines; plus the important fact of just finding myself. After hitting the week-end parties I envisioned Sunday as a day of rest-which it was once meant to be. Did I get to sleep? No, The nightly Blue Wall patrons came stomping back, blaring Aerosmith records to 3:00 a.m. and bouncing their games off the walls just to hear the echoes.

Not that I was sheltered from earth shattering noises; having three high school brothers practicing football plays in the house for Saturday's big game has immunized me somewhat. But football jocks retire early, while in training, so I did get some sleep.

Maybe I was misled in my high school biology class. Back then the teachers lectured that sleep was one biological necessity of life. The only time I've observed people sleeping here is 8:00 a.m. Monday morning in their Rhetoric class, and that's only a few catnaps or yawnfuls.

How do they survive? Once in a sixth grade history class I learned the seven Natural Wonders of the world. Maybe people who don't sleep should be classified as the eighth. If anyone can sneak me the secret of how they do it; maybe these black circles under my eyes will disappear, and I can throw out the remainder of my sleeping pills!!

Prosecutor will request appeal of dismissal in AIM trial

ST. PAUL, MINN. [UPI] - Prosecutor R. D. Hurd said yesterday he will ask the government to appeal a federal judge's dismissal of all five felony charges against Dennis Banks and Russell Means, who led last year's 71-day armed occupation of Wounded Knee, S.D.

Hurd said the Department of Justice in Washington will make the final decision about whether to appeal and he said that decision is not expected for at least 30 days.

U.S. District Court Judge Fred Nichol late Monday dismissed the five felony charges against each of the two American Indian Movement leaders on grounds of government misconduct in the trial and occupation of Wounded Knee on South Dakota's Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

The judge said he was "ashamed" of the performance of the prosecution and FBI in the 8-month trial.

Banks, 41, a Chippewa from Leech Lake, Minn., and Means, 34, an Oglala Sioux from Porcupine, S.D., were jubilant about the dismissal.

But Hurd said he felt the "government was right and the judge was wrong."

Dick Wilson, Oglala Sioux tribal president on the Pine Ridge Reservation and foe of AIM, was angry. Wilson called the dismissal a "total breakdown of the judicial system."

Nichol said he was on the verge of dismissing the charges several times during the long trial. The thing that put the judge "over the brink" was the serious illness of a juror after one day of deliberation last Friday and the government's refusal to let the jury proceed with 11 members.

Nichol said he dismissed the charges because the government refused to proceed with 11 jurors and for three other reasons:

-Failure of the prosecution to show the defense an FBI report on a key witness in the trial. He said the report contradicted almost everything the witness said.

-The Louis Moves Camp case. Moves Camp, key government witness, gave damaging testimony against Banks and Means but the judge felt his testimony was false.

-Use of military force during the occupation of Wounded Knee. Nichol said it was illegal to use the military in a civil case.

States had not meddled in Chilean politics during the Allende era.

...stigation of how secret ...ate testimony by CIA Director William Colby came to be leaked to the press. Fulbright said comittee members were "very upset" about the leaks, which made public the gist of Colby's testimony that the CIA had intervened in Chilean affairs between 1970 and 1973 and had spent between $8 and $11 million doing it.

Fulbright said the question of recalling Kissinger to check the accuracy of the testimony he gave on Chile policy during his 1973 confirmation hearings would be decided after the staff study had been completed. He estimated this would take "a week to 10 days."

Kissinger has been called to account for testimony before the Foreign Relations Committee once before, earlier this summer. The committee then cleared him of allegations he had lied about his role in Watergate-era wiretapping and he withdrew his threat to resign.

Ford defends Kissinger

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday denied reports that Henry A. Kissinger is about to lose his job as chief national security adviser, and personally assured Kissinger the reports are untrue.

Both the White House and the State Department denied a Los Angeles Times report that Ford would reorganize the National Security Council and relieve Kissinger of his position as special assistant to the president for national security affairs.

Kissinger first served the Nixon administration in that influential White House post and he kept the title when he became Secretary of State last year, giving him "two hats" and a potent position within the NSC.

Nixon gone, Castro accepted

U.S., Cuba move closer to diplomatic ties

By PHIL NEWSOM
UPI Foreign News Analyst

Just as the soft drink sandwich stands have returned to Havana, so it seems the time also is drawing closer when the United States and Cuba will restore the diplomatic and economic relations broken off nearly 14 years ago.

When it occurs it will be the result of changes on both sides.

One is the departure from office of former President Nixon.

Another is a growing conviction that Fidel Castro no longer presses the campaign to export his revolution to other American states.

Another is mounting pressure from others among the 23 active members of the Organization of American States (OAS) to lift the diplomatic and economic sanctions which the hemisphere body imposed on Cuba in July, 1964, some three and a half years after the United States took its own unilateral action.

And finally there are the indirect suggestions that Castro would like to return to the OAS. One such report comes via Mexico and another from a Panamanian TV journalist who was told by Castro he would welcome improved relations with the United states.

Despite denials from Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger that no policy changes toward Cuba were being anticipated, indications to the contrary began surfacing last spring.

It was then the United States issued licenses permitting U.S.-owned subsidiaries operating in Argentina to export to Cuba.

Somewhat later, in response to pressure from within the OAS, Kissinger also indicated the United States would go along with the majority if it were decied to invite Cuba to a "hemisphere dialogue" in Buenos Aires next March.

The Nixon resignation was regarded as further clearing the way, removing as it did an object of particular hatred by Castro and Nixon's own determination to retain a hardline stance against Cuba.

In the U.S. Congress there remains a hard-core resistance to any U.S.-Cuban detente.

Similar resistance exists among some members of the OAS, including Brazil, Bolivia and Ecuador, and some other.

And so Kissinger may have felt his hand being forced early in September when Colombia, Costa Rica and Venezuela introduced a resolution calling for an end of OAS sanctions against Castro's Cuba. The three cited "profound changes" in the international situation and called upon the OAS ruling council to call a meeting of OAS foreign ministers in Quito, Ecuador, on Nov. 11 to deal with the Cuban issue.

Even before any such meeting can be held, 13 members of the OAS have declared their wish to abandon sanctions. Two others have indicated they will go with the majority.

Castro himself has indicated no repentance and no change in his plans for the ultimate destiny of his country. Cuba, he says, is entering the socialist phase of its revolution. But communism remains its goal.

Last known P.O.W. to be freed today

VIENTIANE (UPI) - Emmett Kay, a civilian pilot who is the last known living American prisoner of war in Indochina, is scheduled to be released today after about 16 in pro-Communist Pathet Lao captivity. His wife said she was so excited she had "butterflies" in her stomach.

"I've got butterflies," said Flora Kay. "Boy, I'll tell you, I've never been so excited."

Kay, 47, was captured by the Pathet Lao on May 7, 1973, when his commercial plane was forced to land in Communist territory because of bad weather. He is scheduled to be flown to Thailand and then to the Philippines immediately after his release at Vientiane airport.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Thursday, September 19

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Add to your store of knowledge rather than to your store of acquaintances. You will need fewer, not more, people around in the near future.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Make a real effort to reconstruct the past for yourself. There is no more helpful hint for success than that which memory can provide.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — You should be able to advance to a position of genuine authority at this time. Take whatever accolades come your way with a high degree of modesty.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You will not necessarily do a loved one a favor by accepting his responsibility for him. Force another to bear his share of a burden.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — An excellent day for those activities which in the past have best displayed your talents. Don't allow yourself the luxury of losing.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — The outlook for Aquarius is extremely promising today. You might do well, though, to reconsider your present strategy for gain.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Check out the actual source of any aid offered today. You may be accepting gifts you would rather refuse — or vice versa.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Whether activities are social or business in nature, this is the day for them. Redirect your energies along lines more conducive to self-satisfaction.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Friendly cooperation is the key to today's success. Personal relationships may need shoring up, especially where youngsters are concerned.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Combine business with pleasure to double whatever pleasure you generally gain through each. Keep in mind any debts to be paid.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — This may well be the day you experience a breakthrough in personal relationships with the elderly. Make an effort to understand new demands.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Be on your guard against one who would rather see you fail than succeed. Another's jealousy may make real progress impossible today.

Health Services needs student evaluators

University students will begin interviewing applicants for professional staff positions at the Health Services this week according to members of the Student Health Advisory Board.

"We hope to get enough students interested in signing up for the Interview Panels at this weeks Student Health Advisory Board meeting to make these panels broadly represent all UMass students," Mark Citron, Advisory Board Co-chairperson told the Collegian.

Student interview panels try to estimate a physician's or other professional's ability and interest in working with students. According to University Health services literature, students submit written evaluations after an hour-long interview with the applicants, and "these evaluations are then considered along with those of the other staff....students have as much say... as the staff of the Health Services."

Veterans urged to seek educational benefits

The Veterans Affairs Office urges all veterans who have not already done so, to come into the office immediately (room 239 Whitmore) to enroll for their educational benefits through the Veterans Administration. The VA requires all vets to sign up again at the start of the Fall '74 semester.

Vets who have already pre-registered with the office may have a check at the VAO, and they can pick them up any time. Students who have received their checks at their home should be sure to return the yellow information card enclosed with their payment to the office to avoid any administrative foul-ups.

The VAO is a full-time veteran's service center with direct contact with the regional office in Boston through two new vet representatives. The office has all pertinent information regarding veteran affairs.

FINAST BRAND SALE!
YOU SAVE MONEY WITH FINAST BRANDS!

Finast Will No Longer Increase Prices of Food Once Placed on Our Shelves:
On Wednesday, July 24, 1974, all Finast Supermarkets began a new pricing policy on Grocery, Meat and Produce items.
1. When Finast is forced to make a price increase, cans and packages already price marked on the shelves will be sold at the old lower price.
When items are restocked on the shelves, the new, higher priced items will be placed behind the lower priced items.
2. Weekly specials or "sale items" are priced lower than regular prices. Any remaining after the sale event, will be repriced upward.
3. As regular prices go down, Finast will immediately reduce the price on shelf stock, and the lower price will always be honored at the register. When a can or a package shows more than one price, the customer pays the lowest price for that can or package.
4. Baby food and items controlled by state laws are exempt from this new policy.
5. Until current stocks are sold there will be some items of our many thousands with more than one price marking on the can or apckage. Please bear with us during this transition.

Fighting the Numbers

Being a native of the illustrious city of Meriden, Connecticut, I have been faced with the decision of whether to support New York or Boston teams most of my life.

You see, Meriden is located so that both New York and Boston are accessible by car, and the city has its share of "Hub" fans and "City" followers. For some reason I chose to become a New York fan as a youth and have been following the Yankees, Giants, Knicks and Rangers loyally ever since.

This has presented a slight problem because many of my close friends, colleagues in sports writing, and even my brother and girlfriend are Red Sox, Bruins, Patriots and Celtic rooters. My views seemed to consistently differ from those around me. It was bad enough fighting to uphold the "faith" in my hometown, but I didn't have enough, so I decided to attend the University of Massachusetts.

I knew I was in trouble when my freshman roommate hung his autographed picture of Carl Yastrzemski on the wall of our room. He and I battled it out through the end of the 1973 baseball season, the entire football, hockey and basketball schedules. I dreaded a New York loss, because I was sure to hear about it the following day.

Across the campus, remarks such as "The Giants Belong in New Haven for good", and "When was the last time the Yankees beat Boston in Fenway Park?" made me wonder if I should admit my "unusual" preference for New York teams.

Can you imagine standing up for the Rangers in a crowded room of wild Bruins fans during a New York-Boston confrontation? Or how about backing up the Knicks against the opinions of about a hundred die-hard Celtic fans at the Bluewall? I hesitate to announce my choice of teams in situations like these, not because I won't argue for my favorites, but when personal health is involved, I prefer to keep quiet.

Don't get the wrong idea, I think the Bruins have one of the best teams in hockey, and the Celts and Red Sox are exceptional teams as well. It's just that was brought up in the midst of the New York-Boston rivalry and happened to away toward the New York side (sometimes unfortunately, I think).

Some argue that the New York press plays up the hometown teams, apparently making them appear much better than they really are. It's inevitable in a large city with several newspapers, and anyone who tells you the same doesn't happen in Boston is kidding himself. The readers love it when their team is winning, and naturally, the local sports writers pour it on.

One thing for sure is the New York-Boston rivalry will continue, with fans heatedly "discussing" which are the better teams between the Celts, Pats, Bruins, Red Sox and Knicks, Giants, Rangers and Yankees. And, no matter how outnumbered, this sports writer will go on fighting the numbers, just a lonely New York fan in a sea of Boston followers.

Men's crew optimistic

By DAVE EIBEL
MDC Sports Staff

The University of Massachusetts Varsity Men's Crew enters a new era this season with a new coach and an optimistic outlook for another outstanding season from the number one college division rowing team in the country.

Bill Mahoney, who rowed for three years at Harvard and captained the Varsity Heavyweight Crew in 1973, replaces the departed Mike Vespoli wno resigned at the end of last season over the treatment his team received from the Athletic Department.

Mahoney was a member of the U.S. championship crews in the Pan American Games and European Championships of 1971, competed in the 1972 Olympic Trials, as well as the 1973 National Team.

The team is currently involved with drills, physical co-conditioning, and some racing but does not begin racing officially until the Head of the Charles Regatta to be held in Boston on October 27th. The squad consists of over 30 varsity squad members including stroke Steve Toomer, Bill Fitzpatrick, Peter Berg and others from the 1974 Dad Vail Championship Eight. According to Mahoney, "these men will be pushed by an excellent group of juniors and sophomores all of whom have proven to be of top caliber." The October 27th race will give the UMass oarsmen some experience racing in boats smaller than the eight-man shells used in formal intercollegiate races.

Five Texas athletes suspended

AUSTIN, Tex. [UPI] — Five University of Texas athletes were dismissed from the Longhorn Football and track teams because coaches were suspicious they were involved with marijuana, the student newspaper the Daily Texan reported today.

Track coach Cleburne Price dismissed lettermen Bishop Dolegiewicz and Siggi Busha Monday for "disciplinary reasons."

Football coach Darrell Royal dismissed sophomore safety Joe Bob Bizzell, who started for the Longhorns in 1973, and reserve linemen Don and Ken Thurman last Thursday for the same reason.

The Texan said Royal told Bizzell early last week that coaches were suspicious he had been using marijuana.

"He said it was proven that smoking dope slows down your reactions, and he could tell I was doing it because he said I wasn't reacting right and I hadn't gained any weight," Bizzell told the Texan.

The newspaper said "numerous sources" reported that track coaches — on orders from Price — searched each of the athletes rooms for marijuana before dismissing Dolgegiewicz and Busha. But Price denied the charge.

"We have not searched anyone's room, I can assure you of that,". Price said.

Royal said the dismissals were "personal" and denied any knowledge of Price's alleged tactics

Courageous captures America's Cup, 4-0

NEWPORT, R.I. [UPI] — U.S. defender Courageous, whose owners had second thoughts about building her, smoothly whipped Southern Cross by 7:19 Tuesday for a fourth straight win, ending Australia's best financed, best organized challenge for the elusive America's cup.

It was the widest margin of victory in the 1974 series. Courageous won by 4:54 in the first race, 1:17 in the second and 5:27 in the twice-delayed third race.

The final race in the best-of-seven series was no contest after the start in winds under 10 knots. Courageous got a 20 second advantage across the line and outsailed the Cross on every leg of the 24.5-mile course.

It took eight days for courageous to eliminate the 22nd cup Challenger in a series featuring the first aluminum-hulled boats to compete in the cup races.

Southern Cross, floated by Australian land developer Alan Bond in a $9 million effort that began four years ago, ironically was defeated by a boat whose backers almost scuttled plans to build her last winter.

The Courageous syndicate had second thoughts about their $1.5 million project because of the economy and energy crisis, but later ordered construction of the yacht.

The Southern Cross effort was the fourth unsuccessful Australian bid to win the Bottomless Trophy that no nation has been able to wrest from the New York Yacht Club since the Schooner American beat a fleet of rivals around the Isle of Wight in 1851.

With starting Helmsman Dennis Conner outmanuvering the Aussies before the gun, courageous was across the starting line 20 seconds ahead of yellow-hulled Southern Cross and the lead grew and grew after he passed the wheel to Sipper Ted Hood.

Courageous led by 1:19 at the first Windward Mark, or 4.5 miles into the race. Courageous picked up another 30 seconds on the two reaching offwind legs, returning to the bottom of the course with a 1:49 lead midway to the finish.

At that point, Hood, The Marblehead, Mass., Sailmaker, played it conservative, avoiding any chance of a tacking duel with Australian skipper Jim Hardy, but the lead continued to grow. At the end of the second windward leg, the Aussie 12 trailed by 4:02.

On the fifth or downwind leg, courageous gained another 28 seconds and headed for the finish with an eye the iced champagne in her hold.

Southern Cross had a pre-race reputation for going well in 16-18 knot winds but the unpredictable weather off Newport was not the usual September fare. Winds were light to moderate throughout the week, providing the air in which courageous has excelled all summer in her trials against the two-time defender intrepid.

UMass ruggers open Saturday vs Norwich

This Saturday marks the season opener for the UMass Rugby Club. Hosting the local ruggers will be the Norwich Rugby Club.

The Norwich side is traditionally a strong one, which relies on a very heavy physical style of play. The UMass Ruggers, on the other hand rely in it's ability to control the ball in a quick running attack. The contrasting game techniques should provide for an interesting match between two solid teams.

Looking ahead, the schedule for this season includes games against some of the top Rugby Clubs in New England. Holy Cross, MIT, and Beacon Hill Rugby Club, among others, have agreed to meet UMass, in a season in which the local club is seeking to gain more recognition in New England rugby circles.

Bengals bite Sox, 5-3; loss 17th in last 24

BOSTON — Al Kaline, in the final stages of a brilliant career, ignited a two-run sixth-inning rally with his 2,993rd major league hit, and the Detroit Tigers went on to beat Boston 5-3 Tuesday night, handing the Red Sox' pennant hopes another serious jolt.

With the Tigers trailing 3-2, the 39-year-old Kaline, who intends to retire after reaching the 3,000-hit milestone, led off the sixth with a ground single to left field and moved to second on a hit by Bill Freehan.

Reggie Sanders sacrificed and both Kaline and Freehan scored on Leon Roberts' sharp ground single into left field.

The Tigers pushed across an insurance run in the ninth on singles by Marv Lane, Aurelio Rodriguez and Ron LeFlore.

The Red Sox jumped to a 2-0 lead off winner Joe Coleman, 13-12, in the first inning on a single by Tommy Harper, a fielder's choice grounder and Bernie Carbo's 12th homer of the baseball season.

However, the Tigers came back in the second to tie the score on Bill Freehan's 16th homer, a double to deep right center by Sanders and a pop single by Aurelio Rodriguez.

Boston took a 3-2 lead in the fourth on a single by Dick McAuliffe and a two-out pop double into the left-field corner by Bob Montgomery.

Kaline flied out twice and grounded out in his other three trips to the plate. He has 14 games left to become the 12th player in baseball history to collect 3,000 hits.

Coleman allowed only five hits, but walked four and gave way to relief ace John Hiller after seven innings. Hiller, who has won 17 games, went on to record his 12th save.

The Red Sox, losing for the 17th time in the last 23 games had two runners on base in only one inning other than the first and fourth. With one out in the second, Coleman walked two batters in a row, but then easily retired the next two to end the threat.

Detroit gave Hiller an added cushion in the ninth with another run on singles by Marvin Lane, Rodriguez and Ron Le Flore.

Southpaw Bill Lee, 16-13, went the distance for the Red Sox giving up 11 hits. He struck out four and walked one.

O's, Palmer shutout Yanks

NEW YORK |UPI| — Paul Blair hit a three-run homer to back the seven-hit pitching of Jim Palmer and carry the Baltimore Orioles to a 4-0 victory over the New York Yankees Tuesday night, cutting their lead over the second-place Orioles in the American League East to 1½ games.

Palmer, the Al Cy young award winner a year ago, who missed two months of this season with an elbow injury, did not allow a runner past first base until two out in the ninth in one of his most effective performances this year as he raised his record to 7-12.

The victory, Baltimore's 16th in 21 games since August 29, was played under protest by the Yankees from the sixth inning on, when Baltimore's Boog Powell dropped a Yankee bunt and turned it into a double play. The game was scoreless at the time and Jim Mason led off the Yankees' sixth with a single. Sandy Alomar popped up a bunt attempt which Powell, the first baseman, caught and then dropped. First base umpire Dave Phillips at first ruled that Powell intentionally dropped the ball, but then seemed to change the call. Alomar stopped running to first, but Mason suddenly darted for second and was tagged out.

Murder in the First Degree

"It will be difficult to attract more top gymnasts," said men's gymnastics coach Tom Dunn. Difficult is an understatement. Impossible is more the exact case.

I'll bet you all thought that this was a dead issue. Who still remembers about all the ruckus that went on last year related to the Gymnastics team and the hiring of a coach after this season? Let me refresh all of those whose memories were too burnt out by the summer.

During the middle of last spring's semester a decision came down through the ranks of the Athletic Department hierarchy stating that a position for a full-time men's gymnastics coach would not be available after this semester. When the decision came through it was met with obvious descord by team members and by many members of the student body. Many of you that are reading this right now were probably represented in the 12,000 petition signatures that were gathered by members of a quickly formed gymnastics support committee. The petition signatures were presented to Dean of the School of Physical Education David Bicshoff, Chancellor Randolph Bromery, and President of the University system Robert Wood. A presentation was also made at a meeting of the Athletic Council and the council voted unanimously to have the decision be reviewed.

That was all during last semester. Here we are now back after all our happy summers to the stark reality of the situation. The men's gymnastics team is being killed. A team that reached national prominence last year and the year before is now a team that Athletic Director Frank McInerny says will be, "leveled off to a New England level in line with the level of all our other varsity sports." What sports fan at this university wants to see that happen? Wouldn't we all like to see a team of ours, no matter what sport, compete on the national level? The reason for the murder, and that is what I deem it, a murder, is that there is a lack of funds for a position of a full-time men's gymnastics coach. I can see the logic. Let's cut out a regular season sport before we cut off season sports. Let's have some sports have an excess of funds or a major amount of the money before other sports can have any. As the saying goes, "this isn't any way to run an airline," or is it any way to run a major university Athletic Department.

"The only thing that would save the program now will be a good coach", is what Tom Dunn told me last week. "The Athletic Department wants a good program within the financial situation," is something else that he related to me. That is like saying that the Athletic Department would like a good program without trying. Because if they do not do more than they have said that they will, then I believe that they are not trying. And guess what? It is only the beginning. All "minor" sports can consider themselves next in line for the major cuts. Soccer is already feeling the pull as they are pushing for a position for a coach for their own squad. The crew is another story in itself. They are considered a club level team. A fine club they are as they won the national championship of crew last year in taking the Dad Vail championship.

What can be done? I am not the person with the answers. Maybe Frank McInerny has them. He is the university's Athletic Director and a man very involved in the decision. He did not have any answers to much of anything when I spoke with him earlier this week.

All you gym fans and gym supporters must remember Gene Whelan, UMass' best gymnast for the past few years and a potential World Games and 1976 Olympics candidate? Well he is gone now. The situation at hand warranted his transferring to Penn State during the summer. How does everyone feel about a charge of first degree murder?

In hiring dispute

Ariel: 'I am being persecuted.'

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
Staff Reporter

Dr. Gideon Ariel, whose Faculty appointment is being contested, calls the publication of the challenges to his position, "a plot."

"I think your paper is being used", he said. "And you don't have to be too smart to see the plot that's going on here. I am being persecuted."

A personal friend of Ariel's, William Farrell, president of Universal Rosilite in New York, calls it "a plot by some jealous professors."

In a letter Farrell wrote to the Collegian he concluded: "Perhaps those crying out about wrongdoings were perhaps pawns for one or two people who choose to attack rather than praise Dr. Ariel for his great success in this field. Perhaps his credentials have grown too rapidly and too impressivly for some!"

In a letter to Dr. Gluckstern of June 5 which Dr. Ariel submitted to the Collegian staff, Ariel rebuts Dr. Ricci's challenges to his appointment. "These people have tried "he said" and are continuing in attempts to destroy my achievements from both the University point of view and from outside the University. I can only ask "Why?" My conclusion is : persecution for achieving."

Dr. Ariel also accuses Dr. Ricci of conspiring to withold the completion of his doctorate unless Ariel included Dr. Plagenhoof in CBA., a company in which Ariel has a 50 per cent interest.

"Dr. Ricci told me that if I did not relinquish ownership to Dr. S. Plagenhoof that he (Dr. Ricci) would not allow me to have the oral examination for my Ph.D degree and therefore would not graduate. Since I refused, my oral exam was cancelled until his instructions were followed," Ariel said.

Dr. Ricci calls Ariel's accusations "the boldest most vicious lie that I have ever heard in my life."

Ariel also accuses Ricci of anti-semitic remarks. He bases this on a remark that he claims Ricci made in a conference room in Boyden. "He told me, 'you damn Jews are all alike.' Dr. Ricci hit my Achilles tendon and immediately put a copy of his publications in his mailbox with 'is that a double publication? Your anti-semitic remarks will not stop this publication' written across the tops." Dr. Ariel denies writing the second anti-semitic note to Ricci.

According to Ricci, "I was never involved in any discussions about CBA with Plagenhoef or Ariel since it was none of my business. These are lies of a very serious nature."

In an interview with the Collegian, Ariel contends he never endorsed Universal Centurian. "I wrote an article as a consultant for them. But they changed the wording to Universal. Ariel says he called both the New York and Fresno, California offices. He states he also wrote to Cliff Coker, President of Universal and a personal friend but he is not sure if he has a copy of the letter.

Although Ariel designed the principle for the Universal Centurian he never patented it. And although the company made three million dollars profits from the machine he "never made a penny. Money didn't play a role here."

Chancellor Bromery: UMass goals must be defined

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, yesterday urged the entire campus community to join together in defining future goals of UMass.

"It is clear that we are at the end of our growth era and we must set about defining our institutional goals in the context of the present and future societal needs and expectations," stated Bromery in his opening address to members of the four campus governance units.

The Distringuished Teacher And Teaching Associates Awards were also made at this joint session of the Faculty Senate, Student Senate And Professional Association (PAUMA).

Bromery criticized the State Legislatures preamble to this year's budget, which forces teachers to adhere to a minimum number of contact hours per week.

"It is extremely difficult to determine their precise motivation in passing such a law... the message sent by the legislature is painfully clear. They don't hear us, understand us, or believe us," he said.

The State Legislature also passed a law prohibiting the payment of merit raises to the faculty of all public higher educational institutions in the Commonwealth.

Reacting to this law Bromery said, "In my opinion these pieces of legislation clearly discriminate and punish a particular segment of the public higher education community.

See editorial, page 9

Calling for calm, rational and concerned leadership, Bromery urged that "we use our heads, not lose them in this emergency."

He also called for an examination of our undergraduate and graduate curricula, saying that "we need to modify and update our present curriculum and encourage exploration of new approaches."

Richard Savini, head of the undergraduate senate, called for "rational thinking in the process of defining the campus' goals for the future."

"I personally don't like the idea of the Legislature coming down on us," Savini said after hearing Bromery's speech.

William C. Venman, a UMass administrator and heaf of PAUMA said Bromery has to "involve the governance units" in setting priorities and carry the campus message to the state.

"I interpret what the Legislature did as being a very substantial indication that we better put our house in order or we'll have it put in order for us," Venman said.

At the awards ceremony, three professors and three teaching assistants were given letters of commendation and $1,000 checks from the AMOCO Foundation.

Robert Gluckstern, Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs presented the teaching awards to R. Mason Bunker, education; Pamela Edwards, English; and David Klingener, zoology.

The teaching associate awards were presented to William Clark, plant soil sciences; Gary Evans, psychology and Jagadish Pai, food science and nutrition.

R. Mason Bunker, who received his doctorate at the University of Illinois, has been at UMass since 1970. Founder and Co-Director of the Integrated Day Program, he is also director of master of education and teacher preparation.

Anglo-Irish Drama is Pamela Edwards' field of specialization. Although she taught part time in the UMass English Dept. for seven years she only became eligible for this award in 1972 when she began teaching full time. She received her B. A. from UMass in 1961 and her M. A. from Smith College in 1963.

Coming to UMass in 1964, David Klingener has worked closely "with garter snakes, rodents, bats and students." He has a PhD from University of Michigan and is an editor of the "Journal of Mammalogy". He is also a research assistant for the Mammalogy Department of the American Museum of Natural History.

As a teaching assistant William Clark has been described as "enthusiastic, creative and devoted to spending a great deal of time outside of classes working with students." Having just completed his M. A. at UMass, he is now teaching at Essex Agricultural High School in Hathorne.

UMass's first environmental psychologist, Gary Evans also received the award. He has worked at the UMass Institute for Man and Environment, and last year taught at the Career Opportunities Program in Brooklyn, N. Y. When he completes his PhD this semester he will teach at the University of California at Irvine.

Born and educated in Bombay, Jagadish Pai, is the third recipient of the Distinguished Teaching Associate award. At UMass since 1971, he has been doing research in lipid chemistry for his doctorate. He received the supreme compliment when his students said "he listens intently to his students".

The meeting was followed by a reception in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Ford outlines foreign policy

Compiled from Wires

UNITED NATIONS — President Ford pledged yesterday that the United States will do its best to help fill the word's needs for food, and challenged the Arab countries to cooperate on answering the demands for oil.

It was Ford's first major foreign policy address of his 5½-week-old presidency, and he inserted into his prepared speech a paragraph intended to assure the nation, the world and Kissinger that his hole will remain unchanged in the new administration.

In the added sentences, written out in long-hand by Ford minutes before his speech, the President declared that Kissinger "has my full support and the unquestioned backing of the American people" both as secretary of state and as head of the White House national security system.

In the address to warmly applauding delegates to the 29th session of the U. N. General Assembly, Ford said the twin crises of food and energy now "demonstrate the extent of our interdependence."

"The United States recognizes the special responsibility we bear as the world's largest producer of food ... The United States will not only maintain the amount it spends for food shipments to nations in need, but it will increase this amount," he said.

"Now is the time for the oil producers to define their conception of a global policy on energy to meet the growing need - and to do this without imposing unacceptable burdens on the international monetary and trade system."

Black artist's works showing in Herter

By GINA STARODOJ
Below The Salt Staff

A retrospective of the works of the black artist Bob Thompson is currently on view at the Herter Hall gallery. His work is an example of how artists have influenced each other through the ages. What Thompson actually does is to improvise on works of earlier artists. This technique has been used throughout the history of art. Rembrandt, Michaelangelo, and Picasso have used Greek Sculptures in their works. The Greeks in turn have followed Egyptian formulas.

Thompson draws his color inspiration from Gaugan and Matisse. His work is more concerned with shape and contour than realism. His figures are a prime example of this. He draws inspiration from Goya in creating the mysterious birdlike creatures that are seen in several of his paintings. His drawings show the same concern with contour, rather than visual accuracy. He employs the technique of combining dissimilar events such as the expulsion from the garden and the nativity.

Bob Thompson was born in Louisville, Ky. He studied at the Boston Museum School, received the Walter Gutman Foundation Grant, and the John Hay Whitney Fellowship. He has had numerous one-man and group exhibitions of his work.

"I am trying to show whats happening, what's going on...in my own private way"

His sources are many but the finished product is intimately Bob Thompson.

Thompson's use of sources is a time honored tradition in western art. He has endowded these inspirations with his intuitive ones and the product is intimately Bob Thompson.

"I want to paint, paint! Paint!
I am what is jokingly called an aesthetic junkie"

His death at age twenty-nine was a great loss to those that knew him and his art.

Nuke series kicks off

JOHN GOFMAN SPEECH
By STEVE TETREAULT

A two day nuclar power symposium was kicked off last night with a lecture at Mahar Auditorium by Dr. John Gofman, former Associate Director of the Lawrence Radiation Laboratory and co-author of the book Poisoned Power: The Case Against Nuclear Power PLants.

In his speech Dr. Goffman stated that, "Public discussion of nuclear power has been cavalier, ignorant, and apathetic, but its not their fault. A mass governmental and industrial conspiracy exists which withholds useful information and gives out false information."

Dr. Goffman presented several cases of the Atomic Energy Commission's lack of insight and forsight in dealing with nuclear power waste and potential radiation dangers.

The symposium continues today with films and workshops in the Campus Center and a lecture tonight by Dr. Howard Zinn, BU professor and anti-war critic.

Greek services now extend to non-Greeks

GREEK AFFAIRS
By TONY BATTISTA
Staff Reporter

The Greek Affairs Office on campus, though primarily geared to assist members of fraternities and sororities, has extended their services to cover "non-greeks" as well, according to Edward Bowe, who is in charge of the office.

"There are many people who are dissatisfied with dorm life," Bowe said, "and we're able to place them in fraternities or sororities as boarders."

He added that the office also was available to those who wished to join a fraternity or sorority but were unsure how to go about it, and to those who were undecided as to which house to join.

Greek Affairs provides advisory services to chapters on matters ranging from rushing and pledging to more complex financial problems. Recently the office sponsored a program which allowed students to discuss fraternity and sorority living with representatives from each of the various houses.

Last April, the office sponsored a "high school visitation weekend". Students who were planning to attend UMass. and expressed an interest in the greek area were invited to spend a weekend living in a fraternity or sorority. Many students who attended this program are now living in some of the houses.

According to Bowe, "Greek Affairs works from the smallest budget of all residential areas". He went on to say that while most residential areas are provided with a professional staff, he must get along with only the help of two graduate assistants.

Statistics show an increase of twenty per cent in fraternity sorority membership over the past year here. The National average has been seventeen per cent according to Bowe.

Affiliation with the greek area is nothing new with Bowe. As an undergraduate at UMass., he belonged to Beta Kappa Phi fraternity and was vice-president and rush chairman of the Inter-Fraternity Council. At the University of Nebraska where he received his masters degree, he was an advisor to the Inter-Fraternity Council as well as a house parent in a fraternity.

Future plans to Greek Affairs include increasing membership within the greek area and making the greeks a well-known entity on campus. The office also hopes to improve academic offerings to the greek area. One hope of Bowe is to see the office become more humanistic and service-oriented rather than administrative. In addition, he would like to see faculty members become more involved with the greek area.

Food stamps screening operation continues

The Food Stamps screening operation has begun its second week of determining the 8,000 students who may be eligible for the benefits.

John Fischer, head of the program here emphasized that food stamps are a person's legal right. The money for the stamps is provided by the U.S. Department of Agriculture through taxes.

Also assisting in the operation of the program are the office of Commuter Affairs, the Student Organizing Project, and the Commuter Assembly. Fischer added that the Student Senate has also been a great help, providing money for applications and running them off on their press.

Fischer stressed that people are only being screened by the program and that the foodstamps will arrive after approval from the Welfare Office.

"If anyone has a little extra time," Fischer said, "we would appreciate any and all help."

Jury complete on Lovejoy

By DAVID GREENSLIT
Staff Reporter

GREENFIELD — The pace of nuclear objector Sam Lovejoy's trial picked up yesterday as the jury was finally impanelled then bussed to view the Montague Plains, site of Northeast Utilities' proposed nuclear power plant.

The final two jurors were chosen from a new 15 person jury pool summoned off the streets of Franklin County this morning by Sheriff Chester Martin and his deputies.

Yesterday's new group of prospective jurors, summoned after Tuesday's venir was exhausted, bore little resemblance to the original group, in which there was only one black and one young person. Again yesterday there was only one black, but there were several young persons.

As he had done the day before, Associate Justice Kent B. Smith questioned each juror individually and at length to ensure impartiality.

Sandford W. Hager Jr., of Colrain, and James H. O'Neal of Greenfield were selected as the final two jurors to hear the Lovejoy case. O'Neal is the only black serving on the jury.

Shortly after the nine women and five men of the jury were sworn in, they boarded a huge, yellow, exhaust-belching commercial bus for the trip to the Montague Plains.

There, the jurors, press, and the public attending the trial viewed the scene of Lovejoy's alleged crime. He is charged with willful and malicious destruction of personal property in the Feb. 22 toppling of Northeast Utilities' meteorological tower, first step in the company's proposed $1.52 billion nuclear power plant.

On the site, NU's replacement tower dwarfed everything for miles around. Part of the original tower was still lying in the scrub vegetation to the north.

Asst. D.A. John Murphy called the jurors' attention to the 500 foot structure's two strobe lights, weather recording equipment, and three sets of cables serving as guy wires for support. The tower toppled after the turnbuckles were loosened on one of the sets of cables.

Small claims advisory aids in rip-offs

By HUGH OWEN
Staff Reporter

Students or others who have complaints about businesses can take their cases to small claims court with the aid of free counselling offered by the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Group's (WMPIRG) Small Calims Court Citizen Advisory Service (SCCCAS).

The SCCCAS, according to co-ordinator Rosey Roback, will give advice on how preparing, strengthening, and presenting a case in small claims court.

The counselling is limited Roback added, only to advice in preparing the case for court. There is no carry-over of counselling into court.

Roback, along with Alan Lasher, last year's co-ordinator, revised and simplified a booklet explaining the procedures involved in the preparation and presentation of a case in small claims court.

"We simplified the booklet," Roback said, "so that it would be easier for people to present a strong case in court. The booklet is designed for low income people who cannot afford a lawyer.

"These people," Roback continued, "are the ones who are getting screwed by the corporations who can afford lawyers."

Along with offering counselling the SCCCAS is also involved in docket research investigating the effectiveness of small claims courts and the persons working in them.

This research, once collected, will be used to propose reforms WMPIRG believes necessary in the small claims court system. These reforms will be included in a bill WMPIRG plans to introduce to the Massachusetts legislature Dec. 15.

The SCCCAS presently has four counsellors, and Roback is trying to solicit four to six more students through the legal studies program and Outreach.

Counsellors do not necessarily have to come from these programs, Roback said.

"We will interview anyone who wishes to be a counsellor," Roback said, "primarily in the interest of finding someone who we feel is willing to devote a lot of time to counselling as well as research."

Credit is available to students working on research.

Though Ms. Roback views last year's counselling as very successful, there are no records confirming this.

"One of the changes we have made this year," said Ms. Roback, "is to keep files on every case we handle. This way we can see how effective we are, and also have references for new cases."

Another of the changes the SCCCAS has made this year is to move from a publicity-orientated organization to one which is more concerned with docket research.

The WMPIRG office is located on the second floor of the Student Union.

Grad Senate convenes

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

The Graduate Student Senate (GSS) opened the doors of its first meeting, held Monday night in the Campus Center, to all old and new senators as well as other interested graduate students.

However, the fact that many graduate departments have not yet selected their GSS representatives accounted for the unusually sparse turnout.

Motions passed by the Senate included the approval of all actions taken by the Executive Council over the summer as well as passage of the amended 1975 Fiscal Year budget.

But the Senate delayed endorsement of the Legal Services Office (LSO) funds because of the accidental exclusion of the constitution from the agenda.

The combined summer efforts of the executive committees of the Undergraduate and Graduate Senates resulted in agreement on a new constitution which details the procedures for the joint use of the LSO by both undergraduate and graduate students. This constitution has not yet been brought before the full body of either Senate for approval.

The Senate also informed members that over the summer the Board of Trustees approved the inclusion of a graduate student delegate as a non-voting member of that Board. This position will give the delegate an opportunity to represent the general 5600 graduate student constituency as well as express their more specific needs and concerns to the Board.

Graduate Senate President Jim Lindsey expressed positive hopes of "trying to open the whole (Graduate Senate) process up this year by encouraging more graduate students to become involved." Declared Lindsey, "The ones who are already involved will have to work. But there are supposed to be 5600 graduate students on this campus, and I'm looking for them!"

University of Massachusetts President Robert Wood will address the next GSS meeting to be held Monday, September 30, 1974, 6:30 PM. Check the Collegian for more details or contact the GSS office at 5-0970 or 5-2896, C.C., Room 919.

Board shifts campus P.O.

By DONNA A. DIODATI
Staff Reporter

Moving the campus post office to the main floor of the Student Union is the result of a Student Union Board of Governors' action to make room for a Campus Center laundry, according to Retail Services Manager Bernard F. Wilkes, Jr.

"The (former) post office is the ideal spot for a laundry. It has enough electrical power and adequate ventilation for dryers," he said.

The laundry from the Campus Center (uniforms, hotel linen, etc.) is currently done off campus, Wilkes said.

Chairperson Michael Curran of the 25-member Board of Governors confirmed Wilkes' reason for the move.

The new post office location (in the former bus ticket office) was chosen because of its inexpensive renovation (it already had service windows) and its "accessibility to students," Wilkes said.

When asked about traffic congestion in the corridor between the check cashing counter and the post office, Wilkes said that the post office loaction is temporary, and that rope stanchions are to be installed to keep a clear walkway.

Smaller than its predecessor, the new post office creates what senior clerk Mary-Jane Lannon calls an "impossible situation." She cites inadequate package storing room and the lack of a telephone.

Another postal worker (who wished not to be identified) said that there is only one exit from the room, thus creating a fire hazard. The post office is accessible only through the Sweet Shop.

According to Wilkes, the next location of the post office is uncertain at this point. He said that the move should occur by next semester and may be "tied in" with a proposed bank on campus.

He added that the automatic post office in the Campus Center has been a mechanical failure and will be closed by January.

Calling it a "disservice to students," Wilkes said he's recieved many complaints about it.

The area it now occupies will become the main corridor between the Student Union and the Campus Center by the end of the semester, he said.

Investigation of airline ordered

Ford rejects Pan Am's request for subsidy

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday refused Pan American World Airways' plea for a multi-million-dollar subsidy and the Civil Aeronautics Board, backing Ford, ordered an investigation of Pan Am's financial and managerial practices.

Ford said the subsidy would be unfair to taxpayers.

The CAB said Pan American has not established that it has an "immediate and critical need for subsidy," and also rejected its request for public funds.

The board also turned down, on the grounds of insufficient technical information, a request by Trans World Airlines for a subsidy of up to $80 million a year to compensate for the soaring prices of jet fuel.

Pan Am, the nation's largest overseas air line, had asked for an emergency $10 million-a-month subsidy to head off an imminent financial crisis trigered by the oil price increases.

The CAB said it was not convinced that Pan American had taken "all the belt-tightening measures" necessary to ease its financial crisis.

"The circumstances surrounding Pan Am's difficulties would seem to create an obligation to scrutinize all aspects of the airline's world services," the CAB said, ordering an investigation of Pan Am's financial, operational and managerial practices. No date for a hearing was set.

The White House briefly announced Ford's refusal and Transportation Secretary Claude S. Brinegar later said at a news briefing: "After a full review of the situation, President Ford has concluded that it is not now fair to the nation's taxpayers to ask them to support our U.S. international flag air lines with direct cash subsidy payments."

While Ford recognized Pan Am's serious financial difficulties, Brinegar said, the administration did not think "simply putting some money on the table" would solve the problem.

Brinegar suggested several steps aimed at keeping Pan Am flying its international routes, including:

—A campaign to persuade Americans to make overseas flights on U.S. airlines.

—Fare hikes which would "more closely reflect" rising airline costs.

—Discussions of possible air route mergers with other airlines.

Wilson orders new elections in attempt to obtain mandate

LONDON [UPI] — Prime Minister Harold Wilson yesterday ordered a new parliamentary general election Oct. 10 to seek a new five-year mandate to deal with what he called Britain's gravest crisis since World War II.

"The economic crisis is the gravest since the war," Wilson said in a television and radio broadcast address to the nation. "We have to meet this in a mood of determination, not of pessimism or writing Britain down."

It will be the second time Britain has voted this year — "something few people would want to see," Wilson said.

But he said it was made "inevitable" by the political deadlock resulting from the last general election Feb. 28.

The deadlock has tied Wilson's hands for the past six months. He said a new five-year mandate is essential to give his government powers to fight the crisis.

"The fight must be led by a government determined to conquer inflation and utterly firm in its resolve to solve these problems," he said.

Conservative party leader Edward Heath said "I welcome this announcement unreservedly. It will enable the British people to elect a government with the authority and a majority that will enable it to govern with the support of the people."

Liberal party leader Jeremy Thorpe said he hoped the campaign would be fought "on issues rather then personalities."

Ending weeks of speculation, Wilson said in an announcement from his No. 10 Downing St. office that Queen Elizabeth has "graciously signified" she will comply with his request to dissolve the present parliament. She will do so by proclamation tomorrow.

The announcement said the nation will vote Oct. 10 — little more than seven months after the last election Feb. 28. It said the new parliament will meet Oct. 2? to be sworn in and to elect a speaker and that the Queen will open it officially Oct. 29.

Guerrillas surrender to Palestinians

DAMASCUS [UPI] — Four Japanese gunmen who wandered the skies of the Middle East for 18 hours after ending their five-day siege of the French embassy in Holland landed yesterday in this Syrian capital and emerged from their borrowed Air France jet to be greeted by Palestinian guerrillas.

Shortly after the gunmen disembarked, the Japanese Red Army issued a statement calling their five-day seizure of the French embassy in the Hague that ended Tuesday a blow to imperialism.

Pim Sierks, the Dutch captain of the airliner's volunteer three-man crew, said the four Japanese turned over their two remaining pistols and their $300,000 in ransom money to him before they disembarked.

"The Japanese were polite to us," Sierks said.

The gunmen had given up their submachine guns and grenades in the Hague but had kept two pistols. Dutch officials said this was so they could "commit suicide if necessary."

Dutch Foreign Minister Max van Der Stoel told a news conference, "The terrorists were so mellowed by today that Captain Sierks talked them into surrendering their pistols and the ransom money to facilitate permission to land in Damascus.

Jailed draft evaders freed; war resisters abroad defiant

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Bureau of Prisons announced yesterday it has freed all imprisoned draft evaders eligible for amnesty except one man who refuses to leave without a full pardon.

Meanwhile, the Pentagon reported that military officials had received only 86 phone calls and one letter from deserters interested in amnesty by yesterday morning. Thousands of war resisters living abroad continued to ignore President Ford's conditonal amnesty offer.

Although the freed civilian prisoners had technically only a 30-day furlough to apply for amnesty, one government source said "I doubt that any will ever go back to prison again."

Moving quickly to honor Ford's request that imprisoned draft evaders be given priority treatment, the bureau said it had furloughed 83 of the 96 persons still in jail on such charges by the end of business Tuesday. It ruled another 12 ineligible because they had been sentenced on other charges in addition to draft evasion.

That left Steven L. Bexich of Chicago, who refuses to leave the federal reformatory at El Reno, Okla., under the conditional amnesty terms Ford offered Monday. Bezich is 13 months into a three-year draft evasion sentence.

"I think his feelings coincide with some of the boys up in Canada," said El Reno reformatory official Mark Thompson. "They want a full pardon. That's the only thing he says he'll accept."

Ford offered the estimated 28,000 Vietnam draft evaders and military deserters freedom from prosecution in return for up to two years of public service work and a pledge of allegiance to the United States.

Black-white fights occur in Boston

BOSTON [UPI] — The first physical clashes between black and white students-two minor fist fights and a "hair pulling incident"-yesterday marred the fifth day of court ordered school integration in Boston.

Police also reported several young people wearing white sheets with the intiials "KKK" on them near the Gavin school.

But there were no other reports of violence, and 10 buses carried mostly black students to their homes from South Boston High School and the Hart Dean annex to their neighborhood homes without incident. Police lined the school corridors as the youths went home for the day. The buses were guarded by motorcycle police, with a helicopter hovering ovhead.

Police said four white youngsters received minor injuries in one of the two fist fights when blacks and whites tangled at the Washington Irving Junior High School in Roslindale. They were taken home by their parents and did not require hospital treatment.

Forty black children walded out of Washington Irving after the incident, which was broken up before police arrived.

A "small fight" was reported near Woodrow Wilson Junior High School in Dorchester. No arrests or injuries were reported.

Officials also reported what they described as a "hair-pulling" incident between a white girl and two black male teen-agers on the second floor of Hyde Park High School.

Court rules fireman's exam invalid

BOSTON [AP] — The U.S. Court of Appeals yesterday unamimously upheld a lower court ruling that the Massachusetts civil service fire fighter's exam is invalid, and that blacks and Spanish-surnamed Americans must be given preference when fire fighters are hired.

Federal District Court Judge Frank H. Freedman made the original ruling, which applied to all Massachusetts communities subject to civil service which have a minority population of at least one per cent.

The minority preference remains in force at each local fire department until it attains a percentage of minority fire fighters approximately equal to that in the community, the court ruled.

Judge Levin H. Campbell, speaking for the appeals court, said the preference eliminates "the lingering effects of previous practices that bear more heavily than warranted on minorities."

He was a recipient of the Spingarn Medal and Orson Wells staged a Broadway production of "Native Son".

Ted Ward is the author of "Our Lan", which played on Broadway and enjoyed a very receptive appearance here at the University of Mass. He is attempting to have his biography ready by the Spring of 1975. P-10 political seminar

A number of UMass students will be at the front of the political battlelines this Fall, hustling votes for their favorite candidates in the November 5th election-and earning 3 academic credits for their experience.

They are enrolled in the Political Campaigns Seminar now being offered for its third semester by Project Ten, the university's experimental college located in Southwest.

Seminar instructor Kenneth Mosakowski notes that "the political choices are very diverse this semester because of the wide variety of candidates running in the general election." Mosakowski, himself a veteran of a dozen campaigns, expects that students signing up this semester will want to work not only in statewide races like the Sargent-Kukakis fight for governor or the Quinlan-Guzzi battle for secretary of state, but also in local campaigns for offices like state senator or state representative. Already, he says, students supporting the re-election of State Senator John Olver (D-Amherst) and others favoring Olver's opponent Gerald McCarthy (Ind.-Leyden) have indicated an interest in joining the Seminar.

The first Seminar session, today at 8:30 p.m. in Classroom I of Pierpont Hall, will feature recruitment of workers for Democratic candidates. The Republicans will have their turn next week.

There are no pre-requisites for joining the Seminar, cautions Mosakowski, "except a strong stomach and a firm commitment by each individual to work through practical politics to change what is wrong with out Government. We won't change anything significantly until we elect decent public officials to represent us."

"And," he adds, "this is a nuts-and-bolts type of course which guarantees a heavy dose of unpleasant political reality. Utopians and starry-eyed visionaries probably shouldn't sign up."

Those who would like to try some "unpleasant political reality" should contact the Project Ten academic office at 545-0871 immediately.

A TRILOGY OF UMASS MADNESS

The distance disease

By BARBARA HOFFMAN

No doubt you've recognized the symptoms. That painfully measured tread, the formidably developed calves, and the glint in the eyes that appears when any moving vehicle is sighted, then dulls when it moves on. The dining commons is filled with those similarly afflicted, vacantly toying with mildewed string beans and the long cold morsels of cube steak, not yet ready to surrender their trays and set upon the rugged trek homeward.

These are the Hill People, the victims of Collis Achyrectus. Their common denominator: pain, increasing with the clination of slope and the frequency of climb.

Orchard Hill is not the only breeding ground for the disease. The Upper Central region, in conjunction with the OH factor, boosts the number of mangled into the several thousands. Most suffer from "shin splints:" hairline fractures that run from the knee to the ankle. These are characterized by a tingly feeling in the bone (some complain of "relentless termites eating away at the marrow") and may lead to prolonged bouts of procrastination whenever foot use is required.

Surprisingly, many Hill people resist treatment. Recommended moves to the Southwest or Northeast regions are either rejected or ignored by the sufferers who, lured by a false sense of greatness at the pinnacle, remain to climb. Of these, many extol the "rush" that accompanies biking or running down the mountain, oblivious momentarily to the fact that there is always an Up.

Until recently, hordes of chronic cases sought relief in the rainbow-colored OH buses, taking them at every opportunity. This form of relief was cheap, fairly easy to obtain, somewhat habit-forming, and ultimately satisfying as a substitute for Up. As a result of the recent and official crackdown, however, many sufferers have been experiencing severe withdrawal pains as the OH becomes increasingly harder to find. Addicts have been discovered in various bus shelters, dazed and often incoherent, many gesturing mutely at their watches and only occasionally breaking their comatose silence with the abrupt query, "Clockwise? Counter-clockwise??" Several had to be treated for cases ranging from cardiac arrest to asthma, presumably incurred while running after their disappearing supply.

Non-Mass mixup

By DIANE UNGER

"Mastic Shirley!" With that cry a fork crashes to its plate in the dining commons. A young girl approaches the table excitedly jumping up and down, and crowds of eating students stare at her, wondering if this truly is Shirley with the breast cancer. "I heard you were a Mastic Shirley! I'm a Hewlett!!" The Long Island boy jumps up from his chair and without a word to his stunned Bostonian girlfriend embraces this animated stranger. Who are they??

They are nameless (OSCAR likes it that way) but there are more of them than you think. They are the two New Yorkers who requested on every vestige of paper UMass sent them to be roommates in Central. They are the same two who were split apart faster than an amoeba could have said "My toes itch." One was sent as unwillingly as Fay Wray to the summit of a Southwest tower, while the other was sentenced to a semester in Mary Lyon.

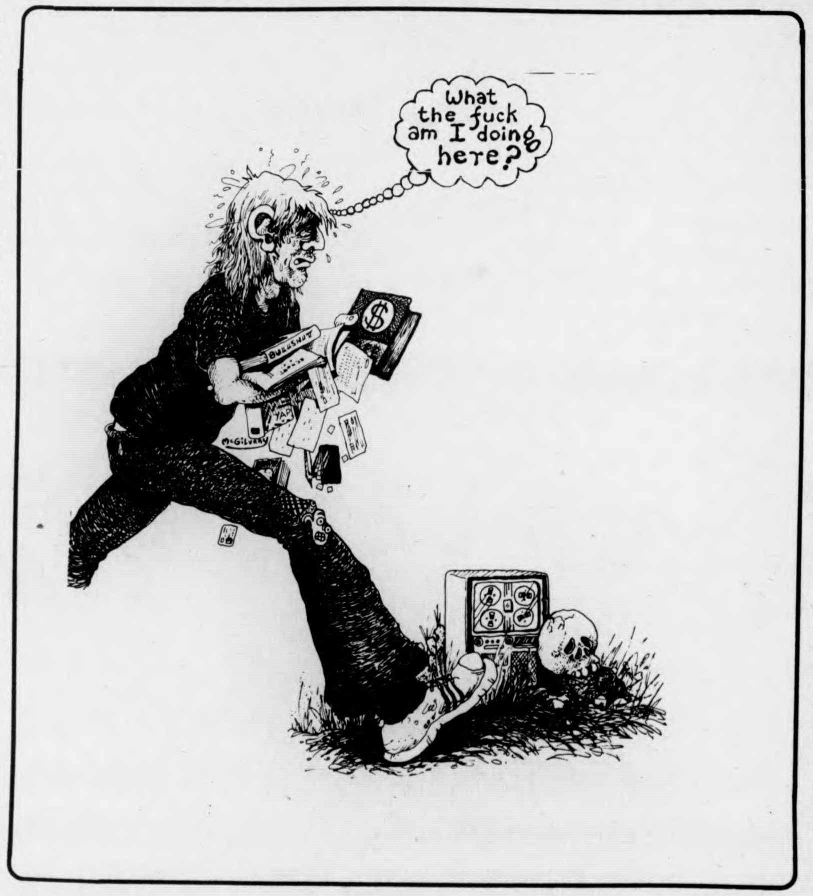
Or the Maryland girl who told her high school counselor she had been accepted into "Amherst". (She had considered "Amherst" the pet name of "University of Massachusetts.") The counselors, not having heard from UMass in ten years, and figuring it now to be a deceased university, without question congratulated that girl on being the first female to gain entrance within that Ivy League's Loins.

Why is UMass such an innocuous, almost forgotten institution outside of its borders? Could the green notices clipped on the applications of long ago have anything to do with it? The notices that shrugged their corners at out-of-staters, telling them not to bother, they probably wouldn't get accepted? But here they are, a humble quantity of noxious ones clinging together like so many strands of D.C. spaghetti, overcooked from the struggle to regain their courses, their roommates, and now drowning in the thick sauce of bureaucracy. Maybe it's their accents...

This doesn't deny that state residents have troubles, too. OSCAR's conscience never seems to weigh heavily when tormenting his own state. But if being an upperclassman is one stronghold for getting what you want, being a major in that course is another shield of armour, and the ultimate possession of the title "Massachusetts Resident" has never hurt. The out-of-stater is greeted by more "don't blame me's" than are found on the bumpers of Mass. cars. They are haunted by admittedly neurotic feelings that OSCAR's computer banks are looking at their requests and are responding, "Strange, 9246838, you don't look Massachusettish."

They are an elitist faction - a group that would rather die of wounds from a forty mile an hour Volvo in reverse than from the toxins of a Buffalo factory. What should it matter if they glean but six credits from a pre-registration of seventeen? So what if the sole means of communication between best friends are flag signals between JQA and Van Meter's belfry? Or that living here nine months of the year does not make them worthy of the title "resident" and the accompanying tuition cut?

Anyway, how can this year at UMass be bad? There's a new guy in B-I from Hollis, Queens.



What the fuck am I doing here?

A guide to the Course Description Guide

By DAVID FREID

This guide to the Course Description Guide is being produced at the beginning of the semester so it will be of some use the very next time you are confused.

Traditionally, if someone wants a good introductory course in business, he flips open the Course Description Guide to "G" for Business. For Business is General Business in your CDG. (Upperclassmen may wish to enroll in Specific Business - that's their business.) For a start, look at General Business and Finance 230 with its explanation: "To provide the student with an understanding of the nature of the personal, property, and liability risks faced by individuals, the role of the insurance mechanism as a device for dealing with these risks." That's a possibility, but one should compare it with a related course to avoid any mistake in course selection. General Business and Finance 233: To provide an indepth examination of the nature of the property and liability risks faced by individuals, the insurance coverages available for dealing with these risks. Obviously, 233 is the more interesting and challenging course, though it is taught on a different level and may be harder to handle. Perhaps this is not to your taste, however.

259-69: "The purpose of the course is to introduce students to the uses and limitations and shortcomings of various short-term and long-term forecasting techniques." Aaaaah!!! That's it! Just what you were after in the first place - the shortcomings of various FORECASTING techniques. It wasn't under "F" AFTER all.

This example shows how CDG works. THIS article is written to cover the areas in which it does not.

First of all, this year there are some additions to be made to the Course Description Guide. You will notice that the program number of certain courses has an "H" after it. This indicates that the course is an Honors course. This year, each department will offer courses with a "G" after it - indicating that it is a "Gut" course. The "Gut" Department wilp share Machmer Hall with the Honors Department, the "Gut" office occupying the basement somewhere. DO stop in and investigate some of the Guide to Gut Courses - they're easy to read. Don't miss "University Year For Inaction."

Finally, we now publish an answer to the call for honesty in Course Description focusing on some interesting French, Math, and Rhetoric courses:

TRADITIONAL CVIII - Grammar stressed heavily so the student can correctly express himself, especially in writing. AUDIO-LINGUAL METHOD - ALM 109, 064, 983 - Learning by listening and speaking the language as well as reading and writing. Heavy emphasis on learning to talk in French. SLAVEDRIVING L - Emphasis on passing language requirements as quickly as possible. Learning the language is optional. COLLOQUIAL IV - Learn to upeak everyday French just like they do in France. Emphasis on learning to swear... and insult.

Also, while flipping through course descriptions to answer problems in selecting a Rhetoric, Math majors will want to check out the course in RHETORICAL MATH. For people who hate Math, there is a course developed to satisfy Core E. Emphasis on making signs for the room deriding mathematical formulae and related postulates and theorems. Taught by a professor who hates math, the only requirement is a special dislike kor geometry. Give a copy of this handy guide to your friend today, and we'll mail you your Women's Lib slogans and quotes later. Get yours soon, you know how soon the University runs out of these.

Busing at UMass

[UPS] — Attendance at intellectually troubled UMie High School Extension inched upward today and there were only a few incidents of violence marring the sixth day of classes under a busing plan to inter-educate the five college area.

The busing plan, instituted during the summer, was created to achieve uniform educational standards between UMie, Hamper, Snot, Armhurts, and Mt. Holyjoke Colleges. The busing plan was created when it was learned that the average UMie suffered intellectually because of overcrowded classrooms, class that were to be arranged but never were, drugs, and free Hatch coffee.

In an attempt to alleviate this situation, officials at UMie, in cooperation with the Department of Sanitation drew up the plan despite the cries from the other four colleges claiming "Why degenerate the Valley?" To which B.J. retorted, "A preppy works from sun to sun, but a UMie's life is full of fun."

Official Valleywide attendance figures for yesterday were 72.6 per cent, the highest attendance rate since the busing began and the highest attendance rate that UMie has ever seen. Only one small incident of violence occurred at the Snot College bus stop when a UMie tripped over the Snotty's apron strings and accidently hit her in the head with her "Heck no, I dare not go" placard.

Things went smoothly at Armhurts College, where four ex-preppies decided that it might be fun to hang around with those "unfortunate middle-class children."

Curiousity, above all, made six Mt. Holyjoke women to board the bus. In their words, they wanted to find out "if the Bluewall really does exist."

And at Hamper College, where several Division III 3/4 students thought that they would be able to relate telephathically to the 28 story library at UMie, gleefully arrived trying to figure out what it all meant. They were last seen boarding the elevator to the top floor, but rumor has it that it was the only one that functioned properly and the students from Hamper didn't know how to cope.

Thousands of security guards were stationed at UMie's Campus Center when it was learned that a daytime ban of liquor sales would go into effect until the violence subsided. The violence, which occurred only when the ban went into effect, started when a UMie threw a Dining Commons pancake at a guard saying, "I can't go to Comparitive Neuro-Phenomonology sober."

The only other trouble at UMie occurred when a student was arrested for stoning a bus. The incident, however, turned out to be that the student was getting stoned on the bus. The student tried to explain to the arresting officer that, "Isn't that what higher education is all about?"

Rebuilding the university

The challenge to this university in the next few years is just as great as at anytime before. Whether we consider it simply as a swinging back of the pendulum or as a returning to reality, UMass must change because its students are changing. For too long, i.e. the last five years, we, as a university, have been accepting mediocrity in the classroom for what education is and what it can be. The students now entering the University have a different idea as to what the function of this university is to be for them.

We must understand that these people realize that the college degree as it has been for the last few years is pretty much worthless. With a college degree and fifteen cents the holder can buy a package of lifesavers. This situation has come about with a general lowering of academic standards. Today the average "cum" at UMass is near cum laude, which formerly was considered a great honor. This has come with the non-sense of "grade yourself courses", as if for all that we require of our professors and for all we pay them they are not more capable of evaluating their students. Added to this factor is the total absurdity of student-teacher evaluations holding significant weight in personal decisions, as if popularity has somehow taken the place of the traditional demands for high quality in teaching, research, and service to the University.

So the student of the future will make new damands of our University. They want something substantial for their time, effort, and money. They want courses which will teach them to think, courses which will allow them the privilege of being highly competent in our society. They want grades which will divide good students who think, work, and care from those who came to UMass to find themselves, to go through identity crises, and to live well because someone else is paying the bills. We deal here with people who are at a very crucial age in their development, but never let a student's personal, emotional and sexual development become the substance of his or her education. The University exists to train minds to function keenly.

> We must begin to recognize those who achieve excellence in education. We must recognize the students of this campus who excel in their work while they are here and also after they have left.

In large part the changes have to come in our attitudes towards education and its participants as well as in raising the standards in the classroom. We must begin to recognize those who achieve excellence in education. We must recognize the students of this campus who excel in their work while they are here and also after they have left. They are still our students and what they do and how they do it vitally effects us.

We must also recognize those professors and administrators who hold excellence in education as their dream. People like Dean Alfange, Oswald Tippo, Ernest Hofer, J. Paul Mather, John Lederle, Dean Field, and many others should be recognized for they make or have made this University great, each in their own way. The awards for distinguished teaching received by our professors should be published widely, not left unmentioned by the Collegian. If someone receives a national award, as Dr. Sidney Siggia did from the American Chemical Society for his distinguished work, this should be major news. On This campus there are many great professors, administrators and students. We must recognize them in a real way. This university has a very good reputation and I guess that what bothers me is that the average student does not know why.

Setting campus goals

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery's opening statement for the 1974 academic year made yesterday to campus government units carried a vital message to all UMass-Amherst.

Bromery said, in effect, that unless the campus starts demonstrating to the Commonwealth the services it provides, the state legislature will — and not gracefully.

Bromery said the state legislature sent a message to the campus last spring when it cut all merit raises from this year's operating budget and asked the UMass Trustees to force every professor to spend at least nine hours a week "in contact" with students.

"The message being sent is painfully clear," Bromery said. Legislators "don't hear us, understand us, or believe us."

Bromery said the legislature, and the state taxpayers, are beginning to demand accountability for the way their money is spent in higher education. And with good reason, we might add.

But the problem, in Bromery's view, has been the historic inability of higher education to find any adequate means of conveying the service it provides to the public.

Some large station institutions, like the academically respected University of Wisconsin, provide "extension services" like agricultural research and advice to farmers.

UMass has extensive "continuing education" commitments — courses open to the public — as well as several off-campus education programs like Outreach and University Year for Action.

But such programs are restricted in their impact and reach a narrow group of taxpayers. What about mass appeal programs, like a well-funded University television station that covers the entire state?

"The external forces are becoming more and more concerned about the type of professional training offered and the quality of educational service," Bromery said.

Without specifying the programs needed to get UMass' message to the state, Bromery laid out the first step in the process — clear concensus from the whole campus about just what we're doing here. He called for "conceptual clarity" and asked the graduate and undergraduate senates as well as employee groups to help him achieve that goal.

We urge the Chancellor to proceed forward as swiftly as possible. The role of a university in society is not written in black and white anywhere, and won't be. But it should be spoken as articulately as possible.

Dorms 99.6% full, late room requests refused

By MARTIN J. WATERS
Staff Reporter

Dormitories here are full. The housing office reports occupancy at 99.6 per cent and is refusing late requests for student room assignments.

J.Bruce Cochran, a staff assistant, says that the present occupancy percentage is the highest since fall 1970. Statistics show average occupancy during the last two years at 93.5 per cent.

Overcrowding is reportedly confined to about 12 double rooms each housing three students. Twenty-four students temporarily staying in the Campus Center Hotel are being settled in available spaces scattered across the campus. Elimination of the triples is also expected.

Cochran says the housing office worked for maximum dormitory occupancy this semester to help keep costs down. There was no increase in room rental charges this year, he said, despite the adverse economic situation.

Room occupancy rates have declined during the spring semester in past years, according to Cochran. A total of 170 spaces will be needed in January for students now living in Hamlin house in the Northeast area. Hamlin will be refurbished during the coming spring, Cochran added.

Luncheon leaves optimistic taste in Minutemen mouths

By DAVE EIBEL

The secod in a series of weekly UMass Minuteman football luncheons was held yesterday in the Newman Center with about forty people in attendance. Athletic Council chairman George Richardson was the master of ceremonies.

Gary Mika, the starting Umass split end, and defensive lineman Bill Cooke represented the players. Mika, who caught seven passes for 90 yards and one touchdown in last weekend's 17-13 loss to Villanova, refused to feel down after the loss.

"None of us have lost confidence in our ball club. As far as I'm concerned we have the best-balanced offense since I've been here."

Cooke admitted that the pass rush against Villanova was not up to expectations but promised that come this Saturday "it'll be better."

Offensive line coach Bill Maxwell who attended last Friday night's game at Boston University between Maine and BU said that both teams have good offenses. Maine according to Maxwell is a "little smaller and slower than Villanova, but they're a very well-schooled team."

Both Maxwell and Coach Dick MacPherson showed definite optimism looking forward to this Saturday's tilt at Orono. According to Maxwell, the Minutemen should win," if everything goes according to Hoyle."

Mika, when asked whether the team felt down after losing Fred Kelliher for at least six weeks did not seem pessimistic.

"If anything, we all feel better now than before. We feel that Mark Tripucka can do the job for us and furthermore, the fact that we played such a good game against Villanova has made us more confident than ever. All of us are thinking ten and one now."

Coach MacPherson closed the luncheon with the optimistic prediction no matter how good Maine was defensively, he "wouldn't surprised to see Gary Mika catch a touchdown pass against Maine on the second play of the game."

Lynn, McAuliffe, Cleveland lead Sox, 8-5 over Tigers

BOSTON [UPI] — Fred Lynn, who spent the season with Boston's Pawtucket Farm Club, clubbed four hits including a two-run fourth inning double Wednesday night to power the Red Sox to an 8-5 win over the Detroit Tigers.

Lynn was helped by Dick McAuliffe, who hit a two-run homer and Rick Burleson, who had three hits, scored a run and knocked in one. Al Kaline had three hits, including a two-run homer in the ninth, and now needs four hits in 13 games to reach the 3,000 mark.

Detroit got an unearned run off starter Juan Marichal in the first when Ron Leflore reached second on McAuliffe's throwing error and scored on a single by Ben Oglivie.

Boston got it back on a single to Yastrzemski, a walk, and Lynn's first hit.

After Detroit scored again in the second, Boston took the lead in the bottom of the inning on singles by Doug Griffin, Burleson, Tommy Harper and Cecil Cooper.

The teams traded runs in the third and Boston's Reggie Cleveland took over for the faltering Marichal and got out of the inning and pitched shutout ball the rest of the way.

But Boston broke it open in the fourth when Jim Rice singled, Dwight Evans walked and Lynn laced a double off the leftfield wall

McAuliffe hit his homer in the sixth with Lynn on base.

Cleveland won his 11th game while Lerrin Lagrow lost his 17th game against eight wins.

Bucs edge game closer

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Al Oliver cracked a pair of doubles and drove in two runs Wednesday night when the Pittsburgh Pirates defeated the St. Louis Cardinals 4-1 behind the six-hit pitching of Jim Rooker and moved to within one and a half games of the first place Cardinals in the National League East.

It was Rooker's 13th win against 11 losses and snapped a six-game Cardinal winning streak and a six-game Pirate losing streak.

St. Louis took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Ted Sizemore singled, moved to second on a walk and scored on Joe Torre's two-out single.

Cardinal shortshop Mike Tyson committed two errors in the fourth, paving the way for two Pittsburgh runs.

Rich Jessamy: Happy, confident

By CHRIST SMALLIS

Up until last Saturday, very few people around here probably knew anything about Rich Jessamy and Keith Lang. By Saturday afternoon, however, quite a few more were finding out. Despite the loss to Villanova, UMass did display a promising ground game, to the surprise of the fans and the delight of the coaching staff.

Rich is a native of Yonkers, New York, stands 5' 8¼" tall, tips in at 168 and wears #41. He had been approached by some Big Ten and Big Eight schools, but chose to come here for two reasons.

First, he wanted to get in a lot of playing time and thought that he had a good opportunity for that here. He also thought that the larger schools would be more inclined to have him warm the bench.

Secondly, he preferred not to leave the East Coast.

So, when UMass contacted him, he put two and two together and soon afterwards found himself in the Connecticut Valley.

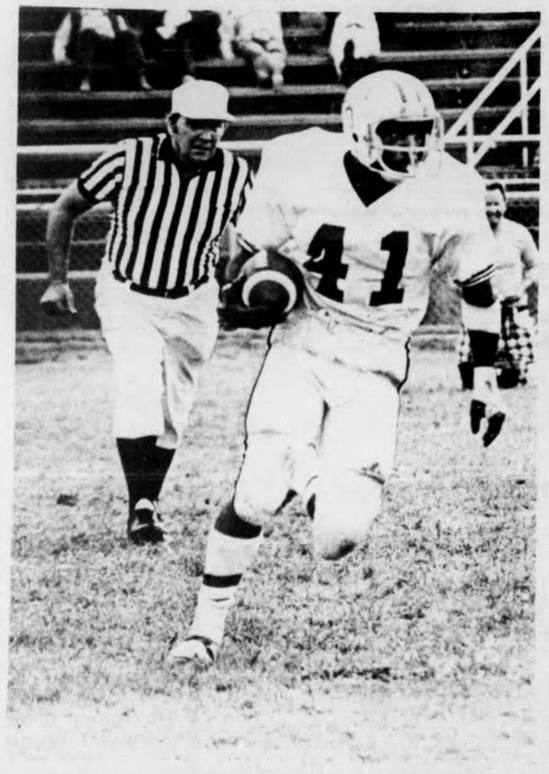
When asked if he had any regrets, he replied,"No, I'm happy, believe me. You know, it's not every day that you pick the right school. Some guys pick the wrong school and, like, blow it. But I think I made the right choice."

He played on the junior varsity team last year (his freshman year) and when asked what differences there were between JV and Varsity ball, he said he felt constant pressure on the JV team. It made him lose his confidence and feel uncomfortable.

"This year, playing on the Varsity, everything goes so smooth. I feel confident and don't get so tensed up."

I asked about strengths and weaknesses on the Minuteman team, He said that the offense was quite sound, but still needed some work on minor items of execution and follow through. He was quick to point out that the defense was very effective against the rush (Villanova gained only 105 yards on the ground all afternoon) but because the secondary lacked experience, they were bound to have problems in the early going.

When asked how well he and Keith Lang work together, Jessamy replied, "Yang, we call him Yang. Well, Keith and I work together. We played together on the freshman team and we were both brought up last year at the same time.



Rich Jessamy, who gained 76 yards last week against Villanova, will hope to better that total Saturday against the Black Bears of Maine.

Ali says stats support him

KINSHASA, Zaire [UPI] — Muhammad Ali sat on the huge sofa gazing out at the flow of the mighty Zaire River, resigned to the postponement of his title clash with George Foreman, relaxing from the grind of heavy training.

Muhammad was holding court for the Corporals Guard who had made it to Zaire from the huge press corps that had set out.

He had spent the night, he said, doing a statistical record of his and Foreman's ring record.

"You know, " he began. "George, he has 37 knockouts, but only five times did the man he whup get counted out. Me, I have 23 knockouts listed, but 13, yes 13 of my guys took the full count." The eyebrows shot up. "Therefore I hit harder, right?

Sonny Liston, count 10. Archie Moore, count 10. Henry Cooper, count 10. Brian London, count 10."

A British writer interrupted. "Brian took 100, I remember." Ali's smile was wide and you could see him filing that wisecrack away for future use.

"And another thing," Ali resumed. "Did you know that Foreman has fought only 124 rounds, while I've fought 366? Some say I can't go 15. Huh. I've gone 15 five times. George has never gone more than 10 and then only three times."

"It's just so plain I'm better than George, bigger than George, hit harder than George. Bet your salary on me, gentlemen."

Veer-y interesting

"Good morning, pupils, Today we have a most interesting discussion topic for our Collegiate Gridiron 100 course. We are going to explore the significance of the most exciting offensive system to hit the college football scene since the Wishbone formation-the Veer.

"The Veer is-uh, could the students in the back please hold off with the nutcracker drills until after class? Thank you. As I was saying, the Veer is the in-thing at campuses nowadays. Houston started the trend a couple years ago, and this year it is extremely popular. Even our Minutemen sometimes use it.

"Just what is the Veer? Why are so many big-time colleges switching to it and dumping the Wishbone? Do the pro's use this style? Do many injuries and deaths result from its use? Does the Veer pose a threat to our Democracy? The answers to these questions completely elude me.

"That's why I've called in a great lecturer-Dr. Fritz Blitz, professor of Pigskin Appreciation at Mayhem U. Professor..."

"Danke. I vill now answer all your questions. Yes-der fellow running vind sprints down der aisle...vhat do you want to know?"

"Professor, what do you think of the Veer?"

"Vell, der beer here ist not goot. Der beer back in der Motherland, of course, vas much, much better. Myself und der guys in der Reich used to go out und get--"

"No! No! I said Veer. V-E-E-R!"

"Oh, of course. Ja, der Veer ist ein goot formation. It confuses der defense. Und it ist very, very versatile--der quaterback can on any given play hand-off to one halfback, keep it himself, or pitch-out to der other back. It also sets up der passing attack vell. In short, it drives der other team nutty. More questions?"

"Doctor, just which teams use the Veer?"

"Oh, der are so many! Besides Houston, which has had it for some time, der ist LSU und der ist UCLA, vich just switched to it dis season...in New England der are many teams with it too...UMass has a version of der Veer, und so does Princeton...another Ivy Leaguer, Penn, has ein offense almost identical to Houston's twin-veer style.

"You must have ein gut head coach to teach der Veer. It takes discipline. Back during der War, der Reich had ein touch-football team with ein coach who could really instill discipline. I remember, one game our tackle missed a block, und Mein Fuehrer took out his pistol und.."

"Professor, what is the difference between the Veer and the Wishbone?

"Der primary difference ist dat you vill find der Veer on der football field vile you vill find der vishbone on the turkey."

"C'mon."

"Ho, ho! Jolly joke! Seriously, der Veer requires only two goot running backs vile der Vishbone needs three. Thus, der Veer doesn't require as much depth. Next question? Ja, der shaggy one uber der--"

"What do you think of New Purina Dog Chow?"

"Wunderbar! Tastes better dann die old Dog Chow!--Alright, one last query...yes, der young lady in shoulder pads kicking extra points--"

"Sir, who first developed the Veer?"

"Dat ist ein goot question. Many experts say it was Houston, but they are wrong! It ist strictly verboten for any of you to think that! It vas Mein Fuehrer who invented der Veer, as coach of the Third Reich thirty years ago!

"Ah, yes, I can vell remember myself as quarterback of that team, faking Himmler, der right halfback, into der line und then turning der corner with Goering, that big bully of a tight end, blocking ahead of me, und der left setback, Rommel, trailing behind, ready to receive my pitch...

A Question of Amnesty

Only the ones who can't make it come back.

by Frederic C. Weiss

"I joined the army, because I wanted to get away from home, and because I thought that it was the patriotic thing to do. However while I was stationed in Germany, I became aware that people really despised our presence, and thought 'if they don't want us here, damn, I don't want to be here either'. So I just split."

After short stays in Paris and Germany, Randy Richards settled in Sweden where United States deserters and draft dodgers are accepted and there has been a real attempt to absorb them into both the political and economic system. Now Randy lives in Uppsala, the oldest University town in Sweden, just forty miles north of Stockholm. Here he has found a sense of peace with his Swedish wife, Lyla Remsin and her four children from a previous marriage.

Last summer while traveling through Sweden I stayed with Randy, and we spoke a great deal about American foreign policy, and the question of amnesty.

"There are a lot of guys here who just couldn't stand the war. They split, and have found a home here. It is a beautiful country, and I consider this my home now. However some guys just can't hack it; they make no effort to learn the language, and really want to go home. Personally, amnesty to me would be a nice thing, but it isn't a necessity. I mean, it would be nice to be able to go back home to visit if I wanted to. But it isn't crucial or anything like that.

The Swedish lifestyle is an enigma in itself. Behind the facade of a very high standard of living, and the myth concerning Swedish sexuality, there are the tensions that are inherent within their government: a humanistic bureaucracy, but a bureaucracy just the same. In addition to the civic complexities are the simple factors of physical realities. Sweden is a land with great quanities of sun during the summer, but a bleak sense of darkness throughout the entire winter, the sun sets in Stockholm as early as three o'clock, after rising as late as nine.

Lyla Remsin, commenting on the government said, "in ways it is so efficient it is boring. The same party wins at the polls year after year, and they take care of your every need. A mother gets paid by the government for every child she has. Medical expenses are paid for, and the tensions of survival are minimal." However the government's heavy involvement in the daily life of the Swedes does take a toll; according to Lyla many Swedes feel that there is nothing that they can do because the government is doing everything. Often they lose their sense of initiative.

But for the deserter, Sweden can be a haven. Granted political asylum, a deserter is given a pension to cover basic living expenses and is given a place to live, while learning to speak Swedish and move into the Swedish system. There is no stigma attached to their act of desertion. In Sweden there is little open sympathy for the U.S.'s involvement in Vietnam, and it is most common to see numbers of people walking through Stockholm on a Saturday night, wearing a yellow star in support of Vietnamese National Liberation front.

Despite all the help from the Swedish government, not all Americans are making it. Some just can't accept Swedish as their new, "native" language. They feel lonely, and want to go "home". For these people, no doubt President Ford's amnesty proposal will be a welcome sign. However this in itself magnities the basic problem concerning Ford's plan: Only those who are not content, who couldn't adjust are coming home. By putting a conditional stipulation (alternative service, a new pledge of loyalty) on their return where there is not a stigma to stay away, will encourage only those who are most desperate to return.

Many Americans dodged the draft for reasons of both a personal and practical nature. Those with the courage, energy, and ability to establish a new life in Sweden (as well as Canada) are assets to the United States who should be encouraged to come home, and not simply tolerated should they want to.

With his new tamily, in his new land, Randy Richards has found a sense of peace.

Walking through an old Viking Battlefield in the mist of the midnight sun, Randy's feelings concerning the war, life in Sweden, and his childhood in the states came through in a modified southern drawl from his boyhood days in Florida. Yet while his mind seemed to drift back to life in the states, and he assured me that it made him feel good to talk about those times, he seemed totally at home within his new environment.

Walking up a man-made hill that served as a grave for a dead Viking King, Randy was relaxed and cheerful. Telling about his job in the factory, how he met Lyla, what he liked about Sweden, and things that he just didn't really understand came through with a calm and a smile that contradicted the image of the "harried deserter" running without a country. The conversation stayed loose as we trampled through the mud on the way back to his house. Quick grins, easy laughs, flashbacks to our common American childhoods. The only difference was that I could go home and he couldn't. Yet as we got back to his house and he answered the phone, speaking quietly in Swedish, I realized that the Southern drawl was gone.

Randy Richards is now a Swede. Richard Nixon is still an American. In rejecting amnesty unconditionally, President Nixon once said "Man must be responsible for their actions, let these deserters find a home in any nation that welcomes them". In his typical demagogery Nixon tried to divide us. When he spoke on amnesty his jaw was set, his eyes were fierce. Nixon was always best when attacking an enemy who couldn't respond.

I wasn't in Sweden that night that Nixon quit. But I'm sure that Randy Richards was listening to the speech. With an easy smile he responded to the Nixon tragedy, even if his southern drawl was gone.

Power Settles Everything

CAMUS WITH FORD ON NIXON PARDON

by John Bonsignore
Legal Studies Program

An informed source in the Paradiso section of Amsterdam disclosed today that President Ford had been in communication with Albert Camus, noted author and judge-penitent, at several critical points during the Nixon pardon decision.

Ford had apparently considered leaking information to the press prior to the decision to measure Congressional and popular reactions to a pardon but was dissuaded from that by Camus who said: "Somebody has to have the last work. Otherwise, every reason can be met with another one, and there would never be an end of it. Power settles everything." Ford was taken aback by this, considerting himself a simple man who used to play football, now makes toast, and is not a wielder of power. But Camus promptly reminded Ford of the current state of human affairs:

> We no longer say as in simple times: 'This is my opinion.' What are your objections? We have become lucid. For the dialogue, we have substituted the communique. 'This is the truth', we say, 'You can discuss it as much as you want; we aren't interested. But in a few years there'll be the police to show you I'm right.'

At this Ford is reported to have recoiled in horror. "That sounds like a dictatorship, and we don't have one of those. If pardon means all this, I'll just forget about the whole thing."

"On the contrary", Camus continued, "you should positively pardon Nixon: "If pimps and thieves were invariably sentenced, all decent people would get to thinking they themselves are constantly innocent — that's what must be avoided at all costs. Otherwise, everything would be just a joke." Ford, while visibly perplexed, thought that Camus might have a point; and after this meeting, he drafted his pardon message.

Several days after the message, when public sentiment was running 6-1 against the pardon, Ford went back to Camus, partly to complain and partly to see what else Camus might say. Camus apparently simply shrugged his shoulders observing with delphic clarity: "You've no more friends — you're nothing but accomplices; they are the whole human race."

Whatever the outcome of the Nixon pardon or its sequelae, it is reported that Ford has resolved never to speak with Albert Camus again.

What is a Parallax, Anyway?

By Eileen O'Connor

The Parallax View

Starring Warren Beatty, co-starring Hume Cronyn, William Daniels and Paula Prentiss

In astronomy, the parallax effect is the appearance of a stationery object moving in its relative position solely through the eyes of the observer. The understanding of this term is essential in order to grasp the impact of the new suspence thriller, The Parallax View, produced by Alan J. Pakula.

This R-rated movie is filled with intrigue and hypothesizing on the part of the audience. Basically, the plot entails the assasination of a political figure in a crowded restaurant, to which Warren Beatty, playing the role of a journalist named Joe Freyday, is a witness. After this explosive scene there is a time lapse of three years, but the transition is flowing and does not unbalance the audience. Joe Freyday is moved to investigation when a friend of his reveals to him her paranoia that someone is trying to kill her, and soon after she dies a mysterious death. We now have before us, the star playing the role of journalist-detective. Is it only chance that the name Joe Freyday was chosen for Beatty, the renowned TV detective of Dragnet? I think not, but this is rather a sampling of this movie's intricasies.

The suspense element enters with the fact that the audience knows that someone is "systematically knocking' off witnesses," and that the time for solving the dilemmas of who and why is limited. Suffice to say that the movie is full of surprises and to reveal them now would destroy one of the movie's stronger points.

The production costs for the film must have been quite high. The staging is great, the back up cast of characters even better, and the sound puts on the frosting. Michael Small did a fine job of scoring The Parallax View simply because he knew how to intensify and control the audience's emotions, subtly.

Like a Shakespearean play, the divisions of acts were stylized by a high contrast of noise to serenity, of roaring crowds to an interpersonal few. Pakula enjoyed toying with the contrasts of color as well. It will be evident that in one scene the brilliancy is overwhelming, in another it is dark and objects become abstract, and in still others a haze seems to create an aura of nebulousness to the mystery.

Symbolism is something that can be found in nearly every movie, if the viewer probes deep enough. The blatant occurances are the following: Freyday discusses with a friend his thoughts of a potential conspirancy, as they are riding on a children's train in an amusement park. The detectives only vehicle for solving the enigma is his mind, which carries him round and round in incessant circles. The other device is the meaning of parallax itself; there are two ways of looking at something, it just appears different from the individual standpoint.

Pakula's talent of manipulating the audience, toying with their emotions, makes for a close relationship between the characters and the viewers. He does, however, tend to abuse his privilege by making the movie seem somewhat contrived. Often one could not follow the sequence of events and their meaning because it became incomprehensible. The motives behind some of the basic elements of the movie are left unearthed, in the hope the audience will be content with their superficial meaning.

Beatty & Prentiss discuss what a parallax is.

The movie's worth, however, heavily outweighs its flaws. Much more could be said, such as the effective juxtaposition of psychological implications, yet this reviewer feels that you should see it for yourself and from your own frame of reference, take it for what it is worth.

The fact that the main character was a reporter, and not a private eye, can be attributed to the work of Woodward and Bernstein, who, incidentally, have sold the film rights of their book All the Kings Men, to filmland golden boy, Robert Redford. Because of the Press' role in the Watergate, the time is right in the entertainment field for the reporter to become the new American hero, a role that has been shared by soldiers, cowboys and cops.

Hi! I'm high-powered director Robert Altman, and I'm here on location filming my latest high-powered movie, "The Long Goodbye"
This film is full of fun — murder, maiming, drunkenness, infidelity, topless yoga freaks, four-letter words — everything! Like my first big success, M*A*S*H, it's got the same key ingredient!
What's that?
Good taste!
Here's our star, Elliott Gould! Elliott plays Philip Marlowe, a hard-bitten, cynical private eye trying to solve an incredible mystery!
With so many other actors around, why did you pick me??
THAT'S the mystery!
This is Nina van Pallandt, who portrays a femme fatale involved in a deceptive plot of shadowy intrigue!
How do you want me to play it?
From memory!
And here's Jim Bouton in the role of Terry Lennox, a small-time mug! You'll enjoy seeing Jim strike out on a new career!
Strike out?!? Is that a clever reference to my one-time skill as a baseball pitcher??
No, as an actor!
Finally, we've got Sterling Hayden as a deranged novelist, "Laugh-In's" Henry Gibson as a quack psychiatrist and Mark Rydell as a sadistic mobster who disfigures helpless women!
Like I said, "The Long Goodbye" is a fun movie!
The mystery deepens when beautiful Eileen Wade, played by Nina van Pallandt, asks Marlowe to find her lost husband, played by Sterling Hayden!
He's tall, middle-aged, and hates me because I'm getting bigger billing!
Look, I got problems of my own! A mobster is threatening to rearrange my face!
You turned him down?!?
I've been pushed around by the cops and the Mob, but I finally tracked down the murderer! I guess that wraps up "The Long Goodbye"
OH, NO! W-what are YOU doing here??
We're here to get the real murderer!
Namely, YOU! Your performance has killed this movie, not to mention our careers!
So we're giving it a new ending! It's now YOUR "Long Goodbye"
And if we don't finish you off, the critics WILL!

Nilsson Pussywhipped?

The Catz N' Jammer Kidz

by Michael C.P. Kostek

Pussy Cats
Nilsson
RCA CPLI-0570 time 38:30

In which we begin to see real glimpses of what music will be made by artists completely successful in commercial terms, and with (top drawer) more upstairs that a case of coke.

Harry Nilsson has emerged from his early days as a lighter, sweeter Randy Newman (Harry, Nilsson Sings Newman) into a Solid Act through the Midnight Cowboy Soundtrack and Nilsson Schmilsson (with its three singles). This gave him enough leeway to go and indulge himself in projects like the extended satire of Son Of Schmilsson, the extended schmaltz of A Little Touch Of Schmilsson In The Night and the spoiled horror soundtrack Son Of Dracula.

All these albums were mere dabblings. Harry never embraced any of these forms the authoritative way he knocks about in pop music, and all suffer from a listless, unreal quality that drops all of them into the Novelty section for all but the most rabid Nilsson-maniacs.

So after a three year abscence from 'honest' Pop, Harry returns to what he really does do best. And in Big Star Company: Ringo, Keith Moon, Jesse Ed Davis, Jim Keltner, Bobby Keys, and most importantly and influentially, John "Get out of the country in a week" Lennon, who produced (his first outside production job since David Peel and The Lower East Side) and did much arranging.

On this new disc, Lennon is responsible for the big broad jobs done on Jimmy Cliff's once merely beautiful "Many Rivers To Cross" and Dylan's "Subterranian Homesick Blues". John has enough of a bold edge to take "Many Rivers", a quite currently popular gospel-ish song that is being recorded more and more sensitively by all sorts of Normal singers, and make it a full-force Lennon bombast with his log-jam machine guitars, earth-defining drums, bullock cellos and charging primal scream vocals. John's changed the tune into an anthem of force. Rather than soulfully mourning the "lonliness that won't leave me alone", John attacks it, and the singer's reocurring failure to overcome it increases the song's power.

Dylan's standard isn't as striking in its new form, as its lyrics have always stung. It's quite exciting, though, to hear Harry tear into it, and wring the last line of each verse· "The pump don't work 'cause the (cresending) vandals took the Han-DELS!"

The rest of side one is Harry, good, tepid, and overboard. Side B features a fine "save The Last Dance For Me" done like you know he could with some excellent vocal turns.

"Mucho Mundo Mt. Elga" is an interesting combo of a Lennon song and an old tune. Very seductive. "Black Sails" carries excellent strings and smatterings of fine lyrics:

"I'll bury my heart on some island And take you there to find it I want you I need you I love you No other man will ever read your legs"

but Harry sinks his punny sea chanty as he goes in for the cheap score:

"But you're so veiny
You're so very veiny you probably think this map belongs to you"

Rocking the album are two smashers, "Loop De Loop" and "Rock Around The Clock", featuring three drummers and sax players and an amassed chorus.

And where do these jaded ones take us? Some shades of this music indeed are put-ons, but the core of the matters is rock solid. When Harry can bring himself down to the limited level of Pop, he's enough to really make things work. And the overall influence of Lennon makes Pussy Cats Nilsson's best record since the early days.

THE ISLEY BROS.
(T-Neck)

The Isleys are one rhythm and blues group that, along with Martha Reeves, Stevie Wonder and the Parliaments-Funkadelics, literally took a powder from muscial activities, due to a loss of recording contract, PR or whatever else that would keep one out of the public eye, and then re-appeared with new styles, images and best of all, new music that could only come from the seasoned professionalism and know-how that all these people have.

The Isleys new release offers all the sweet 'n high harmonies, searing guitar licks and electronic funk that a sizzling synthesizer and bottomless bass guitar can churn out. Credit Stevie Wonder's synthesizer programers, Margouleff and Cecil for exceptional work on this album.

Also credit the Isleys, ensemble, for penning some really nasty screamers as well as their usual delicate, touching love ballards." "Live It Up," their follow-up to "Who's That Lady?," is great dance material (Damn it, even a parapheligic would have to get up and dance) and Todd Rundgren's "Hello It's Me" and the Isley-penned "Need a Taste of Love" are both fine, fine ballads.

My particular album, and I understand, many other promo copies, have duplicate pressings of the A side on the B side as well. I'm upset because this is definitely a B+ album. Unfortunately, the other half forthcoming, I can only give it an INC.

HERGEST RIDGE — MIKE OLDFIELD (Virgin Records)

On the first listening this album, I thought it was great, even better than Tubular Bells. The second time around brought different results. Of the forty minutes of music (er, muzak), only fifteen minutes will give you any reason to pay attention to the album (I'm being generous here). The rest of this lp is endless repetition of ideas that go nowhere. In fact, a lot of Hergest Ridge sounds like sludge. Only the excellent musicianship of Oldfield and the few assorted people here save the album. P.S. When was the last time you listened to Tubular Bells all the way thru? What about Side One? (C-)

THE VERY BEST OF GORDON LIGHTFOOT (UA-LA243-G)

For anyone who sat around someone's living room in the late (or if you're older than I am, maybe early) '60's singing "Did She Mention My Name" and "Early Mornin' Rain" while someone's boyfriend played the guitar, this album is nostalgia at its best. For people who think of "Sundown" when they hear the name Gordon Lightfoot, this album is a chance to see what the man can really do. His gentle subtleties bring you from hating him for being such a conceited ass to loving him for being so gently caring. It's beautiful. Don't miss it.

Grace Is Not As Easy As It Seems

Peace On You
Roger McGuinn
Columbia KC 32956
Total playing time: 35:04

Close Up The Honky-Tonks
The Flying Burrito Bros.
Total playing time: 70:05

During the sixties, the Byrds were one of a small handful of bands who made a significant chunk of musical history with their folk-rock innovations, experimentations, and spontaneity. Jim-to-become-Roger McGuinn was, of course a good percentage of the Byrds, and it wasn't until his writing, arranging, and Rickenbackering lost that spontaneity that the Byrds became the stultified and stagnant group which recorded Byrdmaniax and Farther Along.

McGuinn's first solo album was released after the final incarnation of the Byrds broke up, and showed signs of the greatness which was the early Byrds, but lacked the consistency. The great expectations which accompanied the reformation of the original Byrds in 1973 proved unfounded, with the ego-laden five man conglomeration turning out to be a calculated sales item more than anything else.

In direct opposition to the "reformed" (or was that deformed) Byrds, Roger McGuinn isn't a sure fire seller, but with the release of his second album, Peace On You, the real Byrds and music fans have good reason to rejoice and flock back. Roger sounds better than he has in years, with his voice and 12-string coming through with the same intensity and harmonious depth as in the good old sixties. From the opening "God ain't gonna love you any" of the title song written by Charlie Rich (Charlie did a surprisingly good job with it on Behind Closed Doors, but McGuinn's treatment is perfect, recalling his breathtaking arrangements of Dylan material), it's apparent that wherever it went, Roger McGuinn has got it back.

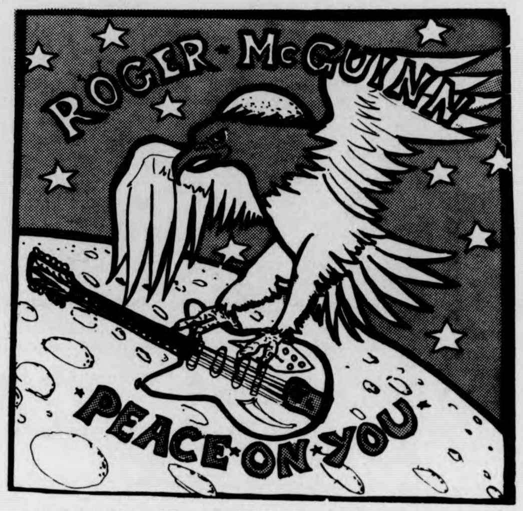
As on Roger McGuinn, and as far back as Untitled, most of the McGuinn songs here were written with partner Jacques Levy, "Same Old Sound" the one song written solely by McGuinn is a sure treat and definitely a Byrds song right up through the final la la's which are straight out of "Goin' Back".

Ten songs, ten distinct recollections of great days gone by. Though none of them are up to the Byrds' best, the record has a consistency unheard since Notorious Byrd Brothers.

Part of the credit must go to the back-up musicians: Russ Kunkel, drums; Lee Sklar, bass: Paul Harris, keyboards; Donnie Dacus, 6-string rhythm and lead guitar, as well as several well-tempered 'star' appearances by people like Flo and Eddie and Al Kooper. Well-tempered describes the entire band, as they lay in and lay down the old Byrds feel, but without copying to any great degree.

It is McGuinn, though, that carries this off, due to his excellent singing, arranging and writing.

Especially pleasing are "Peace On You" in its grandly dirty way, "(Please Not) One More Time", "Together" and the album's finest, "The Lady". "The Lady" is a wonder of a song that combines a beautiful melody with excellent lyrics, the last line of which sums up the entire situation: "But grace is not as easy as it seems". It was a matter of time, and McGuinn's back in grace again, even if it is wrapped up in that 'same old sound'.



Country-rock has become a popular thing of late with the Eagles, Jackson Browne, and Souther, Hillman and Furay all making the big time and winning the hearts of not-so-hard-rock aficionados everywhere. Back in 1965, the Byrds broke new musical ground with their stunning folk-rock recording of Bob Dylan's "Mr. Tambourine Man". Seven years later, the Eagles hit almost as big with Jackson Browne's "Take It Easy", a tune which will probably be remembered as the first big country-rock hit.

Between these two musical landmarks was a group who never had a hit, never recorded for Geffen's Asylum, and never garnered much more than a cult following, though their music boasted the fundamental elements of both folk-rock and country-rock. Spawned by ex-Byrds Gram Parsons and Chris Hillman and later, in turn, to have its members form the nuclei of Eagles and the SHF Band, The Flying Burrito Bros. was a group ahead of its time, with a tremendous potential which reached fruition only to have virtually no one realize it. Fortunately, they left us with several fine recordings (the best of which are their first, The Gilded Palace of Sin and third, The Flying Burrito Bros.) which capture the essence of the band. Since their break-up, A&M has released some live Burrito material on The Last of the Red Hot Burritos, as well as some early tapes (circa late 1960's) which comprise about half of the recently issued Close Up the Honky-Tonks.

The bottom of the Burritos' tape stash reveals little new or substantial, but there is enough here for fans to get mooney-eyed at least one more time.

Close Up The Honky-Tonks is the best of the country rockers, and "Sing Me Back Home" is the finest of the slow ones, with the late, great Gram Parsons singing us all back home. In fact, any fan of Gram's will have to get a hold of this set as side three is all his, and he does fine things to "To Love Somebody" and "Break My Mind". Gram, "the honkey Georgia Peach" was the best singer of sad songs we had.

The other side of these rareties is paler in comparison, but does have its moments: "Did You See" is one of those great square-shouldered rockers the Brothers integrated so well with the Country touch that carpetbaggers like Eagles and the Souther, Hillman Furay Band will search forever in vain for: "Here Tonight" is pretty as a cactus flower.

There's been plenty imatators, but none have come anywhere close to the Byrds and Burritos in any sense of style, grace of fullness. And the reason isn't too hard to track. It's really just a matter of soul.

HIGH ENERGY - FREDDY HUBBARD
Playing Time: 39:46

Take some late 40's - early 50's big band arrangements, mix it with Tamla-Motown 60's 'soul', lay the whole thing on top of some new-fangled electronic funk and you'll get a fair approximation of what Mr. Hubbard is contending with on this, his first album for Columbia. Surprisingly, the total effect isn't at all bad; Hubbard manages to carry if off with style and, although he never seems to feel completely comfortable with his back-ground, he shows great adaptability, even to the point of using something as non-traditional as an echoplex with a fair amount of taste. His back-up band (George Cables, electric piano; Kent Brinkley, bass; Ralph Penland, drums; Junior Cook, tenor sax and flute) is also quite competent, with special credit to Junior Cook, who does some fine solos.

As a one-shot deal, and with the exception of a somewhat hokey arrangement of Stevie Wonder's "Too High" (They do fair justice to Stevie's "Black Maybe"; the rest of the tunes are band originals) this album is bright and brassy and nice to have around, but I hope that Mr. Hubbard gets to do something more basic with just his quintet. In the long run, outsized arrangements like these would be stifling to his abilities.

THE RANDALL — SHEPARD ALL STARS
(Black Lion)

This record swings like hell, folks. The band has the New Orleans communal feeling in the unison playing of the themes yet somehow it's mixed with a late thirties swing band feel. How the band can sound this genuine when they're all English is startling.

Tenorist Danny Moss' style and tone are semi-hard bop, out of Dexter Gordon and Sonny Rollins with some beautiful Lester Young quotes on his feature Sometimes I'm Happy. Co-leader Dave Shepherd clarinet swings up a storm a la Goodman on a near-forgotten 1928 tune, "Nagasaki." Shepherd and pianist Brian Lemon cook well here and on 'Hindustan.' "The Bittersweet Loverman" is played nicely and "Embraceable You" is acceptable. Trumpet and trombone join clarinet and tenor for a jumping final cut of W. C. Handy's "Beale St. Blues." One thing learned by listening to jazz is the effectiveness and importance of swing to a performance. The Randall-Sheperd All-Stars may be a derivative band playing traditional jazz, but the element of swing is so deeply felt that it validates everything.

FEATS DON'T FAIL ME NOW
LITTLE FEAT

FEATS DON'T FAIL ME NOW-LITTLE FEAT (Warners BS 2784) time 34:18

It will happen. It's coming. A great band that plays obscure music is going to be recognized by more than the handful of multiple rebendibles who script these cryptic record reviews. From Fusion to Rolling Stone, the boys behind the typewriters have been going ga-ga and goo-goo over this six man combo from California during this and their last three albums. Why?

I'll tell you why: Little Feat is easily the funkiest white band in the world, and their funk flows out of New Orleans (not Sly Stone) by way of Chuck Berry and Dylan WHICH IS ALL UPdated to 1974 sophisticated California lyrics, words and attitudes.

Big Winners: "Rock And Roll Doctor", in which things get so intense that you can hear Lowell George (the main-spring of the band) huffing between verses. He's not tired, just in a breathless rapture. He's got The Feeling. "Wait Till The Shit Hits The Fan" mixes a Mahavishnu jet pattern with their fonk, and we can hardly keep our hands still. A medley of "Cold Cold Cold" and "Tripe Face Boogie", both from their great Sailin' Shoes album, takes up ten precious minutes, but it's worth the wait to hear the band (and they are most certainly a band) zizz through them and 'boogie their scruples away'.

Everything else is consistant hot stuff that doesn't have as many great turns as the aforementioned Big Winners.

Well, they played here this summer with Bo Diddley and blew Bo off the stage, Haul Ass Jacket and all. Feats Don't Fail Me Now is excellent on every level and a top 10nner this year for shore. You're missing out without this hot biscuit.

A 'they shore didn't' A.

TRIOS-SOLOS RALPH TOWNER WITH GLEN MOORE

ECM records is rapidly establishing itself as the Deutche Grammophon of the new music, in both the quality of music and the quality of its recording techniques. Of course, one can only take the comparison so far: Deutche Grammophon is in the business of taking music that is established and accepted, and making better recordings of it, generally, than anyone else. ECM, on the other hand (coincidentally also a German label), is in the business of discovering and making excellent recordings of music that no one has ever heard before; musicians and composers, some established on other labels, some unknown, who want to do things not quite in the mainstream of modern music, come to ECM. Keith Jarrett, for instance, recently released a three-record set on ECM comprised of two compositions, both for solo piano. Try to push that to I-sell-um records.

Here we have an album by two members of the group Oregon (concerning which faithful readers might remember my ravings from last semester) representing a much more direct, gut-level approach to expression than the complex but usually melodious works of that group. There are melodies here, but most of them are torn from their respective instruments in huge, raw chunks as the mind jumps ahead of the fingers. The instruments are: (Ralph Towner) Twelve-string guitar and piano; (Glen Moore) acoustic bass. Paul McCandless and Collin Walcott, also of Oregon, do a couple of guest shots (on oboe and tabla, respectively) but the bulk of the album is just Towner and-or Moore.

In terms of arrangement this album is extremely basic: Six solos for guitar, one bass solo, and three "Trios"; two with one or the other guest artist and one with Towner overdubbing piano onto a guitar-bass duet, making it a 'trio' through studio schizophrenia. Throughout the album Towner is crazed with power over his instrument and freedom to use it, making thick clusters of chords and then savaging them into ragged, string-busting runs or suddenly dissolving to shimmering harmonics. Bassist Moore is also agile, if a trifle spacey; I can never quite figure out where he's coming from. An accurate description of this style is found in the title of his six-and-a-half-minute (whew!) solo, 'A Belt of Asteroids'.

Sometimes I think the album is a little too condensed, that is, there are one or two too many solos, but over-all it's kept from becoming really confined by the addition, occasionally, of another instrument, and the music itself is deep and unrestrained.

A 'Heavily-callused' A.
Your Sacred Cowboy

SLOW FLUX — STEPPENWOLF (Mums-Columbia PZ 33093) time: 45:33 A solid return that harks, yes harks back to their early rippin' days and ways when they exuded a crass class combined with heads up rock 'n roll. They're still the band that powered more than one biker's wet dream. Great cover.

A 'children of night' B.

Babe: The Myth and The Man

by Frederic C. Weiss

Babe
The Legend Comes To Life
by Robert Creamer
Simon and Schuster
$9.95 442 P.

Out of the genre of jock-shop pep talk, 'lets go Bobo', era of sports books, seldom if ever did the public get any real picture about what our sports idols were like as people. There would be loads of details on the early days, the poverty riddled youth, the hard times, and you can fill in the cliches. Athletes said "Ma'm" and "Sir" and blushed when a good looking woman walked by.

Jim Bouten's Ball Four was one of the first books to explode the myth of innocence in athletics. Speaking on the sleazy side of the baseball diamond, Bouton commented extensively on the lifestyles and personalities of many of the baseball players that he competed against in the majors. His comments provoked outrages from the defenders of the "American Dream", who protested against Bouton's candor. Their main argument was not that Bouton didn't tell the truth, but that Bouton shouldn't have told the truth. Bouton's book also showed that candor sells: People are curious, and not all of them want to believe that their athletes are perfect.

Gehrig and Ruth...feuding stars

Robert W. Creamer's new book, Babe The Legend Comes To Life takes Bouton's style one step further. Babe Ruth, the legendary "sultan of the swat", the man "who built Yankee stadium" has been built so much bigger than life over the past thirty years (he died in 1948), that it takes a book as good as Creamer's to bring his image back to reality!

Creamer tells about Babe's early years in Baltimore, where he was an undisciplined strong boy put into an orphanange even though his parents were still alive. Without his ability to hit a round ball a mile, and throw that same ball through a catcher's mitt, Ruth would have drifted away into the streets and onto the corners of Baltimore.

Ruth's ability to play baseball saved him from this fate, and made him the best known name on the American scene for over twenty years. Creamer shows us that Ruth was a product of the American dream. He helped build the game which was to become the "national pastime."

The author also gives us a compassionate view of Babe Ruth, the victim of the star system: Self-indulgent, undisciplined, and spoiled, Babe liked his good life. He enjoyed the woman, the wine, and all the food he could chew down. But most of all Ruth liked baseball. When the easy life mixed with time to transform his once powerful frame into a flabby bulk, Ruth's decline as a ballplayer was torn by his pride as a man. For anyone else, hitting eighteen home runs a year would be quite fine, but when Babe Ruth began to be just "another good ballplayer", it wasn't enough. People booed, and Babe Ruth went into deep depressions.

This is because Babe Ruth was not just another "good ballplayer". For a country without royalty, Babe Ruth became sort of national property. Praise was heaped on him, and his ego grew to continually greater proportions. When his talents left him, the ego and eventually cancer worked together to eat him up and destroy him, both from without and within.

Creamer has researched Ruth's life extensively. The book is chronological without being boring; Creamer's style is informal without being sloppy. Peppering well-known incidents (like Babe Ruth's 60 home run year) with revealing facts (Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig were feuding for years) the author takes you back to the time of the twenties, a growing nation, a new hero, and complexities of the Ruth years.

While the book at times takes a critical turn against Ruth, for the most part it is quite sympathetic. Creamer has given us a book of revealing candor, without filling it with a bunch of gossip. For anyone who likes sports or Americana, Babe is definitely worth reading.

Zen Experience

by Kevin Mack

The Empty Mirror:
Experiences in a Zen Buddhist Monastary
by Janwillem van de Wetering
Houghton Mifflin Company
145 Pages

In recent years, Zen Buddhism has become increasingly appealing to Westerners. Zen is the philosophy which is not really a philosophy; the religion which is not really a religion. At first glance it seems a sort of nihilism, bidding its adherents to tear up the mantras and seek truth on their own. Zen says that the world is an illusion and this is often interpreted as meaning the same as a fake.

Janwillem van de Wetering, spent a year of his life studying Zen in a monastery in Kyoto, Japan. the Empty Mirror is a record of his months spent meditating and wrestling with his koan, (the Zen riddle given to him by the master). The author never claims to know anything about Zen, in fact, he never solved his first koan. This engaging book is simply a record of the day to day experiences of a western man in a Zen Monastery.

The first thing van de Wetering learns at the monastery is that meditation, at least in the Buddhist, cross-legged, lotus position, hurts. The author feels that there is nothing particularly mystical about meditating; it is simply sitting still and concentrating on something — or even nothing. Zen Buddhists do it in the lotus position simply because it is "the best position for meditating."

The other monks, mostly young Japanese sent to the monastery by their parents are vaguely amused by the gangly Dutchman. The monks are from varied backgrounds, although most are middle-class Japanese, in training to become Zen Priests. The Head Monk was once a spoiled upper-class adolescent, who was originally sent to the monastery as a punitive measure. The Zen Master is a busy old man who enjoys watching baseball games and going to movies. A Jesuit priest in Kyoto vists the monastery and the author thinks that he is a fool with his Christian God and celibate life. Later, Mr. van de Wetering discovers that the priest is considered a very holy man by the monks and even meditates two or three hours a day.

After over a year of futile attempts at solving his koan, the author's fanaticism for Zen wears off. He had come to Japan to seek the "Truth", but instead he learned self-discipline. "A sword that has been well forged never loses its color," the Master tells him when he leaves." You don't know it, or you think you don't know it but you have been forved in this Monastery. The forging of swords isn't limited to monasteries. The whole planet is a forge. By leaving here nothing is broken. Your training continues. The world is a school where the sleeping are woken up. You are now a little awake, so awake that you can never fall asleep again." Or as Jansan sees it, he has learned that it is important "to do everything well."

The University of Massachusetts has recently initiated a revolutionary concept in education which will shortly render all other education systems obsolete. In concurrence with the University's present policy of assigning credit to all school sponsored activities, a system of modular credits will be designed to reflect the valuable learning experience gained by extended standing in line.

Basically, the number of credits will correspond to the number of actual in-line hours. However, additional credit may be arranged by contract, if the student can show evidence that excessive effort was expended in any one line. Several courses have already been suggested:

Registration: ¼ to 100 credits, based on a number of variables and student's determination. May be repeated for additional credit.

Course Changing: 1 to 15 credits, depending on time and date student attended line, i.e., student may be awarded full 15 credits if in attendance on Friday morning Sept. 6. Additional credit if student actually succeeded in registering for desired course.

Identification Card: 1 hour credit initially, may be repeated in one month for additional credit. Note: Students not possessing a valid Massachusetts drivers license may receive extra credit for excessive harassment.

Parking: Credit to decrease progressively until course is phased out some time in December. Commuters not yet enrolled in line may receive additional credit for anxiety and emotional stress.

Any student obtaining a doctor's written statement that he or she has flat feet will receive additional credit according to the extent of the affliction.

As this is a tremendous step for education, the administration welcomes your comments, revisions, or suggested courses.

Student Union Gallery Workshop

by A. Hamburger

On the 26th of Sept. there will be an informal gathering at the gallery in the Student Union building, open to all interested individuals. The purpose of the gathering is to provide an opportunity for students to meet one another, and exchange ideas and information about working with a gallery situation. It is hoped that from this we can establish a common ground for communication between ourselves, other students and the community.

The gallery is a workshop, an experimental environment an educational experience, an exhibition area or whatever anyone decides to do. No matter how it is used the purpose of the gallery is to facilitate a learning experience. It will allow one to see their own ideas synthesized, and to find out what other students are doing. Come by on Thursday, and consider the possibilities for yourself.

MOVIE RATINGS

ALFREDO, ALFREDO (1973(+++

ANIMAL CRACKERS (1930) +++

Not my favorite Marx Brothers flick, but of course there has never been a bad one. Groucho is Captain Spaulding (horray!) and if you're fortunate to catch a decent print, you might be able to hear some of his best vibes with the various stuffed-shirts. Harpo is insane; running around in his underwear, goosing the guests, and sitting in on an incredibly ludicrous poker game with Chico. Zeppo is in his only funny scene, but still takes the rap from Groucho, who is dictating a letter to him. The only flaw in the film is the direction, as you feel you are watching a dress rehearsal of the Broadway play it was based on. At the Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

APPRENTICESHIP OF DUDDY KRAVITZ (1974) ++++

Richard Dreyfuss of American Graffiti fame, stars in this extremely funny story of a young Canadian Jew striving for success. A few anti-Semitic bits, but one has to be satirical when dealing with religious customs which are unfamiliar to a large segment of the audience. Exciting direction by Ted Kotcheff makes this an upcoming biggie. At the Showcase Cinema

BUSTER AND BILLIE (1974) ++

One of the more recent rip-offs of the American Graffiti formula. Slightly different in the respect that it deals with one couple instead of twenty of them, but the story could have been deposited into the 1960's just as easily. Whatever happened to good old originality? At the Campus Cinemas and the Academy of Music.

DEATH WISH (1974) +++

People are raving about this new Charles Bronson movie for some reason, and a viewing should explain why. It deals with a wealthy architect who takes the law into his own hands and calmly shoots muggers off the streets after his own wife and daughter are assaulted. The question is: how do you stop the growing crime rate in a big city, through the police, or through personal protection? The film favors Bronson's actions, and usually the audience follows suit. The idea is cute, but the portrayals of the muggers are too stereotyped and West Side Storyish. Still, the acting shines and the New York City photography provides a spellbinding background for the shenanigans. Michael Winner irects his first winner. At the Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

DOCTOR ZHIVAGO (1966) ++++

Epic saga of a striving Russian medical man torn between two women during the heart of the Russian Revolution. David Lean's direction is superb taking us from Moscow to the Eastern Grasslands and smack through a blistering Siberian snowstorm. Omar Sharif stars as Zhivago, with Julie Christie, Alec Guiness, Rod Steiger, Tom Courtenay and others smoothing out the case. Excellent script, art direction, and haunting music. See this on a side screen for the fullest enjoyment. Winner of six Academy Awards. At the Showcase Cinemas.

HAROLD AND MAUDE (1971) +++

This film has mysteriously found a cult for itself among varied audiences out West, after a virtually ignored premiere three years ago. The story concerns a rich little kid who finds temporary happiness with an 80-year-old woman, played by Ruth Gordon. The pair goes on expeditions of fun and sick pranks, driving their spectators up the wall. Director Hal Ashby's point about discovering life comes through a bit muddy, but the films still interesting viewing. At the Campus Cinemas.

TO KILL A MOCKINGBIRD (1962) ++++

Dramatic rendition of Harper Lee's best-selling novel about growing up amidst racial prejudice in the deep south. Gregory Peck won an Academy Award for his role as Atticus Finch, the lawyer-father of the two children. Haunting atmosphere, excellent script, and memorable characters provide for a very worthwhile viewing. Guaranteed to pierce your soul.In the S.U.B. on 9-21 at 7 and 9:15.

KLUTE (1971) ++++

Jane Fonda stars in a realistic portrait of a New York prostitute and the murder case she becomes involved in. Donald Sutherland plays the detective who comforts her throughout. The transition from Bree Daniels (Fonda) making love indifferently to Bree Daniels making love emotionally is explored in an important psychological fashion. Alan J. Pakula's tight, teeth-gritting direction is fascinating. If you saw it on television last weekend, see it again and see how much was lost in the editing room. In the C.C.A. on 9-19 at 7, 9:15, and 11:30.

THE LONG GOODBYE +++

Elliot Gould plays a gumshoe detective in this updated version of a Phillip Marlowe story. Directed by Robert Altman, who has yet to get the credit he deserves. In the Ballroom on 9-19 at 7 and 9:15

LOVE HAPPY (1949) +++

The Marx Brothers in one of their last films. It's a musical comedy interwoven with a plot concerning jewel thieves. Not one of their best, but Harpo's unusual antics are worth the price of admission. Billed with A Night 'in Casablanca at the Campus Cinemas in Hadley.

MY NAME IS NOBODY (1974) +

A poor attempt on cashing in on Blazing Saddles' comedy-western success. Henry Fonda plays an aging gunfighter in this Italian-made saga, who gets competition from a young sharpshooter. The satire is aimed at the recent crop of Clint Eastwood "man with no name" westerns and Sam Peckinpah blood-baths, but either the jokes are funnier in Italian or the screenwriter fell asleep because the only intense feeling I could derive from the show was rock-hard ass. At the Mountain Farms Four.

NIGHT IN CASABLANCA (1948) ++++

Another rarely-seen Marx Brothers film, and I wish it was never seen at all. Of course, it's a little fishy, but that's only after the first reel. Anyway, before I go any further I'd lik to say that this movie will have you on the edge of your seat, if not completely under it. So get behind the wheel of your best friend's car and drive down to the Campus Cinemas in Hadley — and that's the stupidest thing I've ever heard.

OLIVER (1965) ++++

One of the best musicals to come out within the last decade. Story, patterned after Dickens' Oliver Twist, tells of young orphan's adventures as he matures in 19th Century London. Famous characters include Fagin, the Artful Dodger, etc., and a band of young hoodlums Oliver associates with. Great music, fine acting all around, particularly from Oliver Reed, Ron Moody (as Fagin), and Jack Wild (as the Artful Dodger). This is entertainment at its superb height, and the Program Council has it for you on Sunday, 9-22 at 7 and 9:45 in the S.U.B,

SLEUTH :1972) ++++

Joseph L. Mankiewicz' brilliant rendition of the long-running Broadway suspense play about two English gentlemen trying to outwit each other in deadly game of fortune. Laurence Olivier plays the aristocratic writer who owns the house where the events take place, and Michael Caine stars as the young lover of the writer's wife. Intriguing script and very sophisticated humor makes this a compelling thriller which I found more fun unpuzzling than The Sting. This one gives you a better chance. In Mahar Auditorium on 9-20 at 7, 9:15, and 11:30.

THREE MUSKETEERS (1974) ++

A disappointing counterfeit of the Alexandre Dumas' novel famous for its creation of the three gallant swordsmen who fight to protect the Queen's Diamonds. The star-studded case includes Michael York, Richard Chamberlain, Oliver Reed, Charlton Heston, Faye Dunaway, and Raquel Welch, but everybody is wasted in their respective bit parts. Topping this off with an uncalled-for heist of every visual technique used in Ken Russell's film The Devils and not a not-funny-enough script, the film is forced to buckle in its own swash. At the Mountain Farms Four.

UPTOWN SATURDAY NIGHT (1974) +++

Sidney Poitier tries his hand at directing Bill Cosby, Flip Wilson, Harry Belafonte, and himself in this comedy about two friends who try to get back a winning lottery ticket stolen from them in a gambling house. Funny scenes abound, but the loose direction keeps this one out of the superfunny category. At Mountain Farms Four.

Jaworski subpoenas citizen Nixon

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski officially summoned private citizen Richard M. Nixon yesterday to testify as a government witness in the Watergate cover-up trial beginning Oct.1.

Jaworski's office said he issued a subpoena Wednesday night for the former President to appear in the trial of six of his former White House and re-election campaign aides on charges of conspiracy and obstructing justice.

Meanwhile, a Senate committee postponed until today action on a resolution by democratic Leader Mike Mansfield to take public custody of Nixon's tapes and documents and prevent the destruction of any Watergate tapes. A vote on the resolution had been scheduled yesterday but an insufficient number of committee members attended.

Nixon had previously been subpoenaed as a defense witness by his former No. 2 aide John Ehrlichman. But the government's cross examination, in that case, would have been limited to subjects introduced by the defense lawyer.

As a witness for both the defense and the prosecution, Nixon can be questioned on any phase of the Watergate burglary and cover-up.

"He has been subpoenaed to testify. We expect him to be a witness, " a spokesman for the prosecutor told reporters.

He did not discuss the current speculation that Nixon may invoke medical reasons to avoid testifying.

Nixon is suffering from a recurrence of phlebitis, a vein inflamation complicated by blood clots in his left leg, and former White House physician Walter Tkach said after examining him last week that he had recommended hospitalization.

His daughter, Julie, flew to California yesterday for a visit and now reports that Nixon would enter a hospital soon although he had strongly resisted such a move earlier.

Court sources speculated that if he declined to testify because of ill health, District Judge John D. Sirica could send a court-appointed physician to make an independent judgment on whether the former President could stand the rigors of a court trial.

If Nixon were found to be fit but failed to appear, he could be cited for contempt.

Additionally, since President Ford's absolute pardon means that

Lovejoy Trial

Justice rules physicist's testimony irrelevant

by DAVE GREENSLIT
Staff Reporter

Greenfield - Associate Justice Kent B. Smith yesterday refused to allow the jury in the Sam Lovejoy nuclear trial to hear the defense testimony of Dr. John W. Goffman, the noted physical chemist who helped develop the atomic bonb.

Should the jury convice Lovejoy, However, Smith said that he would not sentence the 28 year old Montague resident, but report the case directly to the Supreme Judicial Court for their determination.

Lovejoy is charged with willful and malicious destruction of personal property in the Feb.22 toppling of Northeast Utilities' environmental tower at the company's proposed $1.52 billion nuclear power plant site on the Montague Plains.

Smith's decision climaxed an extraordinary court session, lasting until 6:05 p.m., which interrupted the prosecution's case to hear defense witness Goffman's testimony. Goffman had flown in from California especially for yesterday's session and has commitments today in New Jersey.

As soon as Goffman took the stand, Assistant D.A. John Murphy objected to his testimony on the grounds that the dangers of nuclear power were irrelevent to the destruction of the meteorological tower.

Smith then had the jury leave the room so he could hear arguments on the relevency of Goffman's testimony. Before the issue was resolved, however, he wllowed Goffman to testify with the jury still isolated in the deliberation room. In this way Goffman's testimony will be on the record should Lovejoy be convicted and appeal.

Goffman testified that under present Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) guidelines for nuclear power plants, low level radiation emmissions could cause 32,000 fatal cases of cancer and leukemia annually. He said that the same dose posed an even greater threat than cancer and leukemia - genetic injury.

Continuing to develop nuclear energy, he said, would "desecrate this earth for now or future generations." Handling "astronomical amounts of radioactive substances requires 99.999 per cent heman perfection to keep radioactive material from being released into the environment," he said.

Nuclear fuel, such as plutonium, remains radioactive for as long a 500,000 years, Goffman continued, long enough to poison the next 500 generations.

He blamed the AEC for the continuing development of nuclear power. The AEC has made a "mockery of the public hearing process," he said because it sets the rules under which the plant will be built, then asks, '"does this plant meet these rules?'"

Never, he stressed, does it ask if the plant is needed at all. "Recourse is so feeble as to be non-existent," he said.

After Goffman finished, Lovejoy argued that for the jury to truly understand his state of mind on Feb.22, Smith must rule the testimony admissible to the jury. He said nuclear danger posed an immediate threat to him and the community, and that he had no recourse but to act in self-defense; to topple the tower. Goffman's testimony, Lovejoy stressed, would convince the jury that his act was not malicious but beneficial to the community.

Smith then asked Lovejoy, "Does sincere belief absolve a man of crime?" He stressed that a trial judge's role is to interpret existing law, not make new law. Establishing the right to commit an unlawful act in pursuit of a higher cause would be a new law, he said.

Leaning forward on the bench, Smith asked rhetorically, "Where does anybody get the idea that these problems can be handled in the criminal courts?" He then ordered a short recess to take Murphy's original objection under advisement.

Fifteen minutes later, Smith returned to the tense and silent court room, where he sustained the objection, preventing the jury from hearing Goffman's testimony.

Bromery expresses regret over article

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery yesterday released a statement through his spokesman "regretting" an article published Tuesday by The Collegian.

The article, which appeared on page one, reported that several students on a summer trip abroad were critical of the management of the trip run by the University's office of International Programs.

The statement said Bromery "must express his concern and regret with the recent article personally attacking Dr. Barbara Burn and the Office of International Programs of which she is a director.

"All evidence indicates that Dr. Burn and the office have done an outstanding job and will continue to provide programs and service to foreign students, the high quality of which have been recognized nationally," the statement concluded.

Youth arraigned for campus theft and assault of UMass officers

by FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

Two UMass police officers were assaulted yesterday as they arrested a Southwest youth following a theft, according to David Johnston, director of Public Safety.

The youth, Glen J. Rosa, 20, of New Bedford was arraigned yesterday in Hampshire County District Court and pleaded not guilty to eight charges: two counts of assault and battery of a policeman, assault and battery of a student, two counts of breaking and entering in the nightime, malicious damage of personal property, larceny over a hundred dollars, and being a disorderly person. The case was continued to Oct. 1. Rosa was released on personal recognizance.

Johnston said that Officers Richard Besse, David Grader and Richard Huntoon responded to complaints of theft at 12:35 AM and apprehended the youth near the Newman Center following a foot chase and struggle which involved several other persons. The complaints came from Kappa Sigma fraternity on 70 Butterfield Terrace.

Police reports state that the youth was first sighted in the fraternity house going through wallets, and that he was chased by members of the house, who caught him and held him until police arrived. The contents of several wallets, including $130, were found strewn along the way that Rosa fled as well as on his person.

One of the students involved in the chase was injured above his right eye and received five stitches at the Infirmary, the report said.

Johnston said that one of the officers was kicked in the chest and the other was punched in the face when they tried to subdue Rosa.

Everything that was reported stolen was recovered, said Johnston, who praised the actions of the members of the fraternity.

"This incident will also be referred to the Dean of Students for additional discipline", Johnston said.

Howard Zinn featured in nuclear symposium

ByJAN ALEXANDFR
Staff Reporter

"You'll learn nothing from me about nuclear energy," said Boston University professor Howard Zinn at last night's nuclear power symposium in Mahar Auditorium.

"I don't know very much about nuclear power plants," explained the lanky, greying professor, "except that as a concerned citizen, I have read things about nuclear fall out which troubled me."

"What Sam Lovejoy did aroused latent feelings of animosity I had about radiation fallout, and nuclear bombs," said Zinn refering to Lovejoy's act of civil disobiedence in toppling the Northeast Utilities weather tower.

"I came out here and asked him profound questions like, 'Did it make a big noise?'. He answered that it was like a 600 foot guitar string breaking."

"I'm here to test out the electronic equipment at the university of Massachusetts," Zinn quipped.

Zinn cited several examples of radiation fallout. "In 1966 there were 42 accidents in nuclear plants around the world, and 37 were in the United States. The United States is first in everything."

"The Atomic Energy Comission admitted that there was no' apprieciable level' of it in the atmosphere.

"We used to believe the Atomic Energy Commission when they said things like that, but they can't be trusted if only because they loose things," said Zinn. "They're careless. Remember those two hydrogen bombs they lost ott the coast of Spain?"

Zinn quoted a May 1964 New York Times headline as saying, "U.S. error looses deadly Plutonium in sky over Africa". He read the article which explained that the chemical was "floating safely in the upper atmosphere."

"Plutonium 238 when inhaled can cause physiological damage," said Zinn, "I was worried about what would happen to it. I guess it's still safely floating around up there somewhere."

"It takes reading the papers for citizens to come to the conclusion that dangerous things are being done, and that we can't trust the people doing them to protect our children.

"Sam Lovejoy - he's great!" Zinn exclaimed. "Somehow the public has to be aroused. It was acts like this during the Vietnam war that increased public awareness an had some affect on government policy."

Professor Zinn discussed his feelings toward Dow Chemical Company.

"I have a particular grievance against Dow," he said. "As a bombardier in the Air Force I had the rare experience of dropping the first napalm bombs on people.

'I did it without thinking of what was happening. I was obiedient.

'It was only years later that I thought back on that, and shuddered about what I had done," Zinn recalled. "There will be a post-war encroachment on our lives unless we do something about it."

The professor said that the world today is "topsy-turvy". To back up his statement, he read an item from a New York Times article which was on page 23B.

The story concerned Colonial Henderson who was implicated in the My Lai atrocities. Henderson's present job is with the Pennsylvania Bicentenial, where he is organizing an international meeting for the purpose of drafting human rights.

"This is some justification that the world is not quite right," Zinn concluded.

"A phrase that came out after Nixon's resignation that we should have noticed was 'we now have proof that we are a government of laws and not of men.'

"If anyone over the age of seven believes that we have a government of laws," said Zinn, "then something has gone wrong in his upbringing.

"The laws in this country are on a basis of a double standard. They talk about malicious destructioon of a tower, but what about malicious destruction of a country?

"The law says kidnapping is illegal, but not in relation to the selective service. You break and enter a house and get five years," Zinn went on, "you break and enter a country and you will go down in history.

"We have gone past the magnificent demonstrations against the Vietnam War. We must now change the nature of the society in which we live.

"Civil rights, women's liberation, anti-war - all these small groups are now coming out trying to change things," Zinn said.

"That is the significance here. People will support, increase and spread the word, and good things are bound to happen," he said.

Funding of fire station discussed

By JUDY BOUCHER

Town Manager Allen Torry asked for "increased indebtness for Amherst" last night before a special town meeting.

Town members voted 133 in favor and 54 against additional appropriation of $235,000 for the new fire station on East Pleasant Street and Eastman Lane. According to Fire Chief John Doherty construction will be completed within ten months.

However, UMass' responsibility for paying for fire protection was not resolved. University officials responded to the Selectman's request for full payment of an elevating platform truck by placing a high priority of $150,000 as "special appropriation" in next years budget.

There was no commitment for paying one-third operational cost. The University will only support "special legislation" as proposed by Rep. James Collins whereby the state legislature will provide funds for municipalities in which state tax exempt institutions are located and fire protection is required.

The legislation proposed by Collins would be "breaking new ground" and be modeled after federal 'impact area' legislation. Collins said "no other state institution has as much impact as the University does in Amherst, and a special bill will allow for reinbursement for fire protection."

"Amherst can no longer afford to donate fire service to the University" said Selectman Bouchard. Complete responsibility for providing funds for fire protection now lies with the state legislature.

Chairman Michael Sullivan said there was a definate possibility of billing the University for fire services. As yet, there is no law to permit a fire service charge.

Machmer: a janitor's perspective

By LARRY CARPMAN
Staff Reporter

Remi Fagnant, now 61 years old, was one of the few people who could put his hands into oil 110 degrees hot while working on defense-related projects at the Gilbert Barker Co. That was in Springfield during World War II.

For the past eight years Fagnant has been a janitor in Machmer Hall. There's no hot oil there, and he greets everyone with a seemingly continuous smile.

"I started as a janitor in Morrill Science Building," Fagnant said. "It was the night shift from 4:00 to midnight. Back then in 1968 the pay was $105 for 40 hours."

Fagnant now earns about $150 per week which he believes would not be enough to live on were it not for his second job as a waiter.

"My first job as a waiter was at the Park Square Hotel in Westfield," Fagnant said. He has been waiting on tables on either a full or part time basis since he was 21 years old.

Fagnant, speaking with a slight accent ("My parents were French and my grandmother didn't speak any English at all"), has a large, thick, brown moustache showing signs of graying at the corners of his mouth.

"When I went down the Cape three years ago on my vacation we went to a restaurant and I noticed all the waiters had moustaches," Fagnant said. "So I decided to grow one."

"I've always provided for my family," Fagnant said. "My wife never worked. She takes care of the house."

"For what you have to pay to park your car here I have to work the two jobs," he said while his moustache wiggled with each chuckle.

Fagnant's day begins at 7:00a.m. "First, I have 12 toilets to take care of and keep up," he said. "It's good because there's no pressure--you do your work--and there's nobody after you."

"I do the women's lavatories in the early morning," he said.

Does he get embarassed when he accidently discovers someone in the women's bathrooms?

"I'm too old to get embarassed," he said. Fagnant quickly changed and appeared a little angry. He spoke in short sentences. "Cleaning toilets isn't the most pleasant job," he said. "A lot of people don't flush them. Sometimes the sinks are full of hair too."

He slowed up a little. "You get used to it though," he said. "I didn't like it at first but you get used to it."

Fagnant explained why his job is more difficult within the last several months.

"Ever since they started selling popcorn in the Student Union," he said, "things have gotten harder."

"There's always popcorn along the stairways," Fagnant said. "People are also very careless about their cigarette butts."

Fagnant lives in a two-family home in Holyoke. He makes his 30 to 35 minute drive to campus every morning in his 1972 Oldsmobile Cutless preferring to travel along Route 116 through South Hadley.

"They drive a little crazy on Route 91," he said.

Because of the odd floor arrangement in Machmer Hall (one side of the building has three floors and the other has four) Fagnant finds himself in a different role at the beginning of every Fall semester.

"When the freshmen come in I have to direct traffic," he said explaining how the building is divided into East and West wings.

With the advent of winter Fagnant's job becomes a bit more demanding.

"Whenever it snows I always make sure the stairs and entrances are clear and safe until the grounds crew comes by," he said.

What is Fagnant looking forward to in the future?

"The future? I'm too old to think about the future," he said, as he gave one more of his wide smiles.

Goals explored by Health Council

By LANA FISCHER
Staff Reporter

Getting students involved, improving health services, and keeping them sensitive to students were three of the goals cited by Mark Citron, co-chairman of the Health Advisory Council at their meeting yesterday.

"It's always easier to arouse student reaction to abuses and inadequacies than it is to channel their energies and creative ability to improve and expand the system. That is one of the goals of the SHAB (Student Health Advisory Board)", said Citron to a group of 25 including old and new members.

He said the board, as in the past, will evaluate the progress of health services; one example being the Dental Clinic. He said they will also review confidentiality policies of the health services, devise an expanded campus transportation system that will cover the infirmary, review and rewrite aspects of the supplemental insurance policy. Most important, however, will be the reviewing of the Health Services budget, Citron said.

Barbara Estabrook, a graduate intern in the School of Education, announced that the board will soon be interviewing candidates for a Health Services position.

Kathy Grose, co-chairman of the SHAB, requested applicants for desk jobs at the infirmary working as student representatives who will provide information and act as a go-between for patients and staff at the infirmary.

"I had fun, I really liked doing it", said Kathy about the job, which is a paid position.

Another issue brought up by Citron was the HMO (Health Maintenance Organization). He said the University applied to HEW (Health, Education, and Welfare) for $120,000 to provide a prepaid health plan called the HMO. This plan would offer health services to "student dependents-wives, husbands, and children of students, as well as faculty and staff of the University".

"HMO is not here, it might be here", clarified Diane Wilkinson, a member of the board.

Discussed at the meeting was the controversial issue of DES, an artificial estrogen used during the '40's and '50's to prevent miscarriages, which has recently been shown to be the cause of cancer in the daughters of mothers who used it as well as the mothers themselves.

Misinformation about the drug in the Collegian last spring caused the DES subcommittee of the SHAB to write a pamphlet giving correct information about the drug, said Anne Robinson, a representative of the subcommittee. It will be presented to the board for approval soon.

Jane Zapka, the new liason for the board from the health services staff, announced the offering of a 1-credit seminar entitled "Consumer Participation in Health Program Delivery" by the Public Health Dept. which will cover health services at the University and the U.S. in general.

MDC announces new phone no.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian will have a new main number connecting to all departments beginning Sept. 30, it was announced today by Business Manager Goeff Kurinsky.

The new number will be 545-3500.

Sports, news, advertising and business inquiries should be made to that number.

The number change is necessary because of a modest increase in telephone service to the paper. The service was unavailable on the present lines, Kurinsky said.

Acupuncture arrives in Amherst

by KATHY BECHERT
Staff Reporter

The ancient Chinese art of acupuncture is being used in Amherst today to end addiction to drugs, alcohol, tobacco and food.

Dr. Stuart R. Rose, who graduated from Amherst College in 1960 and received his M.D. from Columbia Medical School, specializes in the use of acupuncture to relieve pain of various disorders and eliminate withdrawal symptoms for addiction patients.

The philosophy that sickness results from imbalance of the chi, or life-force, in the body is rejected by American physicians, but the techniques of pain relief developed by thousands of years experience in China are under serious study and research by American medical scientists.

Dr. Rose emphasized no miracle cures are possible; he treats only the pain while a regular physician treats its underlying cause.

Dr. Rose said there is a serious abuse of alcohol in the Amherst community and feels the new "ear-stapling technique" can be helpful. A sterile stainless-steel staple is inserted in each ear and manipulated by the patient to reduce desire for the drug. The relatively painless insertion ends physical addiction over the period of several weeks to months.

The technique was discovered in Hong Kong by acupuncturists who treated opium addicts for unrelated diseases and found all physical withdrawal symptoms were eliminated. Dr. Rose suggests the treatment be accompanied by counseling to deal with root causes of addiction.

No stringent state licensing standards now exist for acupuncture, and it is not yet a recognized division of the American Medical Association. Because of this the public can be misled by practitioners without proper training.

The National Acupuncture Research Society in New York City, where Dr. Rose received his training, runs workshops in the science for physicians, taught by American doctors. Research is being done to find a medical basis for its effectiveness, not now understood completely. However, psychological or spiritual response of the patient plays a minor role, Dr. Rose said; the physical benefits can occur regardless of state of mind as they are based on long experience and results of Chinese doctors.

Acupuncture can also be helpful in reducing pain of arthritis, headaches, insomnia, tennis elbow, and whenever a patient cannot use regular pain medication, he said.

Anyone interested in this service can consult the Amherst Acupuncture and Research Center at 94 Lessey Street in Amherst.

Congress may not probe CIA

Ford, Kissinger defend CIA to Congressmen

WASHINGTON [UPI] - President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger apparently persuaded congressional leaders yesterday not to press for new controls on covert CIA operations. And one senator's attempt to question Kissinger about the CIA Chilean operations was squashed.

Ford's disclosure that the CIA backed opposition parties and newspapers after the election of the leftist Allende government in 1970 brought a groundswell of congressional demands to restrict CIA activities.

Ford and Kissinger met congressional leaders at the White House for a private review of CIA operations and the legislators emerged with little enthusiasm for deeper congressional involvement in CIA affairs.

Ford described the 90-minute meeting "as a full and frank discussion concerning procedures" relating to CIA clandestine activities, acting press secretary John W. Hushen said. He declined to disclose any details.

Speaker Carl Albert said the President and Kissinger "only reiterated that: A-we did spend certain money on operations to help newspapers; B-That this is a common thing done by other countries; and C-that we had no part in the coup" that toppled Allende.

Albert said Congress should have "some oversight on matters such as these" but he did not push any plan of action.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said his suggestion for a joint congressional committee to oversee the CIA had been discussed but it was not received "with much favor."

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said in a television interview yesterday Ford was advocating "the law of the jungle" in defending the Chilean operation.

Shortly afterward, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee met to hear Kissinger on U.S.-U.S.S.R. detente, and Church clashed with committee chairman, William J. Fulbright, D-Ark., by calling on Kissinger to justify, the Chilean operation.

Church, calling U.S. policy "one of, unfettered intervention in Chile, designed to destabilize a government that had been freely elected," asked Kissinger "How can such a policy be squared with our traditional values of the right of self-determination for other people?"

Fulbright tried to block the questioning on grounds the hearing concerned only detente.

Church said, "I object to this. I want to know how that kind of intervention can be justified by any moral or international law."

Kissinger replied, "The United States has been conducting various kinds of covert operations in the postwar era. The difficulty is that by the very definition of covert operations it is not easy to discuss them publicly."

Kissinger said Allende "systematically set out to establish a one-party system and elimimate all opposition parties and news media."

Fulbright, obviously vexed, told Church he was applying the five-minute rule for questioning but promised a committee hearing on Chile "in due time."

Jaworski calls Nixon as government witness

Nixon cannot be tried on criminal charges for any acts committed during his term in office, he no longer has the legal right to refuse testimony on the fifth amendment grounds of self incrimination.

The Mansfield resolution not only would negate the agreement negotiated on the Presidential materials, but would direct them to be made public. It was only part of a growing clamor in Congress for a full report on Nixon's actions in the Watergate scandal.

It provided that all the White House documents and tapes compiled during the Nixon years would become public property, and all would be made public except those protected by national security.

Under the agreement between Nixon and the White House, the former President would get custody of the material in three years, and would be allowed to destroy them. The agreement provided that the tapes would be destroyed should Nixon die sooner.

Draft evaders seeking amnesty must relinquish several rights

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Draft evaders seeking amnesty must waive several of their constitutional rights and give up the protection from prosecution normally afforded, by the statute of limitations, the Justice Department said yesterday.

Those who fail to satisfy the amnesty program's requirement that they spend up to 24 months in alternate public service will face possible prosecution for their original draft law violations, a department official said.

The terms are much more harsh than those applying to military deserters, who are still subject to martial law and can escape the public service requirement without fear of legal retaliation because of an amnesty program loophole.

The Pentagon said each deserter who asks for amnesty would receive an undesirable discharge from the service - removing him from the reach of military law.

Deserters performing alternate service could later swap the undesirable discharge for a more favorable clemency discharge. But deserters satisfied with the undesirable discharge could ignore the public service requirement without fear of prosecution, a spokesman said.

The Justice Department said one unidentified draft evader in Georgia, who has already served three months in prison, has been accepted in the amnesty program in exchange for 21 months of service. The Pentagon said four deserters already in custody when President Ford announced his offer Monday had been transferred to a "clemency center" at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

But a Defense Department spokesman said not a single deserter had turned himself in since Ford's announcement.

The Justice Department conditions, which apply only to returning draft evaders, are contained in a form prepared for U.S. attorneys.

Draft evaders who sign the form waive the statute of limitations on draft law violations and the constitutional rights to an indictment, a speedy trial and protection from double jeopardy, the Justice Department said.

SOME STRAIGHT TALK ABOUT JEANS FROM THE AREA'S LARGEST JEANS STORE

FADING
Denim can be faded by years of wear, or more quickly by bleaching. Don't throw your jeans and some bleach into an automatic washer though. Instead, fill a bathtub with about 8" of water, mix in about a quart of bleach. Add jeans, turn often, check for color after 30 minutes, remove and wash in soapy water. Sandpapering the knees, seat and seam edges also gives a well worn look.

MAINTENANCE
For the first several washings, launder your new jeans separately or you'll end up with blue under-shirts. A fabric softener and machine drying will make them softer. Strong iron on patches should be applied to any worn areas. After the knees finally pop out, you can cut them off, make a duffle bag or keep them for patches for your new jeans.

10-year-old sanctions may be lifted

OAS ministers discuss end of Cuba embargo

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Organization of American States foreign ministers gathered yesterday to consider erasing one of the last traces of Cold War diplomacy in the Western Hemisphere by lifting the economic and political sanctions imposed against Cuba a decade ago.

Foreign Ministers Gonzalo Facio of Costa Rica and Alberto J. Vignes of Argentina - whose nations have led the move toward removing the Cuban embargo - arranged to open the OAS Council review of the question Monday afternoon.

A third speaker on the program for the first day of the review, which could last through tomorrow, was the foreign minister of Uruguay, Juan Carlos Blanco, whose government was one of six believed to oppose lifting the sanctions.

A majority of the OAS nations were believed to favor restoring normal relations with the Castro regime. The sanctions, applied in 1964, have been a major source of hemispheric controversy in recent years.

The problem appeared one that the Ford administration was eager to solve. Although officially uncommitted on the proposed lifting of the sanctions, Washington's softening attitude toward Cuba was taken to mean the United States would either abstain or vote in favor of lifting the sanctions.

Final action on the question - probably resulting in the lifting of sanctions - was expected in November during a meeting of the foreign ministers of the 23 OAS member states, including the United States, in Quito, Ecuador.

Nazi Party driven from Boston; bullet fired at police post

BOSTON [UPI] — A bullet was fired yesterday through a box on which a policeman had been sitting and it pierced the front door of Jamaica Plain High School, one of 80 Boston schools being desegregated under a federal court order.

In other developments, seven members of the American Nazi party were run out of town and there were several minor scuffles or fist fights between black and white children at a few of the schools.

The City Hall desegregation information center said the rifle shot was fired at a wooden box being used as a chair by Detective Thomas Smith.

Smith, who had left the post briefly, discovered a hole in the box when he returned, center spokesman Dennis Sullivan said. He also discovered a hole in the inner and outer doors of the building.

Fragments of a .30 caliber bullet were recovered, Sullivan said. It was not known if the shot was fired from a passing car.

At the same time police escorted out of state seven persons, including one woman, claiming to be members of the American Nazi Party. The group, dressed in Nazi uniforms, drove through Boston early in the day in a large yellow school bus bearing Virginia plates and displaying signs saying "White Power."

David Duke, director of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, flew to Boston yesterday to announce his group would make Boston the focal point of its fight.

Turkey aid killed

WASHINGTON [UPI]- The Senate voted 64 to 27 yesterday to cut off U.S. military aid to Turkey on grounds it illegally used American weapons in its invasion of Cyprus.

Backers of the proposal said it was almost certain to be killed by Senate and House conferees, but would serve as a warning to the administration and U.S. aid recipients.

Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, D-Mo., author of the cutoff provision, sharply criticized Secretary, of State Henry A. Kissinger, who opposed it.

"Even Secretary Kissinger is not above the law," Eagleton said in an emotional Senate speech.

Syria frees men

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Syria is expected to follow a pattern in the Arab world and not prosecute the three Japanese gunmen who surrendered after holding 11 persons hostage in the French Embassy in The Hague, Middle East observers said yesterday.

More than 25 aircraft hijackers from both the Palestinian guerrilla movement and Japan's Red Army surrendered to Arab Governments in the past 20 months, but none is known to have been punished.

A colleague freed from a French jail also surrendered Wednesday in Damascus after being flown there from The Hague with the three Red Army terrorists.

Would allow access to government files

House panel tentatively passes privacy bill

WASINGTON (UPI) - A House committee tentatively approved a bill yesterday which would allow a person to find out what information about him the federal government has included in its computerized files.

"This is very significant legislation in the field of privacy, which I think is long overdue," said Rep. Bella Abzug, D-N. Y., one of the Government Operations Committee members who pushed the measure.

Increasingly sophisticated computer technology has enabled the government to gather and store personal information without the person's knowledge - possibly endangering his chances of getting employment, insurance or credit, sponsors of the bill said.

To ensure against misuse of the information and that what has been gathered about the individual is accurate, the bill would require the government to allow the individual to review the files kept on him, obtain copies and amend the records if necessary.

Rep. Abzug said she would offer an amendment to tighten the bill when it reaches the House floor to bring it closer in line with a previously passed Senate version.

The House committee version was approved by a 31-0 vote, but it was discovered that a necessary quorum was not present, so the final vote was put off until next week.

At one point in the deliberations when a quorum was present, the panel voted, 18 to 14, to eliminate from the bill a section which would allow the individual to receive punitive damages from the government in any civil suit brought in connection with the measure.

Rep. Paul N. McCloskey, R-Calif., said the deletion was necessary to avoid a conflict with a Freedom of Information bill passed by both houses and nearing agreement in a conference committee closing loopholes in a law requiring the government to divulge certain information upon request.

Hurricane Fifi, with winds up to 130 miles per hour, lashes the coast of Honduras, as shown in this satellite photo. Cuba is in the center of the photo, and Florida is at the top.

Hurricane hits Honduras coast; high waters cause 200 deaths

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (UPI) - Hurricane Fifi, the worst storm to hit, northern Honduras this century, washed away up to 200 lives yesterday while zeroing in on the Guatemala-Belize coast with lethal winds, tides and toreential rains.

Water was the big killer. Honduran authorities said more than 100 bodies had been counted around the city of La Caiba alone, and they estimated 100 others died elsewhere along the coast. Most of the deaths, they said, were due to drowning.

Damage from the storm already was bing counted in the tens of thousands of dollars.

Honduras forms the bottom of L-shaped section of, the Central American coastline, with Guatemala and Belise (formerly British Honduras) strung out along the upright section.

Fifi, while keeping its center over the water, buzz-sawed Northern Honduras on its westward trek through the Caribbean Sea on the way to its landfall.

Forecasters said Fifi had sustained high winds of 110 m.p.h., with gusts hitting 130 m.p.h. Storm tides were running 10-12 feet above normal and torrential rains have been falling in some areas for days.

At 3 p.m. EDT, the storm was centered near latitude 16.3 north, longitude 88.2 west, or about 45 miles northeast of Puerto Barrios, Guatemala and about 50 miles south of Stann Creek, Belize.

"There has been a tendency for the eye of the hurricane to drift a little north of west during the last few hours," the Weather Bureau warned Thursday afternoon. "If this trend continues the center will cross the southern coast of the country of Belize during the next few hours."

Boltwood volunteers meet Sunday

Boltwood-Belchertown will have an orientation this Sunday for all people wishing to work with the residents of the Belchertown State School. Buses will leave from Whitmore Administration Building at noon to take people to the orientation at the school, and return by 6 p.m.

Anyone interested in the program is invited to this introduction to the state school and Boltwood. During the orientation the Director of Belchertown State School will talk about the school and Boltwood's role there.

Student supervisors will explain their various programs and volunteers will get to work with the residents. There will also be a concert by a local rock band.

Brenda Lashway, one of the UMass student supervisors, explained that each supervisor plans a program with a professional supervisor for the unit in which they work. Each unit is a group of residents of similar age or abilities.

She said that volunteers work with these supervisors and are para-professionals - their work is a continuation of what the professional employees do during the day, such as physical or occupational therapy.

People will be available both at the orientation and on the buses to answer any questions about the program.

Wounded Knee: double standard of justice

Russell Means and Dennis Banks spent 8 months in trial for 11 felony charges because of their leadership in the 71 day siege of Wounded Knee, South Dakota. The protest which began in February of 1973, was led by Oglala Sioux people against government misconduct, both federal and tribal. Monday, Judge Nichol, a South Dakota federal judge, dismissed the three remaining charges against Means and Banks on the basis of government misconduct, saying that he was "ashamed the government was not represented better."

Judge Nichol and the jury saw, during the trial, some of the reasons the Wounded Knee siege occurred - partly through evidence, but primarily through the government's actions. Oglala Sioux people siezed Wounded Knee, a village on their reservation with the help of American Indian Movement (AIM) members for a number of reasons. The immediate provocation was the dictatorship of tribal president Dick Wilson, who refused to allow a meeting of the elected tribal council (they were going to vote on his impeachment) and whose goon squad intimidates and harasses traditional Indian people. The siege was also a desperate attempt to call attention to the tragic living conditions under which Indian people are forced to live and to the 371 treaties which the U. S. has made and broken, particularly the Treaty of 1868 with the Sioux people.

Wounded Knee was caused by a corrupt tribal government which diverted tribal funds into personal gain, which employed only Wilson's friends and family, which fired those with differing political views from tribal jobs, which illegally paid people to assault and intimidate AIM members and other political dissidents. And Wounded Knee was caused by a 70 per cent unemployment rate, a child mortality rate 2½ times the national average, a TB rate 10 times the national average, the highest suicide and alcoholism rates in the country, to name only a few inconsistencies with which the natives of the wealthiest land in the world live. And Wounded Knee was caused by the struggle of the Sioux to regain the sacred Black Hills, stolen from them in 1876 by the U. S. government.

When the Means-Banks trial began in January, the defense submitted a 250 page motion to dismiss because of governmental misconduct. After a hearing on the motion which outlines, in part, the dual system of justice in all courts in South Dakota, the military barrage promoted by FBI and U. S. Marshalls against those inside Wounded Knee, the government's mass arrests suffered by supporters of Wounded Knee at the hands of the FBI, and the government's attempt to cover up the murder of AIM leader Pedro Bissonette. At that time Judge Nichol denied that the evidence of illegal actions on the part of the government necessitated dismissal, but as the trial wore on he became aware of many such illigal actions.

A glaring example was the discovery that, contrary to what the Chief U. S. negotiator, Kent Frizzell of the Justice Dept. (then under none other than Richard Kleindienst), told Mark Lane, a defense lawyer, the one phone in Wounded Knee was tapped illegally by the FBI. After a 6 week hearing on a motion to dismiss, Judge Nichol allowed the trial to continue, saying he had "come within a gnat's eyelash" of dismissing the case.

The government, though it spent six months putting on witnesses, failed to prove the case and Judge Nichol dismissed all but 5 charges for lack of evidence. After defense witnesses who testified about conditions on the reservation, including harassment by federal agents, and about the treaty history of the Sioux, the government introduced the witness designed to prove everything, Louis Moves Camp, a supposed defector from AIM. Moves Camp managed to blame Means and Banks not only for what they were charged with, but for conspiring during Wounded Knee with communists from such countries as the USSR, China, West Germany, East Germany, Italy and Czechoslovakia to get arms, supplies and money.

When Attorney William Kunstler showed the absurdity of this story, an argument developed which resulted not only in Kunstler and Lane being thrown in jail, but AIM leader Clyde Bellecourt was hit by a U. S. Marshall, and another leader Marshall, as well as all the spectators, were maced by a third Marshall. The defense then showed specific instances where Moves Camp lied, and motives for it: he faced 5 federal charges at the time and that a woman had charged him with rape while he was in the custody of the FBI and then had been dissuaded from pressing charges. Judge Nichol also found that Assistant U. S. Attorney, R. D. Hurd had lied to him regarding the charges against Moves Camp, and said that the new information had "put him over the brink."

Certainly the claim of Indian people that there exists a dual system of justice in America has been proven: If Watergate was a lesson that the government is fraught with corruption and deceit, then Wounded Knee can only be more conclusive proof: Gerald Ford grants unconditional amnesty to a man who committed grievous crimes against both the American people and peoples of the world and yet he allows prosecutions to continue against people who have stood up against that corruption and deceit.

Vets respond

To The Editor:

The Veterans' Coalition, charged with the representation of 2400 veterans at the University of Massachsetts, deplores the recent actions of the President offering conditional amnesty to those individuals who chose to resist military activity during the Viet Nam era. We judge that war to have been not only immoral, but of questionable constitutional legality. All those who declined participation on these grounds should be granted amnesty without equivocation.

Though we applaud the President's efforts to "bind the nations wounds", we feel that unconditional amnesty would be a more effective suture. In his September 16 proclamation, Ford stated that desertion and failure to respond to the draft were "serious offenses". We therefore ask the President, should the alleged committmet of such serious offenses be the grounds for being denied unqualified pardon?

Was it a serious offense for the former President and other officers of government to be involved in the obstruction of justice or the abuse of power? Was it a serious offense for the government of the United States to support a series of questionable non-Democratic regimes in South Viet Nam at a cost of billions of dollars, and thousands of lives? Was the involvement of the CIA in the subversion of the democratically elected government of Chile, a serious offense?

Hindsight proves appropriate, those judgements of conscience enacted by citizens who avoided participation in our military efforts in Viet Nam. The Veterans' Coalition for community affairs does not feel that their acts constitute a "serious offense" against neither the laws nor the people of the U.S.

We therefore ask the President's review of this matter.

To the Editor:

I wish to respond to your September 18 article on the International Programs Office. I first want to say that the problems identified in the article are a rather thin basis for the accusations in the article. Barbara Burn and her staff are deeply involved in making it possible for hundreds of UMass students to participate in foreign educational experiences each year under a great variety of programs. The job of bringing these opportunities into existence and keeping them alive is an exceedingly time consuming and delicate challenge. It is necessary to work across cultural lines with substantial distances between those making the arrangements which creates the opportunity for many slips in communication and implementation of plans. The number of successful on-going programs and the number of enthusiastic returned students attest to the ability and dedication of Ms. Burn and her staff.

In all programs involving cross cultural arrangements, there are sure to be minor irritations and adjustments in well made arrangements. In addition, arrangements which seem perfectly satisfactory within the host culture may seem deficient or unsatisfactory to the visitor who goes expecting everything to be like home. I must agree with one quotation in the article "She didn't prepare me at all for Italy." Clearly these three students were unprepared but whether this was the responsibility of Ms. Burn, the faculty program director, or the students themselves is open to question. One of the responsibilities of FISC is to insure that these programs run smoothly and one positive thing which will come from this article is a new review of the orientation for these programs [such a review was completed three years ago].

This letter is meant to be a strong endorsement of the work of the International Programs Office and expresses the conviction that UMass is unusually fortunate in having Ms. Burn as the Director of this Office.

This is a personal reaction to your article but I plan to ask FISC if it wishes to make an official statement at our first meeting on September 30.

Atkins says thanks

To the Editor:

I wish by this open letter to thank the many voters of Amherst and South Hadley who took the initiative to place my stickers on the September 10 primary ballot. Such grass roots support is most gratifying in a day when public opinion of government has never been lower.

It is most important that we do not give up and allow incumbents to be unopposed. The need for open and honest discussion of issues has never been so vital. Public trust in the honesty and integrity of those elected to represent them is essential. My farm experience also reminds me of the importance of having faith to start over when set back by adverse conditions.

Because of your support, I can now pledge to continue in this effort.

Sincerely yours;
William C. Atkins

To smoke or not to smoke

"I have never smoked in my life and look forward to a time when the world will look back with amazement and disgust to a practice so unnatural and offensive. To employ idle hours men could knit as women do."
—George Bernard Shaw

Ah, yes dear friends, the issue of smoking has reached new heights this year — and if you think all us good minded liberals here at UMass had fun preaching apocalypse when the Surgeon General first opened his learned mouth, just think of what fun we're having now with the "new awareness" issues of public smoking and the effects of smoke on the non-smoker.

Since the beginning of the semester alone this ever vigilant reporter has had the opportunity to observe many members of the campus community applying their newfound consciousness like well spread fertilizer all over campus. Here are a few examples of the types of people you'll meet and the basic rap they'll lay on you:

HERBIE HORRIFIED: This dude is more than likely someone you're on relatively friendly terms with. The first time you light anything except a joint near him PCR (Post Consciousness Raising) a feeling of horror will permeate the air. If the feeling of discomfort isn't enough to make you stow your Lark pack he'll go into something resembling the following: "Heyyy, man, I don't wanna hassle you too much, but don't you know that shit's killing me? By the way, you wanna get high before Food Science?"

PRISCILLA PISSEDOFF: She's a person with a cause — making you uncomfortable. At the first sign of tobacco within a five mile radius of her presence you'll hear a loud bellow that signifies the beginning of the day's sermon. "Don't you have any consideration for anybody? Don't you know that your childish oral fetish is endangering the life of every living thing near here? Just where do you get off stomping on everyone's rights with such reckless abandon?" And if you have the bad fortune of being a male, she'll add that what you're doing is just another manifestation of the "male syndrome."

NICK TEEN: A dyed in the wool 2 pack a day men who realizes what he's doing to himself but can't stop. If he runs into either Herbie or Priscilla he's likely to go into a wild, paranoid orgy of screaming two inches from the face of his tormentor, claiming that his rights as a citizen are being violated if he can't give cancer to everyone near him. Favorite phrase: "It's a free country." Favorite facial expression: obstinate (see picture of George Wallace blocking schoolhouse door.)

In the interest of equal time, it's only fair to mention here that some professors are guilty of equal amounts of absurdity when it comes to the smoking issue. Yes, professors can be as assinine as students (more, you say? Student consciousness is on the rise.). From what I can see, there are three basic types.

NERVOUS NED - Doesn't want people smoking in class but is afraid to say this. Can be seen in late August posting No Smoking signs in all his classrooms. When school starts and an unsuspecting student attempts to light up he sheepishly points to the sign and says "Sorry, but they (the sign makers, we assume) make the rules, I don't." If you watch closely, you'll see him throwing out the "Please take your tray to the busing station" sign on his table in the Hatch so that he won't have to clean his table. Or is he just anti-busing?

LOUISE LIBERAL - Spends three hours drawing an artsy, flowery poster for class that says "Be kind to the environment and your fellow people - please don't smoke." Hasn't taken a bath in four months in order to be "close to the earth" but doesn't seem to realize that she is raising the classroom pollution index 10 points. Her apartment in Puffton looks "lived in." She was forced to file an environmental impact statement on it earlier this year. Eats lunch once a week in the Hatch with Nervous Ned (they're secret lovers.)

TERRY TENURE - Encourages smoking in class. After first five minutes of lecture the smoke is thick enough so that he can sleep and not be noticed. Class doesn't notice lack of lecture since they're all well into the latest Lampoon or this column by then. Can be distinguished about campus by his twelve year old Cadillac convertible and picture in the Collegian chairing Faculty Senate meetings.

It would be unfair to leave you here without a word of advice on how to deal with these people. This, too, can be divided into two categories:

IF YOU SMOKE - Avoid Herbie. Swear at Priscilla. Sneak a cig between classes with Nick. Beat Ned. Burn Louise. Sign up for Terry's course (Obfustication 390).

IF YOU DON'T SMOKE - Get high with Herbie. Swear at Priscilla. Berate Nick. Lay a dirty look on Ned as he leaves his table in the Hatch. Write graffiti on Louise's poster. Sign up for Terry's course.

And remember - Zig-Zag alone is NOT enough.

Conflict of cultures

Gideon B. Ariel is the sinner of the century. The conflicts that he and his associates have come into obscure some questions about what is wrong.

The group of professors involved seems to be highly competitive and qualified for the jobs they are performing, and Gideon seems to to be a person who has met most of the requirements to suceed in a free enterprise society, however something is still wrong.

Talking to Gideon I founded that he grew up in a kibbutz in Israel. Nothing is wrong with that. However when he talked about the socio-economic structure of the kibbutz, the same points came out, when he talks about his research, the CBA company and the machine that he invented or that he was one of the most important persons involved in the creation of it; the indifference of making a big profit of it. The kibbutz was different than the society in which Gideon is living now; especially in socio-economic philosophics.

Gideon Ariel is a man of two cultures

In the kibbutz all the properties were share among the members and the pressures to gain more money were not a characteristic of it. He calls that type of socialistic socio-economic structure "pure socialism".

Around ten years ago, he got the opportunity to come to study in he United States, which Dr. Ariel calls "the greatest nation in the world", however the respect that he shows to the American Nation, he seems to be fighting a dualism of economic systems within himself. He remarked at various times the research that he had to carry out with different private companies across the country, did not make a profit for him.

He is aware too, of the fact that more than 13 countries had reprinted in different languages, some of his scientific researdh publications. (52 in English).

The trouble with his collegues seems to be the difference of philosophies of two different economical systems. On one side the mental cybernetics of Gideon is tied to the philosophies of the kibbutz, and on the other side is the fact that he is living in a society, in which money seems to be the bonds and blood.

Does Dr. Ariel completely understand the free enterprise system? Is he throwing away the opportunities of using his intelligence, in a free enterprise system, to become millionaire? He emphasized the fact that money is not so important to him. Seems to be that in many societies in the world, despite the fact, that a country could be labeled as one in which the free enterprise is a modus vivonde, there exists many groups which socio-economic structures are socialist.Therefore, when living in an environment in which the accumulation of personal profit is the bases of society, a conflict begins. Obviously, the syncronization of ideas would be the solution. Who can say that Gideon is wrong because he has not achieved an understanding of the nature of the free enterprise system? His innumerable works in bio-mechanics and other scientific areas are witnesses of his enormous input in that scientific field, that obviously will bring a better future for humanity. (He lectured in Hungary, even to the fact, that a country doesn't maintain diplomatic relations with Israel, or give passports to Israelie citizens).

And I wonder, if the man that has created a machine using the cybernetics of human muscles, cybernetize and syneronize his mental concepts of the kibbutz, with his 10 years of experience in a free enterprise country? In any case, I believe that Gideon B. Ariel, is going toward a NOBEL PRIZE.

Prison reform

By MARK SHEEHAN

In recent years there has been a great deal of exposure given to prison riots and violence in the media. This exposure led to a lot of talk about prison reform but next to nothing has been done in this area. Guard cruelty, drugs, illegal withdrawal of the rights of inmates, and poor facilities are facts of prison life that are all too well known. Also inaction on state and federal levels in light of these facts is as well known.

Part of the problem of governmental inactivity is the lack of any feasible plan or course of action that can come to grips with the problems the existence of prisons in America poses. This can be further understood when the purpose of prisons in themselves is examined. What are prisons for? Why is the rate of recividism so high? What happens to men in prison and what will befall them when they leave? Before these and similar questions are given thorough, complete answers no meaningful prison reform can be initiated.

Here lies the main point. Without a grasp of the purpose and function of prisons and the judicial system they are a part of no meaningful action can be undertaken. This means that law enforcement agencies, the courts, and penal institutions should be examined as a whole. Again questions arise. Should prisons punish or reform? As they exist now can they do only one at the exclusion of the other? Topics along these lines need study if the basic perspectives of government officials and prison authorities are to be changed and legislation passed to bring reforms about. Emotional rhetoric that exhorts us to tear down prison walls and free inmates because the system is unjust and inequitable or those that claim criminals are treated softly by the courts and should be locked up forever avoid the fundamental issue. Prisons exist now and will probably remain as a fixture of our society in the future. What is needed is an examination of the judicial system that tries men and sends them to prison in the first place. The laws enforced and the sentences given to those who violate those laws have as much to do with prison reform as the policies and conditions under which prisons are run. A prison system oriented towards rehabilitation cannot be effective if judgments and sentences are given unjustly. Laws as well must run parallel to the social needs and mores of a society if the interest of the community are to be served.

It can be seen that concern about prison reform cannot be restricted to prisons themselves. The judicial system with its predicates, laws, courts, and finally prisons must be subjected to scathing analysis before action in the way of reform can be taken. Reform of the prisons, both state and federal, will come about only through positive action done as a result of that analysis.

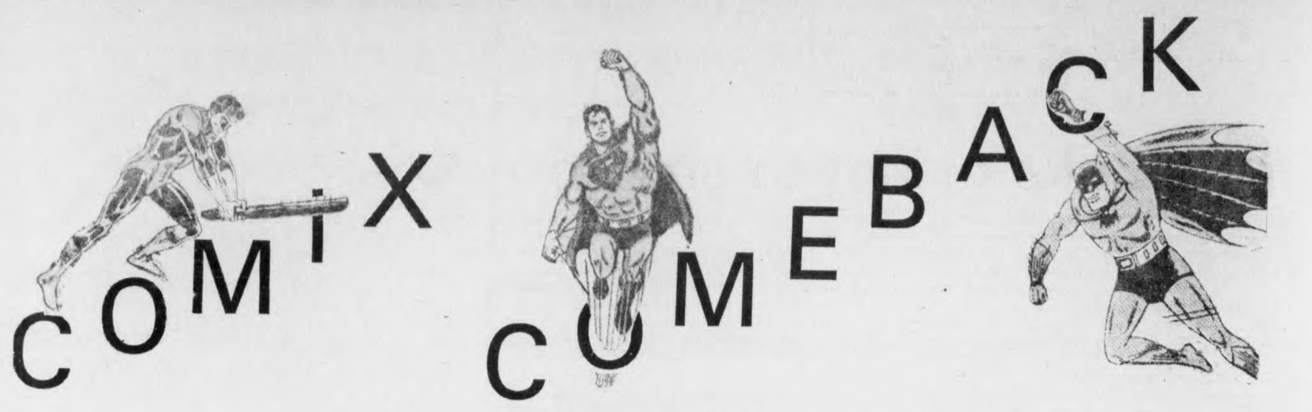
COMIX COMEBACK



C O M I X
C O M E B A C K

by Sherman Boyson

"In brightest day, in blackest night,
No evil shall escape my sight.
Let those who worship evil's might,
Beware my power - Green Lantern's Light!"

Ring pressed to the invisible power battery, masked face pledging the ominous words, and Green Lantern was charged up for another twenty-four hours to battle crime and save the universe from unknown menaces.

That's the kind of stuff you read as a junior high jerk. Kneeling at the bottom of the magazine rack, you read every comic in sight, until the owner came around the told you "This isn't a library, kid". While he watched your every move, you picked the three best of the bunch, gave the man his thirty-six cents, and went home.

Comic books are something you were supposed to leave behind with Barbie and Ken, and G. I. Joe. Anyone over thirteen had to mumble something about a sick brother at home while buying one. But comic books are having a revival with college students. Students are buying them in the university store, and aren't taking a bag to hide them in.

Whether the defeat of McCarthy and McGovern is driving them back to fantasy worlds of their childhood, or the comic is becoming a form of class literature is unknown. What is known is the Fantastic Four, Superman, and Spiderman are big again. Augie's Smokeshop in downtown Amherst estimates they sell 1,000 comics a week, the majority to students.

Comics have changed an awful lot since the days your mother told you they would ruin your mind. Old heroes are being revived, and the regulars are being revamped.

If you haven't read a comic in a while, you might not recognize your old favorite. Superman finally told Lois Lane he loved her, and sent Lana Lang into obscurity. He doesn't worry about Kryptonite anymore, since a freak accident destroyed all there was.

Captain America got disgusted with Washington and Watergate and dumped the crime fighting routine. He came back, of course, but with a new name and costume, and without his trusty shield.

The increase in college readership has brought a new type of hero to the comic fold. Before it was the hero that was bizarre and the setting that was normal. Now the situation is reversed.

Kimandi, created by the immortal Jack Kirby, is set in a world where men are animals and animals are men. It's a spinoff of Planet of the Apes, except it is not just apes. It's tigers, dolphins, and even grasshoppers.

Conan the Barbarian, based on the Robert Howard story, is a never-fail good guy, making gory path across a medieval world filled with sorcery and monsters.

DC is currently finding success in reviving old heroes popular in the forties and fifties. Captain Marvel, Superman's old rival from Fawcett Publications, now flies again under the same publisher as Superma. is ironic that DC should publish Captain Marvel since it was DC who forced the big red cheese out of print in a copyright war.

The old pulp magazine and radio great once again knows what evil lurks in the hearts of men. Set in the forties, The Shadow is enjoying a big popularity with the college population. As always, the Shadow never fails, even in sales.

The most unusual hero of all is probably the Spectre, an omnipotent ghost who rids the earth of the stench of evil. His victims are the lowest of criminals, those with no value for life. The Spectre plays judge, jury, and executioner to such scum. Showing no mercy, he turns them to sand, slices them with gigantic scissors, or any other horrid death imaginable. Nothing but death awaits those who battle the Spectre.

One thing in comics is still the same: DC and Marvel are still battling it out for the number one spot. DC has the edge in the sales war because of a better foreign market for their mags, but Marvel is more popular with the students.

In the old days Marvel called DC "Brand X", while Marvel was known as "Brand I". They use their real names now, but the competition is still fierce. DC pulled off the coup of the century when it lured Joe Simon and Jack Kirby away from Marvel.

Marvel hasn't been sitting by, though. They enticed Len Wein, the creator of the award winning Swamp Thing, to join his wife at Marvel.

The two competitors still try to copy the other's ideas. In the sixties Marvel's X-Men, with their wheelchair confined Professor X, had a strange resemblance to DC's Doom Patrol, whose Chief was similarly confined.

The present copy war is in the swamp creature department. Marvel's Man-Thing and DC's Swamp Thing both rose out of the swamp at the same time. DC claims first thought, but no one denies them top quality. The book won an armload of Shazams, the Oscars of comic books.

College students wanting to get into the comic book market will find it very discouraging. Bill Mantlo, a production assistant at Marvel, estimates they receive 50 unsolicited manuscripts a day. "There is no time to read them" he explains, "so only the really impressive ones get noticed."

Garage rates stable

By MARIAN PROKOP
Special Correspondent

Despite rising prices for most facilities on campus, the cost of parking a car in the Campus Center garage will remain the same as last year.

According to Don Witkoski, manager of the six level garage, parking will continue to be 25 cents for one hour, 50 cents for two hours, and a maximum of $2 for a 24 hour period.

The only exception is the price for a book of 30 tickets for parking on the sixth level which has risen from $15 to $18 a month for 12 hours of parking per day.

Witkoski adds that long term rates will continue at $9.95 per month.

Controversy will mark debates

By DAVID KOWAL
Special Correspondent

The Public Debate Program, in an effort to make itself community oriented, will debate in prisons, high schools, and service clubs throughout the year. Controversial issues such as energy, amnesty, bussing, hiring quotas, and genetic experimentation will be debated.

The first meet will be at East Hampton H.S., on Oct. 9. Attending the event will be the two teams of David O'Brien and Paul Gosselin, and Jill Peltin and Norton Brainard.

Other debates for October include Weymouth H.S., Groton H.S., and Tewksbury H.S.

In order to make the program community oriented, Prof. Ronald J. Matlon, director of debate, is coordinating a series of debates with the Berkshire House of Corrections to allow the prisoners a chance to debate with members of the PDP.

Michael McCambridge, the new director of the PDP, is partially responsible for this idea. Mr. McCambridge is a graduate of Ohio University, and is presently a graduate student in the Communication Studies Dept. Mr. McCambridge says, "I enjoy live audience, reality oriented situations." He has participated in ferensic programs since high school

Mini-forest planted for more than looks

By ELIZABETH CORELL
Special Correspondent

"The 27 varieties of trees and shrubs surrounding the University Library were planted this summer to provide aesthetics and form a wind screen effect for passers-by," says William A. Lambert, campus landscape architect.

"The new forest is also an educational center for identification of tree and rhododendron species."

While Edward Stone, the library architect, had had dogwood trees included in the blueprints for the new library, Lambert told MDC he decided to expand on the original plans, this summer.

Lambert says he believes that students are more relaxed when surrounded by trees.

"Students won't destroy beauty."

Lab fee linked to budget cuts

By MARK BACKER
Special Correspondent

The necessity for charging a $5.00 lab fee for creative writing classes at UMass is viewed as a direct effect of more budget cutbacks, by Dr. Don Junkins, director of the MFA program of the English Dept.

"Charging a lab fee is a way of creating an avenue of money in a day of legislative cuts."

Pointing out that until two years ago, the English Dept. could "easily get material xeroxed for its creative writing students," Junkins said this money is not now available, resulting in a minimum charge of $4.00 per semester to continue the xeroxing.

"A stop-gap measure," he said. "Virtually, the students are creating their own texts for the class, comparable to other writing books which would cost the same."

After his return this Fall from a year-long Sabbatical, Junkins said he was "not surprised" to learn that the lab fee had become standard practice. Its rise from $4.00 to $5.00 per semester reflects that text books have also risen in price over the period of a year, he said.

"You can justify almost anything," Junkins said, referring to the lab fees. He added that students actually should not be expected to contribute their own class material, but that the practice would undoubtedly continue until more money is found for the English Dept.

Everywoman's Center offers series of workshops

Everywoman's Center is now offering its seventh Project Self series of over forty workshops. The number of workshops available this fall reflects the tremendous growth in the numbers of people wanting to facilitate workshops and numbers of women interested in taking them.

Started three years ago by a few local women volunteering their time, the Project Self workshop program has emerged as a unique learing opportunity for close to a thousand area residents. It's important to remember that it all started back in 1971 with Lois Phillips and Joan Engel, two area women, who arranged for a phone and desk space through U. Mass. Continuing Education to make a survey of the educational needs of women in the Valley.

They discovered that many women don't need or want a college degree, but do need individualized counseling and educational programs to support new directions and changes in their lives. Some of the changes that many women feel unprepared to make alone are: going back to work; raising a family alone; moving to a new area; and growing older.

Lois and Joan, with Continuing Education's encouragement, organized eight experimental workshops for women that first year. In the Fall of 1972, the University provided space and some salary to continue this work. That space was named Everywoman's Center, and the Center's first official program was a greatly expanded Project Self workshop series.

While the administrative details and content have changed somewhat over the last three years, some basic principles continue to shape and direct Project Self and account for its effectiveness. Primary among these is the importance of women sharing aspects of their lives with other women.

Workshop facilitators are selected not only for their expertise in a field but also for their understanding of what it means to be a woman, and how that connects with the workshop subject matter. In a workshop in Aikido and Women, for example, that might mean recognizing and talking about how and why most women lack muscular development and are afraid to hurt or be hurt.

Sharing with other women also means drawing on each other's experiences. The facilitator is not the only "expert" in a workshop. Participants in the Women in Literature sessions compare their lives to those of fictional characters and discuss how true-to-life partrayals are. What made one participant say her workshop last spring was "one of the highlights of the year" for her was simply meeting and sharing informally with other women around a common topic, validating the "expertise" of each one while support for growth and change was provided.

The workshops offered this fall include Women in Local Politics, Effective Public Speaking, Photography, Dance, Painting, Frame Loom Weaving, Women in American History and many, many more. Workshops will meet on the University campus for sixteen hours over an eight week period.

Registration is by mail or in person from Sept. 23 to Oct. 15. Workshops will begin the week of Oct. 21. The Project Self brochure is available at Everywoman's Center located in Goodell Hall, or EWC will mail brochures if interested people call 545-0883.

Everywoman's Center fall hours are Monday through Friday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Wednesdays 1 p.m. till 8 p.m.

Dance Concert is set for Sept. 26 opening

The UMass Concert Dance Group and the University Dancers under the direction of Marilyn V. Patton, will present their annual fall concert on September 26, 27, and 28 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Advanced reserve tickets are available at the Fine Arts Council Box Office in Herter Hall. The performance will begin promptly at 8 p.m. and late comers will not be seated until the first interval.

The concert will present a program of new choreography by students and faculty which will include a diversity of dance styles.

Andrea Watkins will perform both a solo, "Rain, Water, and other Containers", and a group comedy. Another dance, "Hoedown for Uncle Dunk", choreographed by Bruce Smith, is a lively interpretation of the square dance.

A trio by Jean Ida Hoffman will deal with two concepts — the release from conventions and tensions and the juxtaposition of sound and movement to form a balance where the two join to create the absurd.

Janice Schlieger will perform a solo, "Circles and Sounds." Richard Jones will perform a dramatic ballet, "Flash Back", which is based on the book, "Occurance at Owl Creek Bridge."

Twenty UMies remain dormless

By JANE HOLZAPFEL
Special Correspondent

The 80 students residing at the Campus Center Hotel for the past two weeks aren't there because they're independently wealthy.

The number is down to 20 now, and there are numerous reasons for students being put into the hotel, according to Roger Cruff, Assistant Director of the newly created Residential Life Department.

These causes range from last minute returning students, those being forgotten by Housing completely, to students holding out for their preferred dorm and not getting in anywhere.

Cruff stated that it costs around $5 per night to maintain the students in the Campus Center Hotel, as compared to about $3 per night to stay in the dorms--the exact price depending on the particular dorm.

The extra money needed to maintain the students in the hotel comes from the Residential Life funds, which also covers the upkeep of the Dining Commons and dormitories. This means, however, there are less funds for these other areas.

Cruff also stated that wherever possible, the students are given a room in the living area of their choice.

The staff of the Residential Life Department aid students in the physical move. Those who are currently in the hotel are expected to be in their dorm room by week's end.

Belchertown offers tour for volunteers

This Saturday, buses will be leaving from Haigis Mall, in front of Whitmore, for Belchertown State School.

Belchertown Volunteers are people who spend Saturday afternoons engaged in various activities with the residents of the School. In the past these activities have included UMass football games, seasonal parties, and a spaghetti dinner, all held on the UMass campus.

Afternoon activities on the State School grounds have consisted of ball games, sledding, and all types of indoor activities; this year an arts and crafts program, and organized outdoor-indoor activities will be implemented.

People willing to give a few hours a week for the benefit of others are urged to attend an orientation and tour of Belchertown State School this Saturday. Buses leave Whitmore (Haigis Mall) at 12:45 and return to campus by 4:00. Call Ann or Jean, 253-2722 for information.

Spaces exist in peripheral parking lots

by GERRY CATALDO
Special Correspondent

Parking spaces in the three peripheral parking lots are still available, according to a University Parking Office spokesman. All vehicles parked on campus must be registered and assigned a lot number by Sept. 30.

The cost of parking permits for the peripheral or "P" lots is five dollars. Applications are available at the Parking Office, 103 Hampshire House, from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily.

Phonebooks delayed

By JUDY STUDLEY
Special Correspondent

The 25,000 Student Telephone Directories, that were to have been delivered in early September, will be distributed on October 4, according to the Student Affairs Office. The printing was halted earlier this month due to a shortage of paper.

In past years, tentative student directories were ready for students during the first week of September. The final book would then arrive in October, thus eliminating much of the confusion which had marked the early weeks of this semester.

Glass fibers may blow in Whitmore air

By DAN LABONTE
Special Correspondent

Warning! Breathing in Whitmore may be hazardous to your health! The air conditioning unit may still be carrying glass fibers through the system, according to Gary Gagnon, a state construction worker involved in repairing the unit.

Gagnon said that pressure, created by air moving at 1,200 cutf/ min, tore much of the fiberglass insulation (protected only by a water base sealer) off the main duct, allowing it to be carried through the system and eventually clog the smaller vents.

He estimates that the University is paying over $20,000, much of it in overtime labor, to have the faulty insulation resealed and covered with wire mesh to prevent a recurrence of the incident.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Begin late in the morning to make this a weekend of rest and relaxation. Don't insist on catching up on chores left undone.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Promote your own ideas this morning; you can leave others to fend for themselves at this time. Reconsider your opinion of another's work.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) —Good fortune attends whatever you engage in today. You may be tempted to despair over younger family members' notions — but think again!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) —The wise Sagittarius will spend whatever time he must to put his own house in order. Only then may he complain of the way others live.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) —So long as you can meet your obligations with efficiency, you should be able to make headway today. You may be elevated to a top spot on the home front.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) —So long as you can lend effective aid to another, you need not fear being left out of the proceedings. Important issues begin now to evolve quickly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) —Material matters may require your attention early in the day — but you should save afternoon hours for a matter of spiritual development.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) —A recent invention may not serve you as well as you had hoped. Don't deny yourself the pleasure of another's company late in the day.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) —You should be able to make quick progress with at-home chores this morning. Use the afternoon for joint family projects.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) —Join with neighbors in a community project. Now is an excellent time to prove your ability to lead to those who may have had their doubts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) —Hold as well as you can to routine chores today. New projects may appear more interesting than they will prove to be in the long run.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Clear away all obstacles to progress in establishing a personal relationship. You should have considerable leisure time at evening; use it well.

Youth brightens Sox future

By MIKE BERGER
MDC Sports Staff

OK, Red Sox antagonists. You can start complaining about the lack of hitting and inconsistent pitching and carp about bringing back Orlando Cepeda and Luis Aparicio. But I tell you that the Red Sox are in the best possible condition for years to come.

First of all, I admit that their lack of hitting might cost them the pennant this year. However, a deeper reason for their losing the pennant this year might be the inconsistency of their younger players.

Young players from their rookie year to three years in the league tend to get down on themselves when they are in a slump and tense up too much in pressure games. A prime example of this was the current Red Sox slump which saw them lose 8 straight and first place in the Eastern division of the American League.

Yet one cannot blame the manager for their losing streak. In fact, my vote goes to Darrell Johnson for manager of the year. He has developed the younger players both mentally and in learning the basics of the game. He sufficiently used his veteran ball players to steady the team and has wisely utilized the injury prone pitching staff.

One example of the "Johnson style" that has proved successful is the utilization of the entire 25 man squad. Johnson often alternates his lineup every day keeping his men fresh and not letting anyone go stale on the bench

As a result of this strategy, the Red Sox have the best young talent in the American League and possibly in the majors. For years the Red Sox farm teams have produced little. All that changed this year.

Their problems at shortstop have ended. Rick Burleson might become "Rookie of the Year" and Mario Guerrero has proved that he can handle the shortstop position. Dwight Evans has all the tools to become the complete ballplayer for the team. Rick Miller, Cecil Cooper, and Juan Beniquez have improved tremendously and will consistently help this team in the future. Tim Blackwell, the replacement for the injured Carlton Fisk and a virtual unknown, has demonstrated his ability to become a dependable and valuable catcher.

Darrell Johnson's handling of pitchers Luis Tiant, Rogelio Moret, Bill Lee, and Dick Drago have made them into winning pitchers. But the future of the team lies in the continued development of pitchers Dick Pole, Steve Barr, and Mark Bomback.

A very serious problem earlier this year was just getting 4 pitchers into a weekly rotation. This was due to the slow start of Tiant, Reggi Cleveland, Bob Veale, and the year long medical problems of Juan Marichal and Rick Wise. With the telephone numbers of Boston City Hospital in one hand and Mass. General in the other, it is possible to see why Darrell Johnson might have ulcers and migraine headaches.

All in all the outlook for the next two-three years appears optimistic. So you Red Sox critics should wait a year before demanding for Darrell Johnson's resignation and trying to trade half the team. A shake up like this would be a tragic blow to Red Sox pennant hopes for future years.

Bing faces suspension

YPSILANTI, MICH. [UPI] — Detroit General Manager Ed Coil threatened to suspend Dave Bing and trade Don Adams after they failed to report with veteran teammates when the Pistons opened training camp yesterday.

The remaining veterans checked in on schedule for the start of twice-daily drills at Eastern Michigan University, where the National Basketball Association team trains.

Bing, the Pistons' star guard and sixth leading scorer among active NBA players, will be suspended without pay unless he reports at midnight, Coil said, and fined $250 for every practice he misses.

The Pistons are checking to see if any other NBA team has an interest in Adams, who Coil said, is seeking a salary hike. Adams, a forward, is without a contract.

Bing, who with center Bob Lanier paced the Pistons to their first playoff berth last season since 1968, is attempting to renegotiate some points on the last two legs of the three-year contract he signed last season.

The Pistons, Coil said, have a policy of not reopening contracts. Bing averaged 18.8 points per game last season while Adams contributed 10.3 points to the club total.

SMU gets athletes admitted

DALLAS [UPI] — Southern Methodist University has allowed athletes who did not meet the school's admission requirements to be admitted anyway under a special policy.

School officials said the athletes apparently met the high school grade average required by the NCAA but did not meet higher SMU admission standards required of other students.

Dr. Harold Jesky, former chairman of the SMU faculty athletic committee, said the special admissions have not been limited to athletes but also have applied to minorities, artists or others "who have a special talent."

Sixty-seven students have been admitted to SMU under the special policy during the last four years, according to reports from the faculty athletic committee.

Jesky said that the athletes, mostly football players, admitted under the special policy did not meet SMU's required scores on the college entrance exams or were academically in the lower half of their graduating class.

A faculty senate committee is studying the policy.

SMU is currently on probation in both bootball and basketball for violating NCAA rules.

NCAA powerhouses heavily favored

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

This is one of those rare weeks, usually occurring only early in the season, when the nation's college powerhouses can concentrate more on their image than striving to survive.

In other words, a lot of lopsided scores can be anticipated on Saturday as the big powers seek to better their national ranking.

Top-ranked Ohio State, not overly impressive in a 34-19 victory over Minnesota last Saturday, hopes to make it all up this week when it debuts at home against Oregon State. The Buckeyes are favored by a whopping 35 points even though Pete Cusick, their star defensive tackle, suffered a hyper-extension of his left knee during practice.

Notre Dame, No. 2 in the ratings, is on the road for the second consecutive week but still is favored by 31 points over Northwestern. Wildcat Coach John Pont concentrated on pass blocking and kicking in Wednesday's workout and he said, "We still have some hard work ahead of us. Our major concern is still the multiple offense and defense used by Notre Dame."

Third-ranked Alabama is off the board for its home opener against the University of Southern Mississippi in a night game, No. 4 Nebraska is picked by 17 points at Wisconsin and fifth-ranked Michigan is favored by 20 points at home against Colorado.

Alabama had to struggle before securing a 21-16 victory over Maryland last week while Southern Mississippi allowed only 57 yards rushing in upsetting Memphis State, 6-0. But the tide came out of the struggle at College Park in good physical shape and is looking for a repeat performance from sophomore Calvin Culliver, who gained 169 yards rushing and scored two touchdowns, one on a 73-yard run.

"Southern has its typical club," said Alabama coach Bear Bryant. "They are a real physical team with a lot of size and some backs that scare you. And they have that quarterback (Jeff Bower) who did so well against us as a freshman two years ago. We will have to play well — better than last week — if we expect to win."

Bower, a 6-1, 180-pound junior, hit on 10 of 12 aerial attempts against Memphis State for 137 yards and one touchdown.

Nebraska routed Oregon 61-7 last week and would seem ready to end the Euphoric Atmosphere at Wisconsin, which got off to a grand start by beating Purdue, 28-14. Michigan also looks like it has too much for Colorado although quarterback Dennis Franklin was hospitalized earlier in the week with a low white blood count and probably won't be ready to play Saturday.

Desegregation and sports

By RICH SEVIERI

With rocks and lead pipes in hand, they spilled onto the median strip chanting their team's football cheer, "Here we go Southie, Here we go."

There were no footballs in the air, or games being played on the Columbia Road median on this day. The footballs were replaced by bricks and bottles, and the playing replaced by naked hatred. Court ordered school desegration had come to South Boston.

So what has this got to do with the carefree world of wins and losses, statistics and strikes?

"Can sports save a city?" was the question that Globe columnist Bud Collins asked after the torching of a woman and the stoning of a man by black teenagers last October.

"I'm not saying that crash program in sport and physical education is the answer, but I think it might be a start," wrote Collins. Blacks and whites don't get along in sport as we'd like to think. But they get along playing games better than anywhere else."

Jerry Butler, a 16 year old black, left his Roxbury home by bus on the first day of school, and was greeted at South Boston with an ugly scene reminiscent of Selma and Jackson. With courage and pride, he walked the 14 steps that lead to the entrance of Southie High.

Jerry really wanted to go to Southie High. He felt he would get a better education and would get a chance to play for a traditionally powerful football team.

"I like to play middle linebacker and the Burke School didn't even have a team last year," said Butler.

Without a police escort to and from practices the chances of Jerry Butler playing football for Southie are very slim.

Sports are as deep in the Southie tradition as ward politicians, patronage and the St. Patricks Day Parade. From John L. Sullivan to Jack Cunniff - invinceable football and hockey teams - the L Street Brownies, and hundreds of excellent sailors from the South Boston Yacht Club. No black has ever had the chance to be a part of that tradition.

The athletic facilities of the Boston school system will not help matters. White alias "Fight Stadium," where all Boston high school football teams play, has been the scene of race riots between South Boston and predominantly black Boston English many times.

More blood has been spilt on the snow outside of the old and decrepit Boston Arena, than on its ice surface. Longshoreman's grappling hooks and broken beer bottles are standard equipment when leaving a South Boston - Charlestown game. Police details are always deficient.

Sports and games may be the only way to penetrate through the layers of fear, frustration and hate. It's the job of the School Committee to see that both sides are able to compete safely.

Southie's goal line defense to prevent desegration has been smashed.

Blacks as opponents never gained respect in South Boston. Maybe a teammate with the courage of a Jerry Butler will.

Celtics begin Title defense

BUZZARDS BAY, Mass. [AP] — Injuries could be a key factor this season to the fortunes of the National Basketball Association champion Boston Celtics, Coach Tom Heinsohn said Thursday.

The Celtics opened their training camp at the Massachusetts Maritime Academy Thursday with everyone on hand except Don Chaney, whose contract has expired.

Another unsigned veteran, Paul Westphal, was in camp. Chaney and Westphal are beginning their option year with the NBA champs.

"It's going to be a touch season," said Heinsohn. "We don't have the same experience to meet it.

"We've lost Steve Kuberski and 'Hambone' Artie Williams. We've got quality players to replace them, but they are inexperienced.

"Don Nelson and John Havlicek are a year older. Injuries are going to be a key factor that will have a big bearing on the season.

"An early injury would hurt us a great deal," Heinsohn said. "We'd have to put the kids in. Last year, we waltzed into camp with experienced ball players. This year, we've got to get some of the kids ready.

A week ago the UMass football team consisted of a bundle of question marks. A week later some of those questions have been answered but a crop of new ones has been harvested.

Against the Wildcats of Villanova, the Minutemen and their fans discovered that yes, UMass had developed a running attack and that without Pennington and Berra, it was possible to have a balanced offense.

When the Minutemen take the field against the Black Bears; of Maine at Orono tomorrow afternoon, (WMUA, 1:30), they'll have the advantage of a game's experience against Villanova; a game they should have won. In the words of tight end Gary Mika, "We know after last week's loss that we're a far better team than we might have first imagined and that knowledge should spur us on for the rest of the season."

The main question marks looking to tomorrow concern a few injuries to some key spokes in the UMass wheel of attack.

Fred Kelliher, who looked so impressive for almost one quarter against Villanova, only to injure his shoulder, is definitely out for at least six weeks. According to Coach Dick MacPherson, an operation in Fred's case was a necessity for Kelliher's return later in the year.

"We could have put Freddie's arm in a sling for now, but that way he would've been out for the rest of the year. The doctors are looking for Kelliher to start throwing in about a month and hopefully get back into action two weeks after that."

Senior Mark Tripucka, who sat out all of 1973, will replace Kelliher with sophomore Peter Colton the backup at least for the next six games.

According to Coach MacPherson, Tripucka's insertion in to the helm should not change the UMass offense too radically. If anything, Tripucka will use a bit more play action in his repertoire.

Freshman Phenom Dave Croasdale, who injured his thigh returning the second-half kickoff against Villanova, will definitely be back in the defensive secondary for the Minutemen.

Rich Jessamy, who gained 76 yards last weekend and impressed with his speed especially running around the corners is in the doubtful category after sustaining what MacPherson termed "a kidney problem." If he can't play against the Black Bears, it's probable that Jerry Mondalto will take his place beside sophomore fullback Keith Lang, last Saturday's leading UMass ground gainer.

Ed McAleney, one of the UMass co-captains, will probably have his defensive end spot taken by Dennis Fenton, the New England Heavyweight wrestling champion. McAleny evidently injured his knee against Villanova is the second quarter and played the rest of the game. His loss will be keenly felt since Ed is from Maine and would have been performing in front of his homestate fans.

"Ed was really looking forward to playing Saturday. He's from Portland and he wanted to put on a good performance. It's also his twenty-first birthday. He hasn't missed a game yet. However, he will make the trip," according to MacPherson.

If you're betting on Maine tomorrow, good luck. The Black Bears have been shutout the last four meetings with UMass and since 1965 the last Maine win, the Minutemen have held a 208-26 scoring edge, or better yet domination.

Maine has two games under their belt so far in 1974. In their opener against Northeastern, the Black Bears were shaded 14-7, and last Friday Night at Nickerson Field they dropped a 7-6 decision to Boston University in a battle of defenses.

The Maine offense uses a wing-T attack with a lot of quarterback bootleg and rollout action. Rich Pryor, a southpaw thrower is the starter at quarterback, but Tom Cosgrove, who sparked Maine in the second half against BU, could see a good deal of action.

The Black Bear defense is similar to the defense of Villanova in that both teams use an Oklahoma front line with five linemen and three deep back in the secondary. Their defensive strength lies in their linebacking crew of Scott Shumann, Steve Jones and Fred Royce.

Coach MacPherson anticipates that Maine will try to establish a running game employing the quarterback option. If they can do that they'll try to throw against a UMass secondary that was nothing short of stingy against Villanova, allowing only ten completions in 27 attempts.

The biggest plus for the Minutemen looking to tomorrow in Orono is their running attack. "Last week our running game surprised everybody, especially after the 1973 season. Now we want to put the passing and running together, "said MacPherson after yesterday's final practice session.

With Maine the first Yankee Conference competition for the Mintuemen, a win is a must if dreams of the Beanpot this year will become reality. And with a game next weekend at Hanover against the Big Green of Dartmouth, a win tomorrow is a double must.

Tigers topple Sox 3-1, as rookie wins first

BOSTON [UPI] - Rookie Vern Ruhle, making his first major league start, pitched a two-hitter for seven innings Thursday night and sparked the Detroit Tigers to a 3-1 victory over Boston that pushed the Red Sox further into third place in the American League East.

Ruhle, in his third appearance since being purchased from Evansville, got every batter out but Rookie Fred Lynn, who homered and singled. John Hiller pitched one-hit ball the final two innings to preserve Ruhle's first major league win.

Jim Nettles' two-run triple in the fourth inning decided the contest. A walk to Bill Freehan and a Reggie Sanders' single preceded Nettles' liner to the gap in right-center.

The Tigers' other run off loser Luis Tiant, 20-13, came in the first inning on Al Kaline's 299th career hit, a single to center. Ron Leflore had walked and stolen second in front of the hit.

Lynn stroked a 1-0 fastball 400-feet into the center field seats for his second homer of the season in the second inning. In seven games since being brought up from Pawtucket, Lynn has batted .563 with nine hits in 16 at-bats.

UTEP first in poll 20

The University of Texas-El Paso was ranked as the nation's top college cross country team, Thursday, in the first national college cross country poll, conducted by 11 track and field newswriters and officials across the United States.

The ratings board screened out coaches in their respective regions, then cast their ballots. Washington was ranked second and Western Kentucky third, followed by Oregon, Manhattan, Eastern New Mexico, Illinois, William and Mary, Indiana and Tennessee.

The UMass cross country squad will be up against two of those teams, fifth ranked Manhattan and eighth ranked William and Mary during the 1974 schedule which begins next Saturday with a home meet against Boston College.

The harriers will get a chance at national recognition when they travel to New York's Van Cortlandt park on October 12 for a five-way meet. Manhattan will host UConn and Syracuse as well as William and Mary and the Minutemen runners.

Interpreter's studies certificate proposed

By NANCY GRUSHECK
Staff Reporter

A program that will offer students a certificate in general language interpretation (C.G.L.I.) in addition to a B.A. or B.S. at UMass has been proposed by Prof. Daniel R. Martin of the French Department.

Only two private schools, Georgetown University and the Monterey Institute, offer interpretation studies at the B.S. level in the U.S. UMass would be the first public institution to offer a program in language interpretation at the lower cost of a public education.

A pilot course, French 360 — Techniques of Consecutive and Simultaneous Interpretation, will be offered in the spring of '75. It is a course in technique — not language — and is open to students who have a proficiency in any language. Students must also be able to read French text books.

Requirements for the interpreter's program would consist of courses in technical aspects of interpretation, courses in languages and general courses dealing in areas such as journalism, business and law.

Science and engineering majors are encouraged to apply because interpreters are needed with technical skills.

Costs to the university would be small. Existing language labs would be utilized and only two professors would need to be hired according to Dr. Martin.

Demand is high for Americans interpreting from a foreign language to American English in many international organizations such as NATO and the UN plus many private industries because of the scarcity of American interpreters.

As a result, pay is very high for trained interpreters. Students who go on to earn MA's can earn between $10 and$24,000 at the UN. Interpreters can also earn as much as $150 a day plus expenses working for private industries.

Lovejoy trial termed 'strange'

By DAVE GREENSLIT
Staff Reporter

GREENFIELD — Shortly before the first week of anti-nuclear activist Sam Lovejoy's trial ended last Friday, Associate Justice Kent B. Smith leaned back in his brown leather chair and said, "This is probably one of the strangest trials in the history of Franklin County."

For once, no one in the court room disagreed.

The week ended with Lovejoy, who is defending himself, arguing that Political Scientist Howard Zinn's testimony about civil disobedience should be heard by the jury. Smith, who the day before had barred the jury from hearing the expert nuclear testimony of defense witness John W. Goffman, gave Lovejoy until this morning to submit a brief concerning the relevance of Zinn's testimony to the case.

The AEC has ordered the shut-down of 21 of 50 nuclear power plants nationwide because of a potentially faulty cooling system leak. Story, page 6.

Lovejoy, 28, of Chestnut Hill in Montague, is charged with willful and malicious destruction of personal property in the Feb. 22 toppling of Northeast Utilities' meteorological tower, the first step in NU's plans to build a $1.52 billion nuclear power plant on the Montague Plains. He has accepted full responsibility for downing the 500 foot structure.

After Asst. D.A. John Murphy had completed the prosecution's case, Lovejoy again motioned for an immediate verdict, on the grounds that Murphy had failed to prove the act to be either willful or malicious and had failed to establish that the property involved was personal rather than real.

Murphy then said that Lovejoy's four page statement, released when he turned himself in to the Montague police, showed willfulness. Certain words in the statement, Murphy continued, such as "outrageous symbol" and "horrendous development" prove malice on the defendant's part.

Lovejoy argued that for an act to be willful, it has to be unlawful. In light of the danger posed by nuclear power, he said, the legality of the act was unclear.

He also said his statement must be taken in its entirety to be fully understood. An act that benefits the community at the expense of property is not malicious, Lovejoy stated.

Most of the argument, however, centered on the property issue.

Basically, real property is that which is permanent — the soil of the earth, what is erected upon it, or buried beneath it. Real property

Honduras orders cremations after hurrican Fifi kills thousands

SAN PEIRO SULA, Honduras [UPI] - Rescue officials yesterday ordered mass incineration of bodies to prevent epidemics in the festering devastation wrought by Hurrican Fifi. Floodwaters brought out hundreds of poisonous snakes.

The Honduran army information service said more than 2,700 bodies were, burned or buried at Choloma, 12 miles north of San Pedro Sula, and another 1,000 at La Ceiba, a banana port on the coast.

"Five thousand persons died, 10,000 homes were destroyed, damaged to crops, public property and private industry is estimated at $250 million," an army spokesman told UPI. "We have not even begun to assess the value of damage to private property."

UPI correspondent Jonathan Roussel flew over Choloma, once a city of 12,000 inhabitants 12 miles from San Pedro Sula, and saw dark clouds of smoke rising from bodies being incinerated in huge funeral pyres.

"I saw men in red and white Red Cross vests crawling across the mud, retrieving bodies from protruding roofs or treetops," he said. "Sometimes they found a survivor."

Capt. Luis Discua, a spokesman for the government's central information agency in Tegucigalpa, said the decomposed bodies were burned to prevent epidemics. "So many bodies have been exposed to the elements since Thursday that in many cases they are being burned on the spot instead of being brought out for funerals," he said.

Officials said that receding floodwaters had loosed hundreds of poisonous snakes which added to the health hazard.

Hurricane Fifi roared up the coast of Honduras Wednesday and Thursday but lost its force sweeping through, Belize and southern Mexico, and was downgraded to a tropical storm by Friday. The skies were clear in San Pedro Sula Sunday and the flood waters were receding.

cannot be moved without damaging it or changing its nature. Personal property is temporary and can be moved without changing its nature.

Murphy pointed out that the prosecution had produced a NU notice to the Federal Aviation Authority that specifically stated the environmental tower was intended to stand for only 24 months. Much of the data gathering equipment he said, could be "installed, removed, and maintained." "There is more than enough evidence so that the case can go to the jury in regards to personal property," concluded Murphy.

Prosecution witnesses, Lovejoy said, have stated that the tower must be disassembled to be moved, thus changing its nature. He also pointed out that NU paid $4,000 to anchor the tower to the ground. Data gathering equipment, he said, becomes part of the real property when attached, "like windows and doors on a house."

The property issue, Lovejoy concluded, was a matter for the court, not the jury, to decide.

Smith admitted that the property matter "bothered him," and said that all cases dealing with the issue were over 150 years old. He denied the motion for a direct, judicial verdict, however, saying that the property issue mixed "law and fact" and therefore the jury should hear the case.

Following Smith's denial for direct verdict, Lovejoy made his eloquent opening statement to the jury. He began by accepting full responsibility for toppling the tower. His objective, he said, was to "stop nuclear power plants here, across the country, and throughout the world."

Lovejoy said after "meditating for literally months and months before acting...I broke the specificity of the law...to save life."

"I'm worried about children," he told the jury, "and you should be worried about children."

"I was acting out of a motive so pure that property damage means nothing compared to human life," Lovejoy concluded.

He then introduced character witness Josephine Murray, of Wilbraham, Lovejoy's home town. She testified that Lovejoy had a reputation of being "honest, truthful, and had a civil consciousness on the highest level."

After the character witness, Bruce Holmstead, director of food services at Holyoke Hospital, drew laughs in the court room when he testified that he bought the salvaged tower for $200 from NU — and planned to build three wind generators on it.

Howard Zinn, a professor of political science at Boston University and an acknowledged expert on the history of civil disobedience, never got to answer Lovejoy's first question, as Murphy objected and Smith again ordered the jury to leave.

The jury may yet hear Zinn's testimony, if Lovejoy's brief persuades Smith that the testimony is relevant. Zinn, like Goffman before him, was allowed to testify for the record with the jury absent.

He said that "there is a long and established tradition in the United States of challenging the actions of government and private corporations...inside and outside the law."

New health plan to be explained

The University Health Services will sponsor another information and question-and-answer session about the new Supplementary Health Plan for students and also the insurance option for students' dependents. The meeting, offered in cooperation with the Office of Commuter Affairs, will be held Tuesday, at noon in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

The new supplementary plan provides services in addition to the on-campus care provided to all students by the University Health Services. This on-campus program is supported by the $46 per semester health fee, which is compulsory for all students, and entitles you to a wide range of services at the Health Center.

Included are: medical care, short term mental health consultation, lab and x-ray work, inpatient care and emergency care when provided at the University Health Center, contraception services, health education, and an environmental health and safety program.

Prescription medications are provided without additional charge, with the exception of long term medications and contraceptives. Available dental services have been expanded this year with the opening of the dental clinic: emergency dental care and root canal work are covered by the health fee, and routine restorative work (cleanings, fillings, and the like) will be done for an additional fee as dentist time is available. Other new services this year include surgical and obstetrical-gynecological consultants.

The Health Services has initiated an entirely new supplementary insurance system, carefully designed to complement those services available on campus. The supplementary plan is available to students for an additional $50 per year. This provides for care not available at the University Health Center, such as hospitalization, surgery, certain dental services, maternity care and termination of pregnancy, and out-of-area emergency care.

Expanded coverage is offered under this plan this year because of affiliations established with Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, and with local surgical and obstetrical groups.

Students enrolled in the supplemental plan may enroll their dependents in an insurance plan for an additional $45.25 per quarter. This plan, also utilizing local affiliations, provides for hospitalization, surgical care, termination of pregnancy and full maternity coverage, limited dental services, and emergency care. The Health Services is presently not able to provide direct services to students' dependents but plans to do so are under discussion.

You must enroll in the supplemental and dependents programs by October 1. Enrollment cards are available at the Insurance Office in the Health Center, Monday through Friday from 8 to 5. To have your questions answered, come to the information session Tuesday at noon.

Sing out men!

University Chorus needs male singers who are able to carry a tune and really want to sing.

Wayne Abercrombie, visiting Assistant Professor of Music who is replacing Chorus Director Mr. Alan Harlar, on sabbatical this year, told the Collegian that the Chorus needs both basses and tenors.

University Chorus rehearses twice a week, Tuesdays 7-9 p.m. and Wednesdays 4:40-6 p.m. in Cottage C which is listed on maps as the Old Infirmary Group, on the hill behind Worchester Dining Commons.

Abercrombi said that interested men should come to Cottage C either during rehearsal times or to his office there (Harlar's office) during the day, afternoons preferably. People can also call him at his office, 545-0532.

Abercrombi said that the group consists mainly of nonmusic majors and will give two concerts on December 3, 1974 and May 14, 1975.

While members get one credit, Ambercrombi said, "It's not like taking an extra class - it's a refresher sort of thing. My hope is that the rehearsals will sort of rejuvenate their minds and bodies."

The search is on for Honors science head

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

The new Acting Director of the Honors Program, Mary Sirridge, told the Collegian that the program is looking for an Associate Director in the Sciences and Pro-professional Schools.

Sirridge said the Honors program should be extended further into the sciences, and thus, a regular Associate Director educated in the sciences is needed to improve advising in that area.

An Assistant Professor of Philosophy and Undergraduate Philosophy Advisor, Sirridge will be Acting Director of Honors this semester while the new director George Armelagos, Associate Professor of Anthropology, is on sabbatical.

Armelagos was chosen by a Search Committee last spring to replace Cynthia Wolffe who resigned to continue her research and let in a new Honors management, Sirridge said.

Armelagos was chosen with knowledge of his being on leave this semester, and the Honors Council asked her to take over for this fall, Sirridge said, since she was the main person who had been working with the program for a long period of time and could carry it over until Armelagos returned.

Now in her third year associating with the program, Sirridge has been an Assistant and Associate Director.

As Acting Director, Sirridge said she is mainly responsible for carrying out policies of the previous program, administrative duties, and helping to carry out new changes.

She said that seeing new Honors students and counselling is her main responsibility next to general administration.

Sirridge said that they are trying to use this semester for big improvements in the program such as: its relation with special programs, honors course evaluations, and helping departments implement departmental Honors Programs.

She said that she would like to strengthen the appeal of the program for those in the sciences and professional schools.

Sirridge's job also includes funds for Senior Honors Theses. These funds are allotted as trust funds from the Provost's Office; and she said she tries to allocate them equally, but the requests always exceed the amount of money.

Sirridge said she first became involved with the Honors program because she was dissatisfied with her own courses. She wanted to make her courses Honors to get students who were genuinely interested.

Sirridge has a one course teaching reduction for the year due to the Acting Director position; but she still has one undergraduate course, a team seminar, and a large independent study group. "It's difficult to teach nearly full time and be a full time administrator," she said.

"I think it's good for students and teachers to get to know the University," Ms. Sirridge said; and she thinks the best way for her to do this is through administration.

When Armelagos becomes Director in January, Sirridge will become an Associate Director again. She said there is not much compensation for working with the Honors Program and, "It's hard to find people who can find the time."

"I think the program is generally worthwhile," she said.

Dr. Smith receives funds for Fiji botany research

By KATHERINE BECHERT
Staff Reporter

Dr. Albert Smith, of the Botany department here, received last week the third year funds of a four-year National Science Foundation Grant for unique research in the Fijian region.

Dr. Smith's research on the flowering plants of the Fijian region adds to knowledge of the origin, evolution and distribution of living organisms and to the development of the continental drift theory.

Working with him are his wife and his graduate research assistant, Steven Darwin.

The Fiji Islands are geologically exciting, Dr. Smith said, because they are isolated and give a clear, simple model of their evolution. They are also at the juncture of two moving continental land masses, Asia and Australia; and so they provide rich material for their past history and the origin and spread of plant life from tropical regions to the rest of the world.

The results of Dr. Smith's 40 years of research will be published in several years as a complete Flora of the region, classifying and describing its 2500 species and discussing controversial views.

The Flora will be of practical use to Fiji botanists and to those studying plant evolution and the history of continental plates. There are no other major specialists in the Fiji area.

Greek rush running rampant

By CARLENE MURPHY
Staff Correspondent

The 24 fraternities and sororities of UMass that are claiming a "successful" rush, this Fall, attribute it to "new ideas" and a "positive feeling" among Greeks.

Ed Bowe, the director of The Greek Affairs office in Whitmore says that the Greeks are no longer hiding. They are willing to go out and face the university. They feel they have a great deal to offer and they are determined to make that fact known.

Bowe says that one new idea about rush is to bring the Greeks to the people. They are doing this by establishing information centers in the dining commons and by sponsoring a program in the Campus Center. The program consisted of two evenings, one for men and one for women. All the Greek houses were represented and it gave students the opportunity of investigating all of the houses at the same time.

The two weeks left of formal rush and are expected by Bowe to be "the most successful of recent years."

According to Diane Wilkinson, a member of the Council, this is not true. "All we know at this point is that there is a higher incidence of vaginal and cervical cancer in the daughters of the women who used DES. Nothing has been proved."

Sen Cannon uncertain as hearings open

Rockefeller may have conflict of interest

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The chairman of the Senate Rules Committee, which opens confirmation hearings today on Nelson A. Rockefeller's vice presidential nomination, said yesterday the panel must consider a potential conflict of interest raised by Rockefeller's "immense" financial holdings.

Sen. Howard Cannon, D-Nev., also said he sees no reason for Rockefeller to place his assets in a blind trust fund.

"I just don't think that the establishment of a blind trust could really insulate the person... from knowing that he had those interests," Cannon said.

Rockefeller released a statement last week which said he was worth $182.5 million.

Cannon said the conflict of interest question generated by Rockefeller's broad-based holdings "is one of the most serious problems that the committee has to deal with because the conflict of interest statutes do not apply to the President or the vice president, though they do apply to officers and people working in the executive branch and they also apply to members of Congress."

Cannon was interviewed on CBS-TV's Face the Nation.

He said that because Rockefeller's family has holdings in four large oil firms, two airlines and many other companies that are regulated by the federal government, "it does raise a most serious question in our minds."

"But how do you actually handle that?" Cannon asked "The Constitution doesn't say that a candidate for President or vice president must divest himself of all holdings that might possibly constitute a conflict of interest."

Honduras acts to halt spread of epidemic

Zone flew shuttles of planes to the coastal zone, with water purification units, vaccines and medicine. Refugees were plucked from rooftops.

U.S. Ambassador Phillip V. Sanchez, helping coordinate American aid, warned that epidemics could bring further disaster.

"The immediate problem is the health hazard from contaminated water," he told UPI.

There was no electricity and running water in San Pedro Sula, Honduras' second city with a population of 150,000. Long lines of people with buckets, pots, pans, and plastic containers lined up at three hand-pumps in the town to draw water.

"We do not have enough food, medicine and clothing and our motor fuel supply is running out," the city mayor, Henry Holst, told UPI.

In New York, the director of the Honduras Information Service, Gwendolyn Bennaton, issued an appeal for U.S. contributions of food, medicine, blood, plasma, water purification tablets, antiobiotics, clothing, bandages, tents, blankets, and plastic dishes and containers.

"We need just about everything for a catastrophe," she said.

The Honduras Emergency Committee run by the Honduran government has set up supply centers in major U.S. cities to gather donated goods.

"Three planes and five or six ships are standing by to take the goods to Honduras," she said.

Red Cross rushes aid

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The American Red Cross announced yesterday it is sending disaster specialists to Honduras to help with relief operations for the thousands of persons made homeless by hurricane Fifi in Honduras and other Central American countries.

U.S. Red Cross officials announced that Americans wishing to help with relief work may send fund contributions to their local Red Cross chapters, marked for Central American hurricane relief. The Hunduran Red Cross said funds are needed for local purchases of supplies and to support the mammoth relief program with which it is assisting the Honduran Emergency Relief Committee.

Nixon to enter hospital today for treatment of phlebitis

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. [UPI] — Former President Richard Nixon spent a quiet day yesterday on the eve of hospitalization whose duration may be tested by court orders to appear at the Watergate coverup trial scheduled to begin Oct. 1.

A 10-room section was sealed off the sixth floor of Long Beach Memorial Hospital, two for use by Nixon and his family and the remainder set aside for the Secret Service and other use.

The length of Nixon's stay was indefinite. One hospital official said Saturday it would be at least three days.

The former Chief Executive is to undergo tests and received treatment for phlebitis, painful blood clots in his left leg which have worsened since his resignation Aug. 9 and subsequent seclusion at his San Clemente estate.

Dr. John Lungren, former chief of staff at Memorial, was the doctor in charge of the former President's treatment.

Lungren was scheduled to hold a news conference today morning shortly after Nixon enters the hospital. He will also issue daily medical bulletins.

It was anticipated that Lungren would give a prognosis of Nixon's case and possibly some indication of the length and type of treatment, including the use of coagulants to disperse the blood clots.

Nixon's affliction with the phelbitis condition was first made public during his overseas trips to the Middle East and the Soviet Union when he was seen to limp noticeably.

Jordan quits talks

By United Press International

Jordan announced yesterday it is temporarily withdrawing from all Middle East peace efforts to protest Egypt's switch to support of the Palestine Liberation Organization as the only representative of the Palestinian people.

Egypt, Syria and the PLO issued a joint statement in Cairo on Saturday describing the PLO as the "sole and legitimate" representative of the Palestinians.

Jordan, which has a large population of Palestinian Arabs and claims to be their spokesman, also announced it has turned down an invitation to attend a policy coordination conference with Egypt, Syria and the PLO.

Viet fighting rages

By PAUL VOGLE

SAIGON [UPI] — South Vietnamese government marines wiped out half a North Vietnamese battalion in a battle 400 miles north of Saigon, spokesmen said yesterday.

The spokesmen claimed 261 Communists killed in the two-hour battle Saturday. Government losses were put at 10 killed and 31 wounded.

The battle between the marines and the Communists was the heaviest fighting in the northernmost sector of South Vietnam since the Jan. 28, 1973 cease-fire. Until this weekend that sector had been the only one in South Vietnam where the truce seemed to be working.

In the spring and summer of 1972, North Vietnamese troops captured and then lost Quang Tri city, 15 miles north of the Saturday battlefield.

Mr. Brennan dies

OXNARD, CALIF. [UPI] - Movie industry colleagues yesterday mourned the death of Walter Brennan, ranked as possibly the finest character actor in American films and a veteran whose career spanned more than 50 years.

Brennan was the only actor to win three Academy Awards. He also was widely known for his role of "Grampa" in TV's "The Real McCoys," one of the most popular TV shows of the late 1950's and early 1960's.

Miss Susann dies

NEW YORK [UPI] - Author Jacqueline Susann, whose novel "Valley of the Dolls" about high-flying sex and drugs among Hollywood's rich and famous sold a record breaking 17 million copies, died Saturday night after a 12-year struggle against cancer.

Miss Susann symbolized the relaxation of American inhibitions in the 1960's with her intimate novels of sexual abandon.

OPEC nations to restrict production of oil

By United Press International

Oil-exporting countries will voluntarily reduce production levels to dry up excess supply but not to create artificial shortages aimed at pushing prices even higher, Venezuelan Mines Minister Valentin Hernandez said yesterday.

Hernandez returned to Venezuela Saturday from the Vienna meeting of ministers of the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries.

He told the Caracas newspaper "El Nacional" that OPEC had not reached a formal agreement on production, cutbacks, but that Venezuela, Kuwait, Libya and Nigeria had agreed to voluntary reductions in their output.

Venezuela and Kuwait, third and fourth-ranking world oil exporters, have already ordered major cutbacks in their output. Venezuela, supplier of a third of U.S. oil imports, has reduced its production by more than 300,000 barrels a day since the beginning of the year and is now pumping around three million barrels daily.

Hernandez said he expected that other OPEC members would join in the voluntary production program.

The 13 OPEC nations produced about 31 million barrels a day in 1973, approximately 56 percent of total world oil output.

AEC safety expert urges halt of nuclear plant construction

CAMBRIDGE [UPI] — The United States should consider "a complete halt in nuclear power plant construction" because of unresolved safety questions, an Atomic Energy Commission safety expert said Saturday.

In a release issued by the Union of Concerned Scientists, Carl J. Hocevar said he was resigning his AEC post "in order to be free to tell the American people the truth about the potentially dangerous conditions in the nation's nuclear power plants." The group, based in Cambridge, has joined consumer advocate Ralph Nader in an organized effort to oppose new nuclear power plants and a review of safety standards.

Hocevar, an author of one of the AEC's basic nuclear power plant safety analysis methods, said "in spite of the soothing reassurances that the AEC gives to an uninformed, misled public, unresolved questions about nuclear power plant safety are so grave that the U.S. should consider a complete halt in nuclear power construction while we see if these serious questions can, some how, be resolved."

Vermont N-plant among 16 shut down

WASHINGTON [AP] — About one-third of the 52 nuclear power reactors in the United States will have to shut down to determine if there are cracks in their cooling systems, the Atomic Energy Commission said Saturday.

An AEC spokesman said no safety hazard is involved.

Among the affected plants nationwide was the Vermont Yankee power plant in Vernon, Vermont. Yankee Atomic in Rowe, Mass. was unaffected.

In another development, a nuclear safety specialist working with the AEC has resigned his job because he says the public does not know the truth about "potentially dangerous" atomic power plants.

The agency issued its order after detecting small cracks in auxiliary piping units of three reactors that use boiling water as a coolant.

Although there are 21 boiling water reactors in operation, only 15 or 16 have similar units, the AEC spokesman said.

He said operators of all 21 reactors have been notified, but that those without the suspect units will not be required to shut down.

The spokesman said the reactors affected by the order must be pulled out of operation sometime within the next 60 days for inspections to be made. He said the inspections should take about a week, but that no significant disruption of electric power is anticipated.

The spokesman said the 29 commercial power plants that used pressurized water as a coolant are not affected.

The suspect units are small, auxiliary pipes that are attached to the larger pipes that bring cooling water into the reactor. The AEC said there is no safety hazard because even if cracks do develop, the leaked radioactive water will be collected in reservoirs in the bottom of the power plants.

Brooke,White disagree on need for marshals

BOSTON [UPI] - Boston Mayor Kevin H. White said yesterday he is "cautiously optimistic" disturbances will decrease and attendance will increase when the city's racially troubled schools open Monday for the second full week under a federal desgregation order.

At the same time, Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R Mass., in an interview broadcast on WBZTV, said federal marshals may have to be brought into Boston to safeguard the 18,235 children being bused, if conditions deteriorate.

The senator added, however, that he thinks White and city officials "are in control of the situation."

In a statement released by his press secretary, Barry Brooks, White said, "I am strongly opposed to calling in federal marshals. The Boston Police Department has been doing an outstanding job and there is no need for federal marshal."

White said the meetings last Friday between blacks and whites at racially troubled Hyde Park High School "went very well, and we are hopeful that we can avoid a reoccurance of last week's incident."

Five persons were injured at Hyde Park School last Thursday in racial fights and rock throwing disturbances which started in the lunchroom and spread to hallways and the front of the building. The school was closed Friday, but selected students, parents and teachers met to discuss ways of easing tensions.

Following the meetings it was announced Friday that school would open today, but classes would conclude at 12:45 p.m. instead of 2 p.m., eliminating lunch periods.

Except for a demonstration in East Boston, the busing program went smoothly on Friday, but attendance dropped about 10 percent citywide. Absenteeism remained highest in South Boston where whites are boycotting classes and many black parents are keeping their children home fearing for their safety.

The boycott was expected to continue at least through the middle of this week and possibly longer.

Pell, Javits plan Cuba visit soon

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [AP] - Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., says a trip he and Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., plan to Cuba to discuss U.S. - Cuban relations is "imminent."

Pell said the trip will be unofficial, but it was considered significant since the Ford administration reportedly is reviewing this country's hard line against Cuban Premier Fidel Castro.

Pell said he and Javits will travel as members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and will only stay in Cuba a few days.

No senator or congressman has visited the island since this country broke relations in 1961. Pell visited there in 1959 as a senator-elect.

Both senators have postponed the trip twice this year at the request of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. Pell said Kissinger had urged the delays because "he believed it would be against the national interest to go earlier."

Pell feels there will be no postponement this time.

Pell said yesterday that "On the human side it restoration of relations between the U.S. and Cuba would mean that families could be reunited. On the economic side it could mean reduction in the price of sugar for American housewives and another market for American goods."

INFLATION...

...the frivolous Congress

By ERIC FLEET

In an interview with the Boston Herald Advertiser, Senator Edward M. Kennedy had the audacity to say that Congress has become impatient with inflation and that Ford's honeymoon is over.

Kennedy, a fourteen year veteran of the social welfare Congress, would like to blame our one month President for the double digit inflation. Excellent strategy if anyone outside of Massachusetts will buy it.

But, unfortunately for liberals, most Americans know that Congress, and only Congress, has the power of the purse strings.

With the death of Watergate inflation will indeed be the issue in the November elections, as well it should. Blame will be established on the fifth of November and until then Americans will witness the machinations of the twenty year Congress as it tries to escape its due. For that reason the economic record must be set straight.

It is a well known economic fact that the chief cause of inflation is deficit spending (spending more than you earn). For twenty years Congress has pursued a policy of spending more than it can afford. This has resulted in a steady erosion of the dollar on the market. The result is that your dollar will buy less. The taxpayer is lulled into the belief that his taxes are the same when actually the inflation is the hidden tax. This is taxation without representation. Congress gets what it wants without one new law.

The second cause of inflation is the Keneysian embezzlement known as "fiat money". The Federal Reserve has long printed dollars at a faster rate than the growth of production. The result is the illusion of having more money. In reality you have worthless paper.

The third cause of inflation is the outrageous tax on production. The natural resource industries are now so heavily taxed to pay for the national debt they must raise prices. This is another hidden consumer tax. The interest alone on this national debt is 13 billion dollars. Is it any wonder the economy is collapsing?

Senator Kennedy has supported social welfare spending and now favors federally financed National Health Insurance. He has long favored fiat money and has now joined Sen. Jackson in the proposed massacre of the oil companies, which are now suffering the burdens of high production costs and a worthless dollar overseas.

The truth of the matter is that the Democratic Congress has frivolously spent the taxpayers' money. At the same time they continue to pay out subsidies to wealthy farming concerns under antiquated New Deal programs. To pitch the last penny, liberals have demanded a cut in the already modest defense budget. Only .29 of every tax dollar is spent on defense, another unrecognized achievement of I dare not mention who.

Hopefully the taxpayer, wisened by that painful home budget, will take the time to examine Congress' budget. Figures don't lie, especially when they have $ in front of them. This fall we should see the difference.

...goodby to nickle candy

By CINDY ROGERS

When I was in grammar school, I couldn't wait until the last bell rang so I could head up with my friends to the center drug store. I spent the last 10 minutes of each day deciding what kind of candy bar I would get. Would it be "a Hershey's Almond bar or a Three Muskateers?"

I got 50 cents allowance a week and I budgeted my sweet spending accordingly. One day I would buy a nickel candy bar. The next a candy bar and a pack of gum. Sometimes if I had exceeded my budget I would scrape together some pennies to buy some Bazooka. Sometimes if I was feeling rich, I would go halfsies on a vanilla milkshake which cost a quarter.

On Sat, my girlfriends and I would ride our bicycles to the penny candy store. Those two for a penny specials seemed like real bargains. Or we'd ride to Brighams for a fifteen cent ice cream cone. The large ones were 20 cents and a bit too much for my pocketbook. Even when I did that, I had to plan carefully from my weekly budget.

If anyone had mentioned the word, "inflation" to me, I wouldn't have cared what it meant. It was part of a grown-up world and all that concerned me was my nickel candy or a piece of penny Bazooka gum. Such was the sweet life of my childhood years.

The other day I went into a drug store to get a package of lifesavers. I was already to hand the guy at the counter a dime, since I knew that lifesavers went up, and he told me that it cost fifteen cents. I was shocked when he told me that all lifesavers and gum would be going up to 15 cents.

The grammar school child of today may not only be able to define inflation; he experiences it. In the last five years, candy bars have gone from 5 cents to 7 cents, 10 cents, 12 cents and now they are 15 cents a bar. Bazooka bubble gum is two cents a piece as all penny candy. (It is no longer called penny candy.) It has been rumored that it is going up to three cents. I predict it will be up to a nickel soon and instead they will have to rename it, "nickel candy". Can you imagine anyone spending a nickel on one piece of a mint julep?

If an eight-year old wants to buy an ice cream cone at Brigham, it will cost him 35 cents. It's one thing to count out your pennies and nickles but today's child must deal in dimes and quarters. Oh, well at least he'll get change from a dollar. McDonalds can't even make that claim anymore.

I've asked the Federal Consumer Commission why there has been such a rapid increase. They told me it was immense increase in sugar prices. Not one could tell me why sugarless bubble-gum and lifesavers also increased in price.

Supposedly if inflation has been a continuous happening why were candy bars, packs of gum and lifesavers a nickel all those years when other commodities rose?

I'm not trying to make a political issue out of the rise in candy prices, although it is part of one, I thought it could be part of a parental plot to prevent cavities, although I hear flouride toothpaste sellers and dentists are not supporting it.

It just seems unfair for children today to have to spend so much on what has been an intricate part of childhood for many years.

Letters to the editor

Hofer defends Ms. Burn

To the Editor:

"I wish to comment on the front page article, September 18, in The Collegian, that concerned the International Programs Office, with its slanderous attack on Barbara Burn.

In the same mail I received a carbon of a letter written by one of your regular staff writers of last spring, Michael Henault, '74. Let me quote it:

Dear Mrs. Burn:

"I just wanted to drop you this "informal" message concerning this past summer.

First of all, I wish to thank you and your office for all the help in making this summer possible.

Secondly, I want to give my highest commendations to UMass' Oxford Program. As I told Dr. Hofer it was a "banquet of experiences." Intellectually and socially the program turned out to be the most positive endeavor of my college education.

Keep up the fine work."

It seems ironic that Mike had to swing an expensive loan to enable him [like many other deserving summer-program students] to enroll "in the most positive endeavor of my college education," but others had to disenroll in the Bologna Program and the Oxford Seminar. Why? Because the Student Senate in its wisdom chose last spring to torpedo its appropriation to the Office of International Programs. Scholarships consequently had to be curtailed; our students who needed several hundred dollars were given a token. The cut in scholarship aid for UMass students means of course that foreign experiences like Mike's will now be impossible because of the added burden of inflation.

As a member of the advisory committee for The Bologna Program, I remember well the sad meeting when it was decided to drop the 1974 attempt. But Florence [minus an expensive rental] was thought a good alternate location, and only by dint of perseverance and hope and energy [lazy? you must be ' Barbara Burn kept things afloat. She is not now, nor ever was, the Director of that Program, but she moved heaven and earth to encourage the few students who were able to apply and got the director, and Italian resident, to pick up the pieces. It is ludicrous to in any way criticize her for a last-minute Herculean achievement when all other efforts had failed. But over two million letters were recently burned by the Italian government, and the Arno River regularly dries up in the summer, meaning that water is rationed. Politics and God might be blamed, not Barbara Burn.

The chief complaint I have with Lawrence Kornfeld's non-factual, graceless article that purports to mirror "three students" [what about the hundreds that sing gratitude?] is this: For a year I have chaired the Faculty Senate Committee of Foreign Programs and Exchanges. I know the kind of indefatiguable energy Dr. Burn [let's use her title] pushes into her work; I know the sort of regard in which she is held abroad for her books on international education, and I can say that without her working with our committee its functions and its scope would have been impaired and average. The foreign associations and the foreign exchanges [let alone the programs] that now enliven this University since her arrival bear testimony by their mere existence to the inappropriateness of the word "lazy" as applied either to her or to her competent office. Let's hope Staff Reporter Kornfeld next time will be less "lazy" about acquiring his facts, less "lazy" about soliciting opinions from the 400 students who annually go abroad on programs or exchanges, roughly 3 per cent of our undergraduate population. But perhaps Mr. Kornfeld can be forgiven, for he interviewed Dr. Burn for his "facts" while The Collegian was actually in the process of being distributed, with his article on page 1.

The Tunghai U blues

To the Editor:

Chancellor Bromery says, "All evidence indicates that Dr. Burn and the [International Programs] office have done an outstanding job..." I, on the contrary, would like to make known further evidence which supports the experience of those students in Bologna during the past school year.

I and another student were on an exchange program between UMass and Tunghai University in Taiwan. This being the first year of the program, and given the tremendous difference in environment, culture, and ways of thinking that exists between Taiwan and America, one would expect that there would be problems.

Well, it wasn't so much that there were problems with the program, as it was that there was in truth no program at all. There was complete misunderstanding between the schools as to what the two of us were to do. We were led to believe before leaving that we would have a structured program, with courses geared to our level. In fact none of this existed.

From the moment we stepped off the plane, we were on our own. As it turned out, we made a pretty good year of it. But one should not have to pay $3,000 for a phantom program in order to do so [the original estimate was $2,000], nor should UMass, on the other hand, pay out $2,700 each to the Taiwanese exchange students coming here so that the program can exist.

$11,400 was squandered, from my point of view, not to speak of our time and feelings. As regards Ms. Burn, I believe her intentions were good and she did try to help us some. But I think she and certainly the other people involved, had no idea of what they were getting involved with, did an insufficient job in establishing a basis for the exchange, and have continued the blunder by allowing the program to continue against the advice of both of us, and of involved persons at Tunghai. Is it being continued for the sake of the students?

Our experience may have been atypical. Also, I should have better explored the program before agreeing to be a part of it, not simply assuming it to be as it was described.

Nonetheless I think a constructive investigation should be made; one which ultimately helps those involved.

Rockefeller $peaks

"Raise your right hand and swear the following oath before the Select Senate Confirmation Committee."

"I Nelson A. Rockefeller do hereby swear to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help me John D. Rockefeller."

"Tell us Mr. Rockefeller, just how much are you worth?"

"Thats hard to say. Dollars and cents don't mean much in these times of inflation — things change so quickly..."

"It is known to us that three weeks ago you claimed to be worth thirty million dollars. Then two weeks ago you claimed to be worth 180 million. How can you account fo the discrepancy?"

"Oh. Uh....I had a good week."

"Tell us exactly, Mr. Rockefeller. How much are you worth."

"Well let me try to give you an idea of what my holdings are. I own New York State, Delaware and the Isle of Crete. I own the cattle industry in Argentina, the Wine Industry in France and the Breweries in Germany. I own the Condom Factories in Cambodia, the Slave Trade in New Guinea and the Zit Industry in Italy. And those are just about a quarter of my real worth. The rest have to be kept secret for National Security Reasons."

"Oh I see. Tell me Mr. Rockefeller, why did you quit your job as Governor of New York, especially since you own it?"

"Well I sorta got tired of it. You know, sixteen years of hasslin with the tenants and the share croppers that live on my land — a man gets tired. And after I got done building that Maul in Albany for the folk, I decided to leave the runnin of my Plantation to my Overseer, Malcolm Wilson. You see I found Malcolm years ago, in the Home For Happy Wanderers, and I took him under my wing. I brought him along slow giving him confidence — teaching him things like the Alphabet and Mother Goose rhymes. I felt recently that it was high time for Malcolm to take over."

"You mean to say that you left the biggest and richest state in the country in the hands of a bumbling idiot?"

"Well, it was rumored that he once went to UMass."

"Oh...Tell us Mr. Rockefeller, why do you think that President Ford chose you as his Vice Presidential candidate?"

"Well, ole Chevy Ford had no choice. If it wasn't for me he probably wouldn't be President today!"

"Hows that?"

"Well everybody knows that the reason Chevy Ford is so popular with the press and the rest of the country is that he makes his own breakfast every morning. Without that, he would have never been picked."

"So....."

"Well I own "Breakfast."

"What do you mean you own "Breakfast"! "Breakfast" is an Institution of great American Significance rivaling the Supreme Court and South Boston in stature! How can you even imply that you own "Breakfast"!"

"Because I do! I own "Breakfast"."

"OH.........Everything from Battle Creek to...????"

"Tony the Tiger."

"Oh.........Mr. Rockefeller, many people suspect that you control literally the whole world with your holdings, wealth, political and social influence. That doesn't sit well with a lot of Americans who fear big Government, International Cartels and Intercontinental Conspiracies. What can you say to allay the fears of these people?"

"Well, first off, it is just not true. I only control half the world. My brother David controls the other half. And secondly how can people even begin to think that. Don't forget that I voted for Barry Goldwater in 64. Why can't these people recognize my accomplishments. Remember Attica, and my beautiful New York Drug Law aimed against those Communist Druggies. Those are the things that a man can be proud of."

"One final question. How do you forsee your working relationship with President Ford?"

"Fine, fine, fine. I don't forsee any trouble."

"Hows that?"

"Chevy Ford isn't gonna tell a Billion Dollars what to do."

Most famous UMie

When Rufus picked up his copy of the Collegian in the Dining Commons that morning, he was surprised to see his picture on the front page, with the caption: "Most Famous UMie". Little did he realize that the picture was not of him; it was a picture of his twin brother.

Rufus' brother was also named Rufus. Rufus' brother wasn't always named Rufus. When he was born, his mother named him Rayfus. But the brothers looked so much alike, and everyone kept calling Rufus, Rayfus----and Rayfus, Rufus---that, for the sake of consistency, their parents changed Rayfus' name to Rufus. That, of course, put an end to the confusion. When a visiting aunt pulled one of the babies out of its crib and asked its mother which one she was holding, the mother didn't even have to be in the room to answer; she knew it would be Rufus.

Rufus didn't even know he had a twin brother. In fact, Rufus didn't even know he had a brother at all.

The same goes for Rufus. He was equally unaware of Rufus' existence.

And the fact that both boys, who were orphaned at the age of 5, and who grew up independently, at different ends of the state, later became UMies ---- that is a story in itself...For another time, of course.

The story we're concerned with now is the one about Rufus picking up a Collegian in the Dining Commons, seeing his face on the front page, and wondering why he was the most famous UMie. The caption said "See page three for story", but Rufus turned to page three and those fools at the Collegian did it again---the story was missing

When Rufus got to page seven, he found the story he was looking for. "UMass student is an American Triplet" read the headline. Accompanying the story was another picture of Rufus, this one a portrait of the right side of his face. Rufus frowned quizzically when he saw the picture, trying to remember where he was when it was taken and who took it. He looked more closely at the picture and a saw a sizeable scar on the subjects cheek, and reflexively felt his own cheek, wondering where the scar in the picture came from.

This is a hoax, he concluded. That picture's not me.

The story began: "UMass student, Rufus McWhirter, is the sole survivor of the famed American Triplets..."

Rufus was amused that the picture looked so much like him and that the subject of the story had the same first name. Rufus was relieved to find that Rus McWhirter lived in Southwest, which served as positive proof that the story was not about Rufus at all

Rufus kept reading the story to find out what an American Triplet was.

The American Triplets, he discovered in paragraph three, were Rufus, Rayfus, and Roofus McWhirter, born July 11, 1954 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. When they were delivered, they were connected like link sausages, at the waist. Roofus, according to the Collegian story, died at birth, and was simultaneously chopped, as the old joke goes, from his father's will and his brothers' waists. Rayfus and Rufus remained connected until age five when their parents died, at which time they were successfully separated by surgery. They were adopted by two different couples and never saw each other again. Until, that is Rufus picked up the Collegian that fateful morning.

In 18ll, the article continued, Chang and Eng Bunker were born in Maklong, Thailand (Siam), joined by a cartilaginous band at the chest, and were widely known as the Siamese Twins, a term which has since applied to all conjoined twins.

Rufus, Rayfus, and Roofus McWhirter were the first and only American Triplets.

Chang and Eng, incidentally, went on to marry, at the age of 32, two sisters: the Misses Sarah and Adelaide Yates. Fact: they fathered twenty-two children between and maintained separate residences. Chang and Eng died within three hours of each other at the age of 62, still joined at the chest.

Rufus went through the breakfast line, brought his tray to a table and finished reading the story about Rufus McWhirter, all the while bemused by the fact that McWhirter looked exactly like himself.

That night, before he went to bed, he pulled out his diary and, on the same page that he wrote "Be glad you're not a Russian midget", he wrote this:

"Be glad you're not an American Triplet."

A Shaky Issue

Sewer talk

Current debate amont Amherst town selectmen about how to fund a new 74,000 fire station raises an important question about the University's relationship to the town.

The University of Massachusetts, like Harvard and a score of other Boston-based academic institutions are tax-exempt — they do not pay federal, state or local taxes of any kind.

The philosophical reason for having taxes is to pay for services government provides. Services like sewers, street and water maintenance and police and fire protection. While UMass and the Boston institutions enjoy the benefits of municipal services, they do not assume their costs by paying taxes.

The Cambridge-based universities have for years made a voluntary tax-like contribution to that city in order to pay at least a percentage of their fare share for municipal services.

UMass-Amherst has done the same in-kind through purchase of fire equipment for the Amherst department, gifts of state land to the town, and help with police protection by maintaining large campus police force.

But how far does voluntary cooperation go? That is what the selectmen have been asking as the projected cost for a needed fire station soar and town financial resources shrink.

There is growing feeling on the Board of Selectmen that the honeymoon with UMass is over — that the state university should be required by law to pay for services rendered it.

The Selectmen's position is a reasonable one. Certainly there are many disadvantages to having the town of 13,500 play host to a university community of 25,000. Among them is an incredible increase in traffic requiring a costly town Dept. of Public Works road budget of $118,559.

Moreover, the University, along with Amherst and Hampshire Colleges own 1,661 acres of tax-exempt land according to the Town Assessor's records — 838 of which belongs to UMass. With 18,000 acres in all of Amherst the three institutions are losing the town fully 8 per cent of its tax-producing land yearly — a sizeable chunk, though not as high as the percentage in Boston and Cambridge.

One thing is certain. Whatever arrangement UMass and the town eventually work out to carry a fair share of the tax burden — Boston and Cambridge will be watching.

Run Ted run

Senator Edward Kennedy will be holding a press conference this morning at 10:30. He is expected to announce his future political plans, which of course may include a bid for the presidency in 1976.

We hope that Senator Kennedy opts for a chance at the White House. Politics needs him, so does the country.

The opinions expressed in this space are those of the majority of the editors.

Dormitory cooking

By SUE KIERAS and SUE DUCHIN
Staff Writers

The weekend is the time when all you dorm people have to scrounge up two days of meals.

Now that you've had three weekends of your own cooking, you should be getting sick of peanut-butter and jelly, Spaghettio's and Campbell's Soup.

If you still have money left, you could hit the area restaurants. For you poor people, there are places on campus to go.

The Hatch, open 11 a.m. to 7 p.m., is the only place on campus that offers student specials which are a real bargain, that is if your stomach can handle it. On Sunday they invite you to a $1.29 turkey special that includes roast turkey, dressing, whipped potatoes, garden peas, roll and butter, and jello. On Saturday, you can get a speghetti special with roll and butter.

Be sure to carry an extra quarter for some alka-seltzer on the way home.

But, if you have an hour free, we can offer you a scrumptous recipe any simpleton can do.

You need a hot plate, a mixing bowl, a spatula, and a knife. This recipe was used by Chuck, who cooked for 10 to 20 people on the fourth floor of Cance every Sunday.

Food prices vary in the area. Your best bet on ham is at the Finast deli, for $1.59 a pound, in comparison to $3.00 a pound at Louie's or Munchies. Most grocery stores let you buy eggs by the half-dozen. Onions are usually cheapest by the 5 pound bag. It's worth the investment, since they can be used in any meat, fruit, or egg dish. Cheese is entirely up to you. Velveeta is the cheapest, and mossarella is good, but kinda chewy.

CHUCK'S EGG OMELETTE

Cost: Approximately $2.50 for 4 persons

Ingredients:

8 eggs
½ stick margarine or oil
1-1½ onions, diced
½ pound cheese
½ pound ham
dash of salt, dash of pepper
optional: 1/ 3 cup milk, 1 diced pepper

Begin by beating all the eggs in a medium sized bowl until the yellow and whites blend. Add your spices. Dice the ham, pepper, and cheese — and add into mixture. Turn heat on medium and place enough margarine in the pan to coat bottom. Add ½ of mixture into pan. Let it fry, then flip it over with the spatula and serve. Do this to the other 3 omelettes and enjoy.

Nobody warns the freshman

By DAVID MELLER
Staff Writer

You remember being a freshman, don't you? Being a greshman means not really being prepared for the cute thin things that happen here at UMass.

Freshnman Orientation is supposedly designed to get incoming freshmen acquainted with life patterns on campus during the academic year. It was, I understood, supposed to show me what things are like here.

I can detect a difference between the good roast beef served at Orientation and the Spam sandwiches served during the year. But everyone writes about the food: the waiting in lines for forty five minutes to be told that the originally scheduled meal has been preempted by boiled gook, the quality (or lack of it) of the food finally served, and so on. I won't bring up the subject.

I remember something known as pre-registration: filling out a form, darkening certain boxes with a no. 2 pencil and dropping the form into a box. I don't remember searching for profs to sign forms to get into classes. I certainly don't remember professors saying, "I don't want any freshmen in any of my classes. Good-Bye!"

I don't remember registering for 10 credit hours for the first semester. I really thought, in my foolish youth, that I'd be allowed to take mandatory courses. I thought I'd be allowed to take courses towards my major. I guess that the computer heard that the country needs more steeple painters. That can be the only explanation for my classes.

Another thing that I really wasn't expecting was to be enrolled in the School of Education. I wasn't under the impression that Political Science was in the School of Ed. Maybe OSCAR got me mixed up with another student who had a similar number. After all, how is a computer supposed to be able to tell the difference between two seven digit numbers?

I'd been expecting to get at least eight hours of sleep each night. I wasn't expecting cretins to start setting off fire crackers at 1:00 A.M.

If Summer Orientation really wants to prepare incoming freshmen for campus living, they ought to call all freshmen to Amherst on the same day, and in the middle of the first night, all of the staff should leave. Then freshmen would learn what to expect.

Collegian LIFE/STYLE

Horoscope for UMass

By LARRIE SHEA
Staff Writer

A birthday! On May 6th, 1947 at 10:50 A.M. EDST at the State House in Boston, Governor Robert Bradford signed the legislation creating The University of Massachusetts at Amherst. The following is an interpretation of the Personality of UMass through a Horoscope. All of us who are in anyway associated with the University help to define that personality.

Horoscope comes from the Greek word meaning astrologer: hora, hour•skopos, observer. Horoscope, as generally employed by an astrologer, refers to a map of the heavens (position of the sun, moon, and planets) for a given date, hour and location. Any person or Entity that fits these qualifications is eligible for a horoscope.

Essentially, there are three major components in a horoscope. They are the sun, the moon, and the ascendant (ASC), or sign that is rising in the east at the given time. The twelve houses of the horoscope provide the background or frame of reference for the sun, moon, and planets. The sun, moon, and planets and the signs that they are found in represent the potential that is lived out in the field of life experience that the twelve houses represent.

THE SYMBOL FOR THE SUN IS THE CONSCIOUS PURPOSE OF LIFE, THE GOAL, AND THE SOURCE OF VITAL ENERGY. UMass has the Sun in the tenth house in the sign of Taurus, The Bull. This means that UMass naturally assumes a position of command, authority, and executive control. Taurus is a fixed earth sign that is naturally conservative, dependable, and nourishing. Taurus needs some kind of function to perform. Yet, because Gemini is on the house of the UMass Sun, we must look to a still higher authority and be willing to sit at the feet of this authority until we can prove ourself. This higher authority is the State of Massachusetts whose Sun falls in the seventh house of UMass, THE HOUSE OF PARTNERSHIP. The State is our senior partner, as well as our parent, since it begot UMass.

THE MOON IN A HOROSCOPE REPRESENTS THE WAY IN WHICH AN INDIVIDUAL PUTS INTO DAILY ACTIVITY THEIR BASIC PURPOSE OR GOAL. The Moon Actualizes the Sun's potential. UMass has the Moon in Sagittarius in the fourth house, which means that we have a tendency to be over-sensitive about our background and heritage (the old Mass Aggie days...). But UMass responds in an optimistic, enthusiastic, and expansive way to its problems. Sag is social and likes a good time...UMass likes to party. Sometimes this response, which is based on faith and uplift, can get carried away on a moral and ideological plane and leave the physical-material plane unattended. For Sag the whole pattern is more important than the parts. SAGITTARIUS IS ASSOCIATED WITH HIGHER EDUCATION AND THE FOURTH HOUSE REPRESENTS INHERITED QUALITIES. UMass certainly inherited the educational qualities of Mass Agricultural College and Mass State College (former identities).

Now we come to the ascendant (ASC), which for UMass is Leo the Lion. THE ASCENDANT IS THE IMAGE OF THE PERSONALITY. THIS IS HOW THE WORLD SEES THE INDIVIDUAL. IT IS THE IMAGE THAT ATTRACTS ALL INITIAL CONTACTS. This gives us a flashy aggressive personality which demands constant and responsive attention at all times. Leo must be the center of attention because Leo is the Ego. LEO IMPLIES INDIVIDUAL INVENTIVENESS, RESOURCEFULNESS, AND A STRONG WILL TO CARRY THROUGH ON PLANS. YET, THERE IS A TENDENCY TO FEEL LIKE ONE IS BORN TO RULE AND TO EXERCISE PREROGATIVE OF POSITION. And, as the Sun, which is the ruler of Leo is in the tenth house, UMass has a tendency to assume a position of command, and to hold onto it dearly, as if it were Divine Right.

THE DESCENDANT, WHICH IS OPPOSITE THE ASCENDANT, COLORS THE OUTSIDE WORLD AS THE INDIVIDUAL SEES IT. UMass has an Aquarian Asc. This means that UMass has questional feelings and judgements about the outside world. This quality can work well when there is a strong authoritative support, but when support is weak for these questionings the outlook tends to become unrealistic and fabricated, which can lead to a glorious all-or-nothing flourish. Although this may appear impressive, it can be empty.

It is important to note that the planet Saturn is on our Ascendant. SATURN SYMBOLIZES STRUCTURAL FORM. IT GIVES FORM TO THE CONSCIOUS MOTIVE OR GOAL, WHICH IS SYMBOLIZED BY THE SUN. This means that UMass suffers from an inferiority complex, which has to be overcome. Our sense of personality and self-worth has been - slow to develop, but a solid and reliable image is bound to emerge. There is a tendency toward reserve, which tends to put people off because they think that we are being unfriendly. But this is an innate shyness, which accompanies an inferiority complex, coupled with a need to move cautiously in order to feel secure.

It is no secret that we have played second fiddle to Amherst College and the other more established schools in the area, both academically and prestigiously. Since Saturn is related to agriculture, perhaps the old Cow-College spectre is still with us.

I would like to extend my gratitude and appreciation to Harold Cary, a UMass Historian, who provided the accurate data for this Astrological assessment. Reader's reactions are encouraged and welcomed. Thank you......Peace.

Francis Fitzgerald: 'A look at Viet Nam'

Francis Fitzgerald's book Fire in the Lake has been called by New Yorker magazine, "brilliant, original and compassionate." The famed authoress will be on campus tomorrow, Tuesday Sept. 24, to speak on "Cultural Freedom--- a Look at Viet Nam."

The lecture is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and will be in Thompson 102 at 8:00. A coffee hour will follow in the colonial Lounge.

Ms. Fitzgerald has made several trips to Viet Nam as a news correspondant and most recently returned from Saigon where she covered the Vietnamese elections.

Two students forming anti-racist cadre

Two UMass students are trying to start a local cadre of the National Alliance Against Racist and Political Repression the radical political support group formed in Chicago in 1973 to support Angela Davis.

The primary thrust of the effort will be an "organizational and program meeting" tomorrow night (Tuesday) in Campus Center room 904 at 7:30 p.m., according to Isabel Johnston, 22, one of the students.

"What we'll do at the meeting is define issues that will be dealt with on the Amherst campus, the Asian History major from Belchertown said.

She said possible campus issues might be police brutality and discussion of Puerto Rican independence but "we pretty much want those at the program meeting to define the issues."

The Alliance has 20 to 30,000 members nationwide and was founded in May 1973 at a convention in Chicago, Johnston said. With another student, Paul Mishler, she described the Alliance in a press statement to The Collegian.

"The founding conference signified the largest united efforts of anti-racist forces since the early days of the civil rights movement.

"Black, white, Chicano, Puerto Rican, native American, Asian and Arab representation indicated that the Alliance would function as a multi-racial organization," the statement said.

Organizations at the founding convention included the Puerto Rican Socialist Party, the American Indian Movement, the Communisty Party, the United Auto Workers, Almalgamated Meatcutters and Union of Electrical workers, the statement said.

In order to successfully combat racist and political repression on a national or international level, the Alliance must have strong local support for its programs.

"The high incidence of racist repression at UMass necessitates a unified effort on the part of members of the UMass community," the statement concluded.

Interpreting

ternational Conference Interpreters there are 220 members who interpret from the foreign language into English vs. 322 members whose 2nd language is English. In other organizations the proportion of Americans is often much smaller.

Both Chancellor Bromery and the French Department are in favor of the proposal. Interpreter's studies programs at universities have been opposed in the past because they were considered too practical and not academic enough. The emphasis is changing however because of the high costs of the academic experience.

Students interested in learning more about the program can contact Dr. Martin — office: 427 Herter, phone 545-0777 or Mr. and Mrs. D'han Bertier, Herter 739, professional interpreters at the common market.

The Student-Senate funded group is trying to organize the 18,000 UMass undergraduates in a collective bargaining unit and needs student support to succeed, according to Nester King, 22, a graduate of Florida State University and staff member of the organizing project.

"We're holding meetings in dormitories to inform people in small groups of the goals of the organizing project," King said, adding, "the people who come to these meetings will form 'seed groups' for an eventual petition drive."

Dorm canvassing tonight will pave the way for a general referendum election to approve or disapprove of the student union sometime before the end of the semester, she said.

There is some question whether a union would be legal under Massachusetts law. No other such union in Massachusetts exists. But King said student unions exist at Rutgers in New Jersey and Stockton State College in New Jersey.

The University administration has not yet taken a position on the unionization activity, but it is expected that it will rely heavily on past legal precedent.

The project will be conducting informational meetings in the following dormitories tonight:

The following will be at 7 p.m. in the Main Lounge tonight:

Baker, Brett, Brown, Mary Lyon, Lewis, Greenough, Coolidge (all levels).

The following will be at 9 p.m. in the Main Lounge tonight.

The heel of the Earth* shoe is actually lower than the toe. This allows you to walk naturally. Like when you walk barefoot in sand or soft earth and your heel sinks down lower than your toes.

The entire sole of the Earth shoe is molded in a very special way. This allows you to walk in a gentle rolling motion. And to walk easily and comfortably on the hard jarring cement of our cities.

But remember, just because a shoe looks like ours doesn't mean it works like ours. So to be sure you're getting the Earth brand shoe, look on the sole for our Earth trademark and U.S. Patent #3305947.

Riding, renting and rip-offs

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND
Special Correspondent

Howland is a private attorney in Amherst and a former lawyer for students at UMass-Amherst. His column of legal advice for students has run in The Collegian weekly for two years. It resumes today.

Correspondence and legal questions of general interest may be directed to Atty. Howland at P. O. Box 770, Amherst, 01002. Not all letters will receive a response.

As with any beginning, starting a fall semester is an occasion when by early action later legal problems may be avoided.

AUTOMOBILES — Be sure they are registered, insured, and if you are an out-of-state undergraduate, obtain a special student sticker from the police department. graduate students with cars registered in states other than Massachusetts are probably not lawfully registered. Under Massachusetts Motor Vehicle Law (chapter 90) the usual "graduate student" is not a "student" and must therefore register any vehicle in Massachusetts.

INSPECTION — All motor vehicles (including motorcycles) must be inspected and receive a red sticker before October 15. The next day Amherst will be crawling with Registry officials and police busting uninspected cars. Avoid the problem ... get it inspected and if necessary, corrected now, before the deadline.

TENANTS — Tenant problems occur in many different ways throughout the year but a few procedures now may avoid many hassles later.

First read your lease carefully and find out what it says. Even if you have already signed it you can still learn interesting stuff. Try to make sure that if you pay utilities that the proper authorities have been notified. Make certain that you know where and when to pay rent.

Second, go through your leasehold and note every defect, hole, bad point, broken windows, or other problem on a list. Give a copy to the landlord and ask that your copy be signed (you sign too) by the landlord or manager. Next spring or summer when you leave, this list is your primary defense against unjustified damage claims.

Third, make certain you know the name, address, and phone number of who to call for complaints or problems. The landlord has a legal obligation to post this information in a public place.

SHOPLIFTING — As far as I can tell, a substantial number of shoplifters are identified by storekeepers and appear in court daily. They usually pay between 50 and 100 times the value of the stolen article and face a criminal record which can have a lousy effect on the future. Most shoplifters need to pay substantial legal fees too. It's probably wiser to decline ownership until you are in fact the owner in due course. Avoid spontaneous acquisitions. it can take years to clear up.

ARRESTS — If you are arrested or are informed of "your rights" as a suspect, the best advice is shut up and get in touch with your lawyer in due course. Disregard any other option. Shut up, call your lawyer when you have the chance and, shut up.

BAIL — Follow your lawyer's advice on bail. Before you talk to the lawyer, if you are considering bail, try to find out what your options are. Sometimes you may be literally throwing your money and defense away for no reason and very little return. The situations vary, so get advice before you pay bail. The only real exception is paying cash bail in full to bail commissioner (usually Clerk of Court) which is all refunded so long as you appear as required. Remember, the Clerk can legally charge for setting bail, usually between $10 and $25.

Guinea & PAIGC Symposium tonight

Today a symposium on Guinea Bissau and the P.A.I.G.C., the party of the liberation movement, will be held in Dickinson main lounge at 8:00. Sept. 24 is the commemoration of Luis Cabral's proclamation of independence for Guinea Bissau and the Cape Verde Islands, one year prior to Portugals withdrawal of colonial forces.

Speakers include Richard Lobben who recently returned from Guinea Bissau, several members of P.A.I.G.C.-U.S.A. from the only affiliate organization of the party here in the States, and two Cape Verdian community organizers from the Amherst area.

In 1973 at the time of the proclamation of independence P.A.I.G.C. held two-thirds of the territory of Guinea Bissau. However, Portugal did not relinquish its nominal control despite the motions for United Nations recognition until after the military junta in Portugal.

Prior to the junta 60 percent of the National Budget of Portugal was allocated to defense of the colonial territories, now motions are being made for the self-determination of all the Portuguese African territories, and for the internal development of the Portuguese economy.

The symposium is the first event in an educational series sponsored by the Amherst Branch of the Young Workers Liberation League. Orchard Hill Residential College will hold an informal reception following the symposium.

The Canon F-I.
Images are what it's all about.

Photographic equipment can be a trap. Sometimes, you can get so involved with it that you lose sight of your real purpose—making photographs.

The Canon F-1 can help you forget about equipment and concentrate on images. It was designed, and functions, as an extension of your photographic vision. It's responsive in a way that you must experience to appreciate. And since it was conceived as a system camera, every part works together with effortless smoothness, from the more than 40 Canon FD and FL lenses to the over 200 accessories.

The heart of the camera is it's central spot metering system. With it you can use anyone's exposure system, no matter how critical, since it only measures the central 12% of the finder area—regardless of the focal length used.

So if you're spending too much time lately worrying about your equipment, it's time you stopped, and took a good look at the Canon F-1 system, and Canon's other fine cameras—the automatic, electronic EF, the full-feature FTb, and the TLb. If you're interested in images, Canon's your camera.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Tuesday, September 24

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — An energetic approach to the day's labors should prove helpful both to your image and to the results of your efforts. Keep in touch with old friends.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Your immediate success or failure will very likely be decided upon the basis of this day's efforts. Do your best to accommodate all events.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Those in authority should be ready to listen to you at this time. Get your points across — accurately and without any animosity.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Unless you can win your point without doing harm to another, you would be better off losing out all together. Make friends of enemies.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Younger family members may be in need of some special consideration today, especially where their plans for the immediate future are concerned.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The problems of children may not be large—but they are vital to the well-being of the family as a whole. Help keep the present situation stable.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Your general level of efficiency should be such that results are better than usual. Depend upon another to see things your way.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Share the benefits of recent efforts with those who were good and generous enough to help out when the going got rough. Overlook no one.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You may well find yourself sharing the spotlight with an old enemy today. Don't allow yourself the luxury of demonstrating your anger.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Be ready to accept your share of any blame for the present situation at work. You can make amends later in the week if amends are in order.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Should you be in a position to please the public with any action or decision, take your time. You can ill afford to make a mistake in judgment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Although others would be pleased to see you with a smiling face, there is no need to put on a false face. Let your feelings be known.

Sox fall 7-2, Yanks boost lead

BOSTON [AP] – Boog Powell drove in three runs with three hits, including a home run, to lead the Baltimore Orioles to a 7-2 victory over the fading Boston Red Sox Sunday.

The victory left the second-place Orioles one game behind the New York Yankees in the American League East, while the Red Sox fell five behind. The Yankees defeated the Cleveland Indians 2-1.

Baltimore jumped on Boston starter Reggie Cleveland, 11-14, for three runs in the first inning before Diego Segui put down the uprising with the bases loaded.

Powell popped a broken-bat single to shallow center to drive in a run in the first, belted his 11th homer of the year into the Baltimore bullpen in right in the third and singled across another run in the fifth.

Staked to the early 3-0 lead, Baltimore's Mike Cuellar breezed to his 21st victory against 10 losses. Cuellar, who hasn't lost a decision since Aug. 24, hurled hitless ball for 3 2-3 innings and finished with a eight-hitter.

Cleveland ran into trouble at the outset, walking Rich Coggins on four pitches. Paul Blair promptly scored Coggins with a double to left-center.

Cleveland retired the next two batters, but Powell got a bloop single, scoring Blair. After Don Baylor walked, Brooks Robinson lined a single to left, Powell easily beating Tommy Harper's weak throw to the plate. Ellie Hendricks was hit by a pitch and Segki replaced Cleveland.

Powell's homer made it 4-0 before Boston scored on a walk and singles by Deron Johnson and Rick Burleson in the fourth.

The Orioles added another run on Bobby Grick's double to left-center and Powell's single to left in the fifth. Boston scored a run in its half on singles by Harper, Juan Beniquez and Dwight Evans.

With the scoreboard showing the Yankees had finished a 2-1 victory over Cleveland, the Orioles picked up two insurance runs in the ninth. Blair beat out a bunt, stole second and scored on a Tommy Davis single. Then a wild pitch and a single by Baylor provided another run.

NEW YORK [AP] – Bobby Murcer lashed a tie-breaking home run in the sixth inning and Pat Dobson and Sparky Lyle combined to pitch a four-hitter, leading the first-place New York Yankees to a 2-1 victory over the Cleveland Indians Sunday.

With the score tied 1-1 and two out in the sixth, Murcer cracked his 10th homer of the season, a blast off Cleveland starter Bruce Ellingsen, 1-1.

The homer broke up a pitching duel between Ellingsen and Dobson, 17-15, who won his seventh game in his last eight decisions.

Dobson allowed only three singles. The only run off the Yankee starter was scored in the first inning without benefit of a hit. John Lowenstein walked to lead off the game, moved to third on an error by Dobson and scored on Frank Robinson's grounder.

The Yankees tied the score in the fourth when Elliott Maddox walked, took second on Murcer's single, went to third on a long foul pop by Lou Piniella and scored on Thurman Munson's sacrifice fly.

Dobson gave up three hits over the first eight innings, but John Lowenstein singled to lead off the ninth. He moved to second on a sacrifice bunt and, after Robinson walked, took third on a long fly ball.

Buy Lyle then relieved Dobson and retired pinch-hitter Charlie Spikes on a tapper to the mound to record his 15th save of the season.

St. Louis nips NY

ST. LOUIS [AP] – Ted Simons drilled a two-out, run-scoring single in the bottom of the ninth inning to give the St. Louis Cardinals a 6-5 victory over the Chicago Cubs, increasing their lead in the National League East to 1½ games over Pittsburgh.

The Pirates dropped a 4-0 decision to the New York Mets. Lou Brock singled with one out in the ninth and, one out later, Reggie Smith walked. Then Simmons' lashed his game-winning hit off loser Dave LaRoche.

Simmons' 19th home run, Smith's double and two triples shot the Cards ahead 4-1 before the Cubs wiped out the lead with the aid of shaky St. Louis fielding.

Bob Gibson was breezing along in the sixth when Andre Thornton and Pete LaCock singled. After pinch-hitter Billy Williams walked to load the bases, Rick Monday singled home two runs and another scored on second baseman Ted Sizemore's error.

Monday and Kessinger then worked a double steal and Monday scored for a 5-4 Chicago lead on Bill Madlock's sacrifice fly.

UMass came blasting out at the beginning of the second half and continued to control the ball and outshoot on the goal but not until 27 minutes into the second half did the Minutemen tie it up on a goal by Bob McChesney on a corner kick assist by Mohammed Othman. Then seven minutes later it was Othman on another corner kick, assisting Bob Snow to put UMass in the lead 2-1. The final goal of the game came at fifty-one minutes into the half as Co-Captain Jim Vollinger found himself all alone in front of the goal and slammed one home to make it 3-1 and assure the Minutemen a victory.

Steady performances can be credited to backs Bill Macdonald, Alan Long, Gary McKenna, Dan Ouellette, and Mike Parsons. Forwards Billy Belcher, Bob Snow, Bob McChesney and Steve Sormanti kept the pressure on the Crimson line.

The Minutemen open their regular season play Tuesday night under the lights and on the Astro-Turf at Boston College's Alumni Field as they meet the BC Eagles.

Patriots topple Giants, 28-20

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

NEW HAVEN, Conn. [AP] - Sparked for the second straight week by the weaving dashes of little Mack Herron and the power drives of Sam Cunningham, the New England Patriots overcame an improved New York Giants' offensive display Sunday with a 28-20 National Football League victory.

After last week's 34-24 stunning victory over Miami, the Patriots are 2-0. The Giants, whose defense sparkled a week ago in a 13-10 loss to Washington, are 0-2.

The game drew a paid crowd of 49,267, the second straight week of less than a full house at the Yale Bowl.

The Patriots set out on what proved to be their winning drive midway through the third period. Herron returned a punt 20 yards to New York's 34. Five plays later, quarterback Jim Plunkett dropped back, found no teammate free down the middle, and lobbed the ball to Cunningham, who was all alone on the right side. He ran it over to complete a 14-yard touchdown play with 10:34 gone in the period. John Smith's extra point made the score 21-14.

The Giants punted after failing to move on the next series and New England started from its own 20. It took the Patriots 11 plays to get to the Giants' four-yard line and a first down. Herron, the 5-foot-5 former Canadian Football League player in his second year with the Patriots, then ambled along the right side and skipped into the end zone, making the score 28-14.

But New York fought back. Leon McQuay took the ensuing kickoff 72 yards to the Patriots' 22. On the fifth play from scrimmage, Norm Snead hit Ron Johnson on the right side, two yards short of the end zone on the right side and the running back went in to complete the nine-yard play. The extra point attempt failed when the snap from center was fumbled.

Both quarterbacks had strong games. Plunkett completed 11 of 17 passes for 152 yards and the three TDs to Cunningham, Herron and Randy Vataha. Snead connected on 28 of 35 passes for 272 yards and one TD.

Cunningham, who ran for 87 yards against Miami, picked up 76 against the Giants. Herron, who gained 88 last week, added 74. For the second straight week, New York had trouble moving the ball on the ground. Johnson was the big gainer with 27 yards in 17 attempts. The first half was a contrast, the Patriots favoring the quick strike while the Giants worked their way downfield on two scoring drives and one 76-yard march stopped inside the Partiots' one-yard line.

The Patriots had the ball for only 8 minutes 31 seconds in the first half. They ran only six plays from scrimmage in the second quarter.

Snead began by picking apart the middle of the New England defense, completing two passes to Bob Tucker and one to Joe Dawkins that brought the Giants to the Patriots' 21. Snead passed to Johnson at the 15. Johnson shook linebacker John Tanner and fought his way to the end zone to cap a 72-yard drive with the 3:49 old.

The Patriots tied the score about 10 minutes later when Herron took a pass from Plunkett on the left side at the Giants' five and rolled in.

The Giants then embarked on a 15-play, 63-yard drive that ended 6:49 later with Dawkins crashing over right tackle for a one-yard touchdown.

But the Patriots struck back with lightning quickness. Herron took the kickoff at his own goal line and rambled 62 yards. On the first play from scrimmage, Plunkett spotted ex-Stanford teammate Vataha down the fight sideline. Vataha got behind cornerback Pete Athas and hauled in the 38-yard pass with an end zone dive. Smith's conversion tied the game at 14-14.

The Giants' final drive of the half lasted about seven minutes. It ended in futility with Johnson gaining two yards on three cracks at the Patriots' goal line and Dawkins being stopped inches from paydirt on fourth down.

College football roundup

By IRA MILLER
UPI Sports Writer

The college football rankings will have a strange look this week. Eight of the nation's top 20 teams, including such perennials as Nebraska, Louisiana State and Penn State, were defeated Saturday, a day that produced as many shockers as any Saturday in recent seasons.

The results were all the more stunning because this was supposed to be a "blowout" weekend, a time when the ranked teams were expected to enhance their prestige by running up big scores over inferior opponents.

It didn't exactly turn out that way.

Instead, the only thing that got blown out was the top 20.

Losers besides Nebraska (No. 4), LSU (6) and Penn State (7) were Arkansas (9), UCLA (11), Maryland (tie 14), Georgia (tie 18) and Houston (tie 18).

Although the result in each case was an upset, none of them were any more unexpected than the one at Iowa City. Iowa, 0-11 a year ago, stunned UCLA 21-10 behind two touchdown passes by Bob Fick.

"We have started to take that long road back," said Iowa's happy coach, Bob Commings, who was a high school coach at this time last season.

Another team on the way back is Navy. The Middies scored their biggest victory in years Saturday when Penn State fumbled the ball away five times and missed four field goals, enabling Navy to escape with a 7-6 victory – the first Eastern team to defeat Penn State since 1970.

The victory gave Navy a 2-0 start for the first time in a decade, but Coach George Welsh was honest enough to concede his team had some help.

"The big thing that kept us in the game was their errors – we might not have held up without them," said Welsh, who was Joe Paterno's top assistant at Penn State until he took the Navy job last season.

Nebraska, a 61-7 winner in its opening game, lost 21-20 to Wisconsin when the Badgers struck for a 77-yard touchdown pass from Gregg Bohlig to Jeff Mack with less than four minutes to go. Bohlig completed 14 of 21 passes for 242 yards.

A one-yard scoring plunge by Bucky Sams with 5:46 left gave Texas A&M a 21-14 upset over LSU at Baton Rouge.

UMASS DOMINATES, 42-0

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

It wasn't flashy, it wasn't very exciting, it wasn't the kind of football that would fill football stadiums, but it was just what the UMass Minutemen needed: a convincing, no, make that a dominating 42-0 victory of the Maine Black Bears in Orono, making it five straight whitewashes in a row for UMass over Maine.

As the UMass opener in the Yankee Conference it was just fine. It proved to the Minutemen that they're a force to be reckoned with and proved to the rest of the conference that UMass is for real.

It wasn't the type of game that would elicit oohs and aahs from college football aficianados. UMass established their superiority right from the first block and though Maine tried gamely one could sense that they weren't in the same class as the Minutemen.

The Minutemen took the opening kiçkoff and in six plays moved from their own 24 to the Maine 42. Then on first down, Mark Tripucka's attempted pass to Lee Harriman tipped off the flanker's hands to Maine's Rich McCormick who ran the interception back eleven yards only to fumble the ball back to UMass. Nine plays later Rich Jessamy scored on a quick opener off right tackle from the nine and the Minutemen were off and running.

Off and running was really the story of the afternoon UMass. The Minutemen ran the ball 66 times from scrimmage for 307 yards in what has turned from the anemic ground attack of 1973 into the awesome ground attack of 1974. In their first two games this year UMass has piled up 530 yards on the ground. Compare that with last year's total of 749 yards and you can see how awesome the running is.

Mark Tripucka started for the Minutemen and showed, if one game is any indication, that he can replace injured Fred Kelliker more than adequately. Tripucka worked the veer option with more authority than he did against Villanova last week, and picked up 35 yards on six carries himself.

His play calling could not be faulted as he kept the Black Bear defense mystified with off tackle slants and quick openers by Rich Jessamy and dives by fullback Keith Lang. Mix that with a dab of passing and you've got a 26-0 UMass halftime lead.

Ball control was the key word in the early going for UMass. It took Maine almost half of the second quarter to move the ball into UMass territory. What's worse Maine had the ball for four plays in the first quarter and gained minus five yards.

In a 42-0 game, you might think that to say there was a turning point would be ridiculous, but there was one. With the score 12-0 after a Jim Torrance 1-yard plunge on the second play of the second quarter, Maine got the ball on the 31 and led by quarterback John Cosgrove moved all the way to the UMass 18. On first down Cosgrove went around left end on a keeper and just as he was about to be swarmed under by a bevy of tacklers pitched out to running back Mark De Gregorio. Unfortunately for Maine, UMass defensive back John Van Burne came out of nowhere, picked the ball out of the air and scampered untouched 82 yards to paydirt.

After that the game was beyond doubt. John Romboli scored the first of his two touchdowns near the end of the second quarter. Keith Lang scored on a straight dive play from the one on a drive keyed by a John Toner interception of a Cosgrove pass at the Maine 48 and added to a Greg Sprout field goal and Romboli's second td, the rout was completed.

The second half from a fan's standpoint had little to offer. The most exciting play occured when Van Buren picked off a pass thrown by Al Malnak, Cosgrove's replacement only to have the play washed out for a pass interference penalty.

Other than that third quarter play, the second half was nothing to shout about. Peter Colton replaced Tripucka and played the entire second half, doing a very commendable job.

"We thought it was a good time to polish up our running game so we stuck on the ground," said UMass Coach Dick MacPherson in explaining the absence of passing from the UMass repertoire."

The only UMass passing play of any real consequence was a 58-yard bomb to wide receiver Mark Finnerty which led to Romboli's first six-pointer. But as split end Gary Mika said after the game, "our running attack is awesome, but we haven't had to use our passing game yet cause we haven't had to." If UMass can have half the success in the air as they've had on the ground, their offense will be nothing short of unstoppable.

Mika was the only UMass injury of any consequence. He sat out most of the last three quarters after bruising his shoulder in a pile of tacklers but it won't keep Mika out of action for any length of time.

The most impressive thing about the UMass victory was the fact that the Minutemen displayed so much depth in their lineup. Although Rich Jessamy and Keith Lang were typically superb in their short stints, (Jessamy had 61 yards and Lang 44), Jerry Mondalto, Jim Torrance, and Bob Zawada all did a great job of filling in. But the newest UMass offensive phenom had to be punter John Romboli who gained 69 yards on eleven carries to lead UMass rushers and scored two of the UMass touchdowns.

"I was really happy with Romboli," said Coach MacPherson. "He has great balance and bounce and he's the type of guy that can be an inspiration to the rest of the team." Romboli showed great poise on a second quarter punt when he got the ball off after dropping the snap and still kicked it 38 yards.

Looking to next week against Dartmouth, the game looms as a mystery for everyone, because Coach Jake Crouthamel has prevented any UMass scouts at Dartmouth scrimmages. Come next Saturday at Hanover though, the question of whether Dartmouth has something or nothing to hide will be answered.

The UMass defense also had its share of great performances. While the first team was in, Maine could do nothing, and even with the second team in the Black Bears had little more luck.

Rumbling John Romboli drives into the Maine end zone for the first of his two touchdowns in Saturday's 42-0 UMass victory. Romboli, the UMass punter, was used as a running back and led all UMass rushers with 69 yards. Steve Falvey, the UMass guard (number 52) is about to jump for joy as Romboli dives in for "the big six" clutching the leg of fallen UMass center Bruce Pinto who led the charge.

Booters blast Harvard, 3-1

By JOHN BOCK
Sports Staff

Harvard College may not qualify as a participant in big time college athletics, but nonetheless there is something impressive about any athletic contest hosted on the Crimson turf.

Last Saturday, however, it was the UMass soccer team that was doing the impressing as they put together a lot of hustle and ended up with a 3-1 pre-season scrimmage victory over the twelfth ranked Crimson. It was a big win for UMass in several ways. It is always good to beat an Ivy League team on their own ground. Then the three goals scored were a result of what Coach Al Rufe called "team play."

"We definitely played as team today instead of so many individual efforts in previous scrimmages. We controlled the midfield and had our backs hustling to play defense when the ball was turned over where before they had lagged behind."

There were veterans missing like Tom Coburn and Tony King, both scoring leaders in 1973, but with the frequent substituting that saw almost the whole team play there was a remarkable continuity of performance.

The first twenty minutes of the game saw UMass outshoot Harvard on the goal about three to one. The skills displayed were all coming from the Minutemen but it was Harvard that got on the board first with a goal right before the half. Almost immediately thereafter Co-Captain Carl Vercollone was hurt in the goal on a Harvard attempt and suffered a bruise to the top of the thigh that sidelined him for the remainder of the game.

Kennedy decides not to run

BOSTON (UPI) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, burdened with family problems and the shadow of a tragic automobile accident, said yesterday he had made a "firm, final and unconditional" decision against running for president or vice president in 1976.

In refusing to follow his assassinated brothers into a Presidential campaign, the 42 year old Kennedy, last surviving son of a star struck family, said "My primary responsibilities are at home."

His son Ted Jr., who will be 13 Thursday, had his right leg amputated last November in an effort to halt bone cancer, and his wife Joan, who was with the senator at the Parker House Hotel news conference, has been hospitalized three times recently with emotional fatigue.

In addition to his immediate family, Kennedy is the father figure to the two children of the late President John F. Kennedy and the 11 children of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, who was gunned down while running for President in 1968. Ted and Joan have three children.

"From the campaigns of my brothers before me, I know that seeking the nation's highest office demands a candidate's undivided attention and his deepest personal commitment," said Kennedy. "I simply cannot do that to my wife and children and the other members of my family."

Lovejoy trial:

Zinn evidence blocked

By DAVID GREENSLIT

GREENFIELD Superior Court Judge Kent B. Smith ruled yesterday that "motivation is not acceptable as a legal defense" and barred the jury in the Sam Lovejoy trial from hearing the defense testimony of Prof. Howard Zinn, a political science professor at Boston University.

Yesterday's session began an hour late as Smith studied a legal brief, prepared by Lovejoy over the weekend, concerning the relevance of Zinn's testimony.

Zinn, an expert on the history of civil disobedience, had testified with the jury absent on Friday that there has been an "historical tolerance of acts intended to help the community." He said that the jury should "go beyond technical observance of the law" and listen to the motives behind Lovejoy's act.

Lovejoy is charged with willful and malicious destruction of personal property in the Feb. 22 downing of a 500 foot environmental tower on the Montague Plains, site of Northeast Utilities' proposed $1.52 billion nuclear power plant. He has accepted full responsibility for toppling the tower, which he called symbolic of "one of the gravest dangers to ever face this country or the world."

Earlier last week, Smith also prevented the jury from hearing defense witness Dr. John W. Gofman, a noted nuclear physicist and expert on radiation's effect on the human body. Lovejoy had hoped that Gofman's testimony would lend credibility to his belief that nuclear danger was indeed a grave threat. Zinn's testimony was intended to persuade the jury that Lovejoy' act was rational in view of the circumstances.

Lovejoy has said that in light of the danger posed by nuclear power, his act was not malicious, but beneficial to the community.

Smith has already said that he cannot "in all good conscience" sentence Lovejoy if he is convicted, but would then report the case to the Supreme Judicial Court for their determination.

Yesterday's ruling on Zinn's testimony and last week's ruling on Gofman's are two points that may be reviewed by the higher court. A third is Smith's decision to have the jury decide whether the property destroyed was personal or real, since all relevant cases on the subject are more than 150 years old.

UMass prof advances syph cure

By P.J. Prokop
Staff Reporter

Dr. Charles D. Cox, Professor of Microbiology at UMass, has discovered that the syphilis organism, a spirochete called Treponema pallidum, is aerobic (requires oxygen for growth).

A spirochete is a pale, spiral shaped microbe which resembles a coil. With this new information, he hopes that the syphilis causing organism can be grown for the first time, in the laboratory.

Cox has been working on this spirochete for approximately a year and a half. His research is funded by the Federal Government because it is targetable toward a societal problem.

If the organism can be grown, there are hopes that ultimately a syphilis vaccine can be developed, according to Cox. This would be a major breakthrough in the prevention of syphilis, which, if left untreated, can be fatal.

Dr. Cox, whose work has been recently published in both The New York Times and Time magazine, is working closely with his Technician, Miriam Barber and assistants Neal Schiller, Paul Lysko, Ellen Collins, and Anne McGivney. They have contradicted traditional scientific thinking by their findings.

According to Microbiology textbooks, Treponema pallidum is anaerobic, which means that the spirochete would only grow in an environment without oxygen.

Treponema pallidum has been classified as anaerobic since 1905.

Library to adapt air for Dubois papers

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

University Library administrators plan to install a separate air conditioning unit in the room where the papers of black author, W. E. Dubois are housed.

The DuBois papers were purchased by the University last year and are the most valuable collection in the library.

The papers are in fragile condition and temperature and humidity must be closely regulated to prevent further deterioration according to Ms. Kathrine Emerson, Director of Archives.

The Library's central air conditioning began malfunctioning when the library first opened in the summer of 1973. At that time the system failed to drain the humidity and approximately 100,000 gallons of water flooded the basement damaging both machinery and controls.

"This is the root cause of a variety of other problems" said Mr. Gordan Fretwell, associate director for public services.

Damaged machinery and controls will be replaced within two weeks said Fretwell. The replacement delay was attributed to a long fact finding period to determine who was at fault the University or the contractors.

However, "new buildings of the size and complexity of the library go through a breaking-in period from one to two years, but the flood was not expected and clearly a design or manufacturing defect" said Fretwell.

Guinea Bissa symposium an enlightening experience

By SHERWOOD THOMPSON

There were reason given to support Portugal "timely" removal from Guinea Bissau, among them were the fact that the social structure of Portugal was unstable, and in a state of change. It was stated that the economy was weak and the cost of upkeeping the war and political colonalization was very high.

With the increase spirit of struggle, the extention and sophistication of warfare, the freedom of Guinea Bissau became a reality. Prof. Lobban stated that the struggle waged was certainly a "milestone in the Epic of History of European Colonialization."

The symposium on Guinea Bissa and the Cape Verde Islands was an exchange of knowledge both current and historical. The program opened with Prof. Richard Lobban who recently returned from Guinea Bissa. He informed the well attended group that the conditions present in South Africa is one of increase political awareness among the African masses.

The African Party for the Independence of Guinea Bissau and the Cape Verde Islands (P.A.I.G.C.), with the support of international friends and comrades led the struggle for independence from Portugal. It's leadership and the spirit of African people advanced the determination of the fight to an unbeatable end.

The symposium continued with many other speakers, among them were Theresa Carr, Jackie Ramos, P.A.I.G.C. Support Committee; John Andrade, Faith Rivera, Bruce Rose, Ellie Gonsalves and Jackie Ramos.

The Young Workers Liberation League (Y.W.L.L.) presented this program as a first of many forums that will be held at the university. These programs are set up to present viewpoints and analysis which are useful in the struggle against imperialism and racism, for internationalism and socialism," stated the Y.W.L.L. materials. Their intentions are that the people participating in "the struggle against imperialism and racism will join with us in this work."

when it was first discovered, Cox said.

Cox, who is interested in the problem of syphilis because of its effect on public health, found it to be a challenge that 69 years later, after the initial discovery of the spirochete, very little research had been done on the organism. He proceeded to spend three months researching the world's literature on syphilis.

Previously, Cox had spent over 20 years studying leptospira, which are very closely related to Treponema pallidum.

In his research, he found no solid evidence was available to classify Treponema pallidum as anaerobic, so he went to work to find the answer. This resulted in the breakthrough that the spirochetes do require oxygen for growth.

Cox feels that if the syphilis bacterium can be grown, then it can be found how it damages arteries, and the brain. Hopefully a vaccine will be developed, he said.

It is known that syphilis can be cured with penicillin if treated in the earliest stages, but there is still the question of spirochetes which may remain in the eye or spinal fluid in cases that have been considered cured. Cox hopes to find an answer to these questions.

Looking to the future, if a vaccine should be developed Dr. Cox questions whether it would be initially accepted by the public, due to the nature of syphilis, but feels that it would eventually become widely used and accepted.

Candidates lacking as Senate election deadline approaches

By STEVEN ROSE
STAFF REPORTER

Only sixteen nomination papers have been received for over a hundred seats in the Student Senate, according to Cindy McGrath, speaker of the senate.

The deadline for nominations is tomorrow and if no more are brought in, McGrath said, "There is a possibility the elections will be postponed."

Rick Savini, President of the Student Government said he didn't know whether the lack of interest is due to the students not caring or to the fact that the students don't feel the student government can do anything for them.

Approximately 50 students have taken nomination papers, which have been available for the last two weeks, but only 16 have returned them with the required 25 signatures, McGrath said. Ideally there should be 200 people running, two for each office, she added.

Any student is eligible for the office of Student Senator. There is one office representing every 250 people in dorms, one for every 250 commuters, 3 for fraternities, 3 for sororities and 15 for third world minorities.

Senators usually meet twice a week and are able to work on whatever aspect of student government that interests them, ranging from keeping dorm cost down to changing University policy.

McGrath stressed that "Anyone who has a slight interest should run." Nomination papers are still available in room 420 of the Student Union.

New MDC phone

The Daily Collegian will have a new telephone number beginning Sept. 30 in order to accomodate changes in present service.

The new number will be 545-3500.

News, sports, business and advertising inquires should all be made to that number.

Unionization talks tonight

Student unionization, and all its implications will be the subject of discussions held in UMass dorms tonight.

These discussions are being conducted by representatives of the Student Organizing Project, which is organizing a student union here at UMass.

The discussions will include reasons for organizing a student union, the SOP itself, how student unions differ from student governments, the scope of a student union to bargain with the university, and ways to be involved in the organizing effort.

"Several dorms are beginning to organize themselves into units which will eventually form the backbone of the campus-wide student union," said John Pepi, student organizer. "The discussions will provide people with an opportunity to find out in a small group how the student union will effect them," he continued.

Signs will be posted in the following dorms informing people of the exact location of the discussion. Tonight's meetings:

CC bank in doubt

The University may soon have an on-campus bank, but the bank proposal appears to have run into some rough sledding.

Many campus officials in a position to know about the bank proposal have expressed concern over possible increased security in the Campus Center, possible decreased student voice in CC affairs, possible increased CC fees for students, and a possible overly close relationship between certain University and First National Bank of Amherst officials.

A memorandum dated May 9, 1973, from Warren T. Grinnan, former Manager of the Campus Center, to John DeNyse, Director of Personnel and Financial Services, dealt with implementing discussion on the bank proposal.

The memorandum mentions that the bank contract would "call for a minimum of three to four teller windows to handle the tremendous check-cashing volume."

The memorandum also states, "Going back probably fifteen months ago, I (Grinnan) met with Mr. Richard Thompson, President of the First National Bank of Amherst, and several of his associates pursuant to how a bank might operate within the Campus Center." (Discussion of providing facilities that would allow for loan and other services) "It certainly could be pursued further, since Dick and I do see each other socially from time to time and have frequently kept alive the discussion concerning the establishment of a branch bank in the Campus Center," the memo continues.

The University does much of its banking with First National, and also maintains an arrangement whereby people on the UMass payroll can have their paychecks deposited directly to the First National Bank.

This service is not available to any other bank, and represents a good portion of the First National Bank's business.

In addition, Guy Ross, a UMass alumni and former chairperson of the Services Committee of the Executive Board of the Campus Center, which preceded the Campus Center Board of Governors, said "The presence of a facility that requires high security, such as a bank, would give the University the excuse to whittle down student control of the CC. For example, a group the University disapproves of could be forced out of the CC for security reasons.

"The University attempted to move the Treasurer's Office into the CC, far away from the other offices (mostly in Whitmore) it works with, probably for this reason."

The bank would require the presence of security apparatus in the CC, possibly including television cameras and guards; and security measures would have to be extended outside the bank to many other areas of the CC as well, according to Ross.

At least some of this cost would be paid for by the student body.

In addition, the space presently in prime consideration for the bank, the Colonial Lounge in the Student Union, is largely enclosed by glass, and might have to be rebuilt, possibly at student expense.

Getting a look at the written bank proposal itself is difficult. The Board of Governors had a copy, but personnel there said it was most likely stolen. The secretary there said "This never would have happened if I had anything to do with it."

The only other copy, besides the one Vice-Chancellor Gage has, is in the possession of a CC Business Office official, who was unavailable.

Mike Curran, Chairperson of the CC Board of Governors, said the bank would save the University approximately $50,000 a year.

Melon, mold, or mush?

Flagella on cantaloupe? That's what UMass senior Louis Wigdor said yesterday afternoon after he bought an 80-cent fruit plate from the Hatch and found mold on the cantaloupe.

Wigdor's money was refunded and Campus Center foods official Phil Amica apologized.

In top picture, entire plate is shown against backdrop of the Campus Center garage. The photo below shows the mold (furry substance) on the cantaloupe pieces.

Cites family as main reason

Kennedy makes "firm" decision to bow out

Democratic Presidential tickets said he expected to run for re-election in 1976 rather than for the White House. He insisted he would not accept a draft for the presidency.

Kennedy was front runner for the 1976 Presidential nomination despite a fatal automobile accident five years ago that tarnished his image.

Kennedy's political aspirations suffered a severe setback in July 1969 when a car he was driving plunged off a narrow bridge on Chappaquiddick Island, Martha's Vineyard, taking the life of a young woman passenger, Mary Jo Kopechne.

Though he did not mention the incident in his prepared statement, Kennedy acknowledged in answer to questions that Chappaquiddick "would have been a factor" in a Presidential campaign.

"The decision I made this morning would have been made irrespective of the tragedy," he said.

Kennedy sought to shut the door once and for all on his candidacy for president in 1976.

"There is absolutely no circumstance or event that will alter the decision. I will not accept the nomination. I will not accept a draft. I will oppose any effort to place my name in nomination in any state, or at a national convention, and I will oppose any effort to promote my candidacy in other ways.

"I reached this decision after discussion with my wife and the other members of my family. I've chosen to announce the decision now in order to ease the apprehensions within my family about the possibility of my candidacy, as well as to clarify the situation within my party."

"For the past 12 years, I have served the people of Massachusetts, in the United States Senate. In 1976, I expect to be a candidate for re-election. I take pride in my service to the people of this commonwealth. In their service, much can be done to influence the direction of the nation, and it is in their service that I have found the greatest satisfaction of my public life," Kennedy said.

"I shall do all I can in the two years ahead to insure the success of my party and its nominees. I appreciate the confidence of those who have expressed their faith in me, in those who have indicated their support for me as a presidential candidate," he added.

This did not mark the first time Kennedy has cited personal and family reasons for staying out of a political battle. He did the same in the 1972 Democratic presidental race.

Kennedy decision spurs Democrats

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Sens. Henry M. Jackson and Lloyd Bentsen, two probably contenders, said yesterday that the race for the Democratic presidential nomination is "wide open" with the withdrawal of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

And a third probable contender, Sen. Walter F. Mondale, added that Kennedy's decision not to run "makes it easier for me to seek the presidency."

Although he was considered the Democrats' top vote-getter, party leaders calmly accepted Kennedy's decision and many praised him for the early announcement.

There was also general agreement that Kennedy will remain a major force in the party.

One prominent Democrat, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, expressed disappointment. "As a strong admirer of Sen. Kennedy's ability and capacity for leadership, I personally regret this decision," he said.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., like Muskie a one-time presidential aspirant himself, said Kennedy's gesture was forthright and he was "not trying to play political games." Humphrey said he was not interested in the 1976 presidential nomination either.

"I think he made the right decision," Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said. "It's something I've been advocating for some time."

Mansfield said Kennedy could have won the nomination had he sought it. He called Jackson the front-runner "because he has done the most in way of preparation."

"Mondale and Bentsen next with the others in the wings," Mansfield added.

Of Alabama's Gov. George C. Wallace, Mansfield said, "He'll be a factor which will have to be considered but there are new faces appearing in the South..."

"It's wide open now," Jackson told reporters, saying he would "step up" his efforts to win the nomination and the date of his formal announcement.

Asked whom he considered his main competition, Jackson replied, "I do not know...we are in a real state of flux."

Bentsen, speaking in Chicago, said Kennedy's decision "throws the nomination wide open. "Now it's anybody's race," he said, adding he would announce his own plans by the end of this year.

Mondale, whose record is similar to Kennedy's on almost all issues, said he is "strongly inclined" to seek the nomination and added he believes he would have a "good chance" to win the Kennedy supporters.

Mondale said Kennedy's decision helped clarify the picture for potential presidential candidates.

Nixon enters hospital

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] — Former President Richard Nixon was admitted to Long Beach Memorial Hospital yesterday for treatment of a painful ailment in his left leg.

The President motored from his San Clemente home a short distance down the coast, arriving at the hospital at 1:35 p.m. PDT. It had been expected that he would use a helicopter and there was no explanation for the change in plans.

He was taken immediately to a sixth-floor section of the hospital to undergo a series of tests and treatment for painful blood clots and inflamed veins in his left leg - an ailment called thrombophlebitis.

Waiting newsmen were not permitted to photograph or speak to Nixon who was escorted by a group of Secret Service men.

Nixon came in a four-car caravan and got out of his vehicle, and walked into the hospital, showing no signs of illness.

American war exiles reject Ford's conditional amnesty plan

TORONTO [UPI] — American war exiles yesterday rejected President Ford's conditional amnesty plan as inadequate and vowed to launch a U.S. campaign for unconditional amnesty.

Spokesmen for the exiles said the Ford plan covers only a minority of exiles and overlooks hundreds of thousands in the United States who are either living underground or handicapped by a less-than-honorable discharge from the armed forces.

The exiles, who concluded a two-day international conference Sunday, were joined in the call for the boycott by the New York-based National Council for Universal and Unconditional Amnesty NCUUA.

NCUUA said the Ford plan, which carries up to two years alternate service for war resisters, was a "series of treacherous traps which will spring on those who give themselves up, even if the first few are treated lightly."

Henry Schwarzschild, a lawyer for the American Civil Liberties Union, said the plan was "fundamentally punitive and vindictive.

"It imposes intolerable conditions," he said. "The punishment would in many cases be greater than if a resister gave himself up to a military court or to civilian authorities and didn't take the Ford amnesty."

He said the ACLU was considering challenging the plan on legal grounds, especially the provisions calling for pledges of allegiance and alternate service. The creation of a new form of "clemency" discharge by Ford was legally shaky, said Schwarzschild.

"We question whether the president can create a new kind of discharge in the way he has," he said.

Schwarzschild said he thought some resisters would challenge the legal validity of the Ford plan and the ACLU was ready to defend them.

A spokesman for NCUUA said the Ford plan deprived resisters of constitutional rights, among them the right to due process and protection from double jeopardy.

In addition, NCUUA said, the Ford plan covers only about 10 per cent of those in need of an amnesty.

"The Ford proclamation totally excludes 90 per cent of those in need of a real amnesty, most veterans with less than honorable discharges and civilian anti-war protesters, and offers the possibility of continued difficulties to the other 10 per cent," NCCUA said.

NCUUA and the exiles have mapped plans for a campaign of demonstrations and speaking tours in the United States to publicize their case against Ford's plan and for unconditional amnesty.

They also plan a "week of concern" Sept. 29 to Oct. 6 with demonstrations in front of U.S. consulates across Canada and in Europe Oct. 5.

Warn of global depression

Ford and Kissinger attack Arab oil policy

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A Kissinger told the Arab oil producing nations in separate speeches yesterday that the world cannot and will not stand exorbitant or rigged oil prices. The two U.S. officials warned of global depression

Ford, speaking at the opening session of the World Energy Conference in Detroit, told an audience that included Saudi Arabia's oil minister:

"Sovereign nations cannot allow their policies to be dictated, or their fate decided, by artificial rigging and distortion of world commodity markets. No one can forsee the extent of the damage nor the end of the disasterous consequences if nations refuse to share nature's gifts for the benefit of all mankind."

The President urged global energy cooperation under a program he called "Project Interdependence." He said exorbitant oil prices can "threaten the breakdown of world order and safety."

Treasury Secretary William E. Simon, in another speech at the conference, said the oil exporting nations are jeopardizing their own economies by keeping petroleum prices at current high levels.

"The international investments of all nations are in jeopardy and the old fable of the goose that laid the golden egg can be seen developing in today's headlines and international cable traffic," said Simon, formerly the United States' top energy official.

Ford's speech marked the second time in a week that the President had blunt words for the Arab oil producers. He sounded a similar note in his address to the United Nations General Assembly last Wednesday, when he warned that manipulation of the energy crisis could lead to counteraction, using food as a political and economic weapon.

Kissinger followed up Ford's theme in his own Monday speech to the General Assembly.

"The high cost of oil is not the result of economic factors of an annualshortage of capacity or of the free play of supply and demand," Kissinger said. "Rather it is caused by deliberate decisions to restrict production and maintain an artificial price level."

The secretary of state said that a world poised on the brink of general depression cannot afford the current petroleum prices, much less continuing increases. He said the poorer nations could be overwhelmed.

"It cannot be in the interest of any nation to magnify the despair of the least developed who are uniquely vulnerable to exorbitant prices and who have no recourse but to pay," Kissinger said.

Ford told the 3,500 delegates to the energy conference that "exorbitant prices can only distort the world economy, run the risk of worldwide depression and threaten the breakdown of world order and safety."

Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, Saudi Arabia's oil minister, was in the conference hall during Ford's 25-minute speech.

U.S. and international agencies launch massive Honduran relief

SAN PEDRO SULA, Honduras [UPI] - The United States and international agencies launched a massive relief campagn for Honduras yesterday to aid an estimated 100,000 refugees of hurrican Fifi threatened with starvation and disease.

Looting broke out in several of the 182 rural northern Honduras communities swamped by floods and landslides, and local officials made urgent appeals for food and fuel.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman in Tegucigalpa, the Honduras capital, told UPI at noon yesterday that it has been informed by Col. Eduardo Andino, deputy director of the National Emergency Committee, that the latest the death toll was believed between 7,000 and 8,000 with more than 100,000 homeless.

He announced the United States is sending another military helicopter to the four others already conducting emergency reconnaissance and rescue operations, and an additional C130 Air Force transport airplane will also be sent to help the four U.S. giant transports already flying emergency relief supplies and shuttling refugees.

The embassy spokesman said the United States was "pulling out all stops" to try to help the storm victims.

In Washington, the Organization of American States met early yesterday to approve $550,000 in emergency funds for the Honduras rescue effort.

The Inter-American Development Bank said it would speed up the approval of development loans requested by Honduras before the hurricane.

Rep. Herman Badillo, D-N.Y., urged that the U.S. government furnish "all necessary financial and material assistance to the government and people of the Republic of Honduras."

The American Red Cross said rescue specialists delivered an initial grant of $57,000 for disaster relief to Honduras Monday afternoon.

George M. Elsey, President of the American Red Cross, said 14 other Red Cross societies throughout the world are also sending relief supplies and funds.

In New York, the relief organization Care announced Castle & Cooke, Inc., has donated $100,000 for disaster relief.

The firm is the parent company of Standard Fruit & Steamship company which produces bananas in Honduras and other Central American countries.

E.M. Black of New York, chairman of the board of United Brands, whose Chiquita bananas are widely distributed, said it at least 70 to 80 per cent of the banana harvest in Honduras was devastated.

Black said Honduras is the second-largest banana producer in the world and the loss of the greater part of the crop is bound to cause some shortages.

He also said "the almost - Biblical numbers" of people who were killed or displaced by the storm would affect the harvesting of the fruit, and this too would lower the amount of bananas exported.

Rocky says wealth won't be influence

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Nelson A. Rockefeller told the Senate Rules Committee yesterday that his family's billion-dollar fortune exercised no vast powers over the nation's economy and that his wealth would have no bearing on his conduct as vice president.

Testifying as the committee began hearings on his, vice presidential nomination, Rockefeller said he and his wife are worth $218 million, but that he would place all his securities in a blind trust if Congress desired.

Denying as a myth a belief that the Rockefeller fortune, indicated to total about $1 billion, is a significant influence on the U.S. economy, Rockefeller said:

"I am not beholden to any interest or any person. If I had spent a lifetime abusing economic power I wouldn't be sitting here today."

The 66-year-old former New York governor also disclosed that his presidential ambitions-thwarted three times in his long political career - were still alive.

"I am anxious to serve my country... in any capacity I can," he answered when asked by Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., if he would run for president in 1976 should a vacancy occur before then.

"I would have to assume that that would not preclude the presidency," Rockefeller said.

Committee Chaiman Howard Cannon, D-Nev., asked Rockefeller why he had written lettes to such former Nixon administration officials as John Ehrlichman, Nixon's chief domestic adviser, and Attorney General John N. Mitchell as well as Clark MacGregor, chairman of Nixon's re-election committee, requesting help in getting a government contract for the F14 fighter plane for the Grumman Aircraft Corp., based in Ney York.

House panel passes tax breaks for recycling; rejects car tax

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Ways and Means Committee voted yesterday to give new tax breaks to the recycling industry, but rejected a proposal to tax gas-guzzling automobiles.

New recycling tax breaks would be in the form of a 7 per cent tax credit on the purchase price of consumer-discarded items for recycling. The credit, would apply to glass, paper, cloth and metals except for iron and steel.

The $50 million a year tax credit would be phased out for any product when the purchase price rose to 200 per cent of its value in the base period 1971-73. The base would be adjusted upward each year according to increases in the Consumer Price Index.

This tax break is designed to encourage recycling of consumer products, and no credit would be allowed for recycling of industrial wastes.

The committee is nearing completion of a huge tax revision bill.

Excise levies on bigger automobiles, proposed by Rep. Charles A. Vanik, D-Ohio, were aimed at promoting purchase of smaller economy cars and forcing manufacturers to build more fuel economy into their product.

Strong committee opposition to the amendment indicated that almost no tax on auto economy or horsepower stands a chance of passing in the near future.

Vanik proposed at tax of $360 beginning with the 1977 models on any car that got less than 8 miles per gallon in mixed city and highway driving under tests conducted by the Environmental Protection Agency.

The tax would have been gradually reduced as the mileage economy of the car rose, phasing out entirely for cars that produced 20 miles per gallon or more.

Boston Edison plant reopens

PLYMOUTH [AP] — Boston Edison's Pilgrim nuclear power plant is back in operation after undergoing an inspection ordered by the Atomic Energy Commission.

The plant was closed last Tuesday "for routine inspection," a spokesman said. "During the down time, an independent outside agency conducted a rigid inspection of welds in the recirculating system."

"As expected, there was no evidence of any problems..." the spokesman said.

The inspection was ordered for all reactors, the spokesman said. The plant reopened Sunday night.

U.S./world

Defense bill passed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — An $82.5 billion Defense appropriation won House approval yesterday despite criticism it included undisclosed funds for secret Central Intelligence Agency operations in other nations.

The measure, approved on a 293-59 roll call vote and sent to the Senate, was $4.4 billion less than the administration requested with the major cuts coming in weapons procurement and research. It would fund Pentagon operations for the 1975 fiscal year that started July 1.

Robert Giaimo, D-Conn., a member of the House conference group which worked out the compromise bill with Senate conferees, sought unsuccessfully to defeat the measure because of his objection to CIA secrecy.

"We're being asked to approve funds in an amount we don't even know for covert operations by the CIA and perhaps other intelligence agencies," said Giaimo.

CIA in Australia

CANBERRA [UPI] — Charges that the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency offered funds in an unsuccessful effort to help defeat the Australian Labor government in elections last May were lodged yesterday in advance copies of a book by an Australian political journalist.

Ray Aitcheson, a former employe of the state-owned radio and television network and author of several books, made the charges in "Looking at the Liberals," a study of the opposition, Liberal party.

Aitcheson, now director of a clothing industry promotion group, said he was given information on the CIA offer while he was in Washington shortly before the election May 18 at which the Labor party was returned to power.

Japan trip opposed

TOKYO [UPI] — Japan's 300,000-member Communist party whose mass rioting forced cancellation of the late President Eisenhower's plans to visit Japan 14 years ago declared yesterday it will "resolutely oppose" the visit of President Ford to Japan in November.

The Communists called for Japan's opposition groups to unite against Ford's trip to Tokyo. It will be the first an American president has ever made while in office.

Ford and his wife, Betty, are scheduled to visit Tokyo Nov. 18-22 on an invitation that was made originally to former President Nixon.

The Communists are the third strongest party in the Japanese parliament. Sohyo, Japan's largest labor federation with 4.3 million members, declared Friday it would organize demonstrations against the Ford trip.

Steele charges oil prices uneven

NEW HAVEN [AP] — Rep. Robert H. Steele, R-Conn., filed a lawsuit yesterday against the Federal Energy Administration (FEA), seeking an end to "unfair and inequitable" fuel policies which he said boost the cost of electricity in the Northeast.

"From February to May 1974, Connecticut utilities paid $10,667,020 more for oil than they would have paid if they could have purchased it at the average national price during that period," Steele told a news conference.

He said the 1973 Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act requires the FEA to distribute equally the cost and supply of residual oil to all regions of the country. To date, the suit said, "no such action has been taken and the price... continues to be more expensive for utilities in New England and Connecticut."

Steele said that in May, Connecticut's electric producers paid $13.11 per barrel for residual fuel oil, about $1.50 more than the U. S. average. The "companies therefore paid approximately $2,262,000 more than if they had paid the U. S. average price," he said.

The suit states the average New England electric consumer will pay an estimated $66.53 per person more and suffer a 1.4 per cent cut in income because of the higher oil price.

In Connecticut, utilities pass along the higher fuel costs automatically through the fuel cost adjustment.

Steele is co-plaintiff with John Pisano of Hamden. The defendants include FEA Administrator John Sawhill, his deputy, John W. Weber, and FEA regional chief, Robert Mitchell.

The suit asks the court to require the FEA to come up with a plan to equalize price and supply of residual oil across the country. It also asks the court to prevent FEA from lifting price controls on domestic crude oil.

Boston whites' boycott spreads while disruptions continue

BOSTON [UPI] - A boycott of classes by whites spread to Charlestown High School and disruptions were reported in the North End yesterday on the eighth day of classes under a court order to integrate Boston's public schools by busing.

Two injuries and nine arrests were reported in the aftermath of a Charlestown demonstration. Police said two blacks were hurt when a group of whites assaulted them near the Registry of Motor Vehicles at Washington and North Sts. Three were arrested for disorderly conduct, three for unlawful assembly and two for assault and battery.

The injured, identified as Courtney Doughlan, 22, of Shawmut Ave., Dorchester, and John Jackson, 20, of Greenwood St., Roxbury, were treated and released at local hospitals.

Citywide attendance yesterday was 72.3 percent, up 3 percent over Friday, but well below Thursday's rate of 76.4 percent.

Attendance at South Boston High School, where a white classroom boycott has been about 95 percent effective, increased slightly over last Friday as 40 more whites went to school. Black attendance decreased by 22.

At Hyde Park High School, closed Friday because of racial fights and rock throwing incidents the previous day, attendance dropped sharply to 877, the lowest figure since school opened Sept. 12. Some 1,294 students went to school Thursday.

Course #212235: Overcrowding, harassment and moving

By ROBERT SCHEMELIGIAN

What a room situation this university has. People that should have singles find themselves in doubles, and triples are not uncommon. The students that couldn't be squeezed into overcrowded dorms became transient tenants of the Campus Center Hotel.

The semester is now over two weeks old and out of some 90 students once staying in the C.C. Hotel, only 15 remain. The others have been relocated into living situations ranging from the infamous Southwest towers to desolate lounges in basements of dorms.

Actually, one may find ex-residents of the waffle-hotel living in converted ironing rooms, study lounges, dormitory basements, and janitors' apartments. Of course, there are no rebates on room bills; in fact, people moved unwillingly into Sylvan even get a $20 raise on their bill.

Some university officials believe the housing-shortage problem has been diminishing as there have been a lessening number of student-tenants of the hotel in recent years. What these officials are neglecting is this fact: except for 1969, we have never had more triples and we have never had them this far into the semester.

The housing shortage disappears as UMies start to drop out of school, and one wonders if they drop out because of deplorable housing conditions. I have already mentioned that there were more C.C. Hotel occupants in previous years; two years ago, I was one of 140 students living there because of a computer screw-up. One of my three roommates dropped out of the School of Stockbridge before he could be located by "housing". I still have a book of his on peach-farming he left behind.

Some sympathy must be directed to the offices that control housing situations on campus because of the huge populous they service. The offices are The Housing Office in Whitmore and The Office of Residential Life for Administrative Services in Hills North. Roger Cruff, The director of the latter office, believes that students wind up in the C.C. Hotel because of three reasons; computer screw-ups, seniors wanting their old rooms back upon discovering how hard it is to find suitable living areas off campus, and the last reason being that they themselves "tried to beat the system by filling out two room choosing cards for different areas".

As said, some sympathy must be directed towards the system, but their way of handling things still leaves one puzzled. Why do the offices in Hills North tell The Northeast Area they must take 40 students when it is already saturated with people? It is in the "quad" where on may find ex-C.C. Hotel tenants living in converted ironing rooms and study lounges.

At a time when The Housing Office in Whitmore is beset with so many problems, why is its director on a two week's vacation? This information was given to me by University officials outside the department; "housing" wouldn't discuss this matter or any other with me.

Accusations against "housing" charges them with evicting students from the hotel; this is a false charge. Don Witkowsky, the manager of the hotal is the only one with the power to evict anyone and when asked students". "Housing" may not evict students from the hotal but they do locate them into undesirable living areas.

Students don't have to leave the hotel, but a freshman who has been on campus less than two weeks might be easily swayed by certain pressures. A transfer student who is now residing in a converted study lounge in the basement of Johnson House and is a former hotel tenant said: "we really didn't know what was going on, everybody kept saying we were going to be evicted soon." There are about a dozen people that didn't listen to eviction rumors and most are still waiting for spaces in Orchard Hill.

Many people have to suffer because of the housing shortage on campus. It's not fair that students have to pay a room bill of over $300 a semester and spend their first month in a converted study lounge. The Campus Center Hotel charges $5 a day for each student staying there. This money comes from dorm trust funds which in turn comes from room bills payed by the students.

Expecting a raise on your room bill next year?

Letters to the editor

Gunhaters meet Thurs.

To the Editor:

The deathly menace of the handgun is growing at a terrifying pace in this country. Today there are fifty million handguns in circulation, and three million are new guns which are produced every year. This figure is quadruple that of ten years ago. An increase in guns necessarily means a growing death rate. Twenty-five thousand American citizen now die by gunfire every year. Two hundred thousand others are wounded, suffering paralization, sterilization, dismemberment, blinding, and on and on. [FBI statistics-1972]

People vs. Handguns is a state-wide citizens group concerned with informing citizens of the dangers handguns pose to everyone, and the needs for strict controls on them. We advocate a total ban on the sale and posession of handguns for everyone except the military and police. Our ultimate aim is to have effective legislation passed that will support this position.

This group is already well established in and around Boston. I am trying to gather an effective organization in this area, so that we can mobilize public opinion and effectively use it at the State House. There is much work to be done. We must get in touch with many students and community groups, and garner their support and enthusiasm. Speakers are needed to inform these groups. People are needed to generate media publicity. Anyone who would like to help People vs. Handguns get started here, and can contribute in any capacity for any amount of time, please get in touch with me, Steve Sacks, at:

Finally, there will be a debate on handgun control this Thursday night, Sept. 26, at 8:00 p.m., at the Amherst Junior High Cafeteria. It is sponsored by the Amherst League of Women Voters.

I urge you to attend, as it will certainly offer insight into the magnitude of this growing problem. Thank you.

Cindy McGrath misunderstands

To the Editor:

To say I was infuriated at the article "New Nursing Director Outlines Improvements" would be an understatement. Being a senior nursing student at UMass, I feel that the statement made by Cindy McGrath, calling our school "One of the worst nursing schools although it has one of the best names" a gross misunderstanding. I would really appreciate knowing how she came to this conclusion. Granted, the students who would be or are Juniors in the school of Nursing did get a bum deal. Coming here as Freshmen they were under the impression that they were in the school. However during their first weeks at UMass, they were informed that they would have to re-apply to get into the School of Nursing and that it wouldn't be easy. They were advised to look into other Schools of Nursing for requirements etc. Many students did take this advice and were accepted into other schools. Those students, now Sophomores and Freshmen, were informed that reapplication would be necessary before they even decided to come to UMass.

Ira Trail is quoted to have said that the undergraduates are "being pulled in different direction." Yes, we are being pulled in different directions but not in the derogatory sense that this article conveyed. The Nursing program at UMass shows how many fields are open to us as nurses. This is quite different from many Nursing Schools which put out graduates who think that the only setting for nurses is in the hospital. I also question the quote from Ira Trail that "they" [the student nurses] "really have little access to the department." I don't know who is to blame for that one but again I feel it is an error. Even in grammar school or high school I didn't have the close contact I now have with the Faculty at the School of Nursing.

True, the Nursing Program is in a state of change and there are some knots which have to be untied. Our school is really ahead of it's time and it will be awhile before other Nursing Schools will catch up. The Health Care System in the U.S. is changing also and I feel that the graduates from this new program will be more ready to meet the needs of those seeking health care in the future as well as today.

The abundant life

To the Editor:

What is our purpose here at the University? What is our purpose in life? And do we believe in God and trust in Him to show us our purpose and to lead us into a meaningful life? Is the Bible fiction or is it the divinely inspired word of God?

Sir Frederick Kenyon, one of the leading authorities on the reliability of ancient manuscripts wrote "The interval then between the dates of original composition and the earliest extant evidence becomes so small as to be in fact negligible, and the last foundation for any doubt that the Scriptures have come down to us substantially as they were written has now been removed. Both the authenticity and the general integrity of the books of the New Testament may be regarded as finally established."

Professor Thomas Arnold, for 14 years the headmaster of Rugby, author of a famous three-volume "History of Rome" and appointed to the chair of Modern History at Oxford was well acquainted with the value of evidence in determining historical facts. This great scholar said, "I have been for many years to study the histories of other times, and to examine and weigh the evidence of those who have written about them, and I know of no one fact in the history of mankind which is proved by better and fuller evidence of every sort, to the understanding of a fair inquirer, that the great sign which God hath given us that Christ died and rose again from the dead."

Do we then just push all this aside and turn our heads away or do we have an open heart to listen to God and see what he says concerning our lives. He loves us and has a wonderful plan for each of us no matter who we are, what we look like, or what we stand for. He says in Rev. 3:20 "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hears my voice, and opens the door, I will come in to him". He is telling each one of us to personally ask Him [Christ] into our hearts asking Him to control our lives totally. By doing this we will begin to experience the abundant life which Christ speaks of, the internal joy and the peace of his never ending love. Christ says in Jn. 10:10 "I came that they might have life and might have it abundantly." And Jesus doesn't lie, he fulfills every promise He makes. And so I pray that each one of you will ask Christ into your lives and experience the abundant and eternal life He promises. Christianity is a personal relationship with Christ and not a religion.

"There are a lot of completely educated people in the world and of course they will resent being asked to learn anything new." [R. Frost]

Health care a U.S. must

We are the only major Democratic nation in the world without national health insurance. People can work their entire life, and then wham.....one illness and they're broke. At his confirmation hearings yesterday, Nelson Rockefeller, Vice Presidential designate, said that the nation couldn't afford an extensive national health plan.

It is getting kind of discouraging to hear our leaders talk of fiscal responsibility when the issue is domestic needs, and turn around and cry "national security" when throwing money away on illegal and immoral foreign programs.

If you travel to Sweden and have a heart attack it will cost you about all of two dollars for all the health care you need, for as long as you need it. In Denmark the health care system works basically the same way. In Great Britain it is almost as good. A Canadian who gets ill in France, gets a refund for all medical expenses upon his or her return home.

Why can't the United States establish such a system? While there is single "truth" to explain just why no bill has been passed (and some Legislators, including Senator Kennedy have been trying for years now), one of the major reasons must deal with heavy lobbies which oppose such "social welfare".

Social welfare doesn't mean the end of all free enterprise. In Scandanavia the industrious hard workers still make more money than those who don't work. The Swedes and Danes seem to realize that some rights are so important that they are above the economic market. "All people have a natural right to adequate health care". "All people, regardless of economic situation have a right to an excellent education". Sounds like something you might expect Jefferson or Washington to have written. However this is baisically the Scandanavian Social system, and very much an antithesis of our own American system.

We need more Doctors in America today. Yet there aren't nearly enough Medical schools for the amount of qualified applicants. Why not? One of the reasons is that lobbies like the American Medical Association are not too anxious to bring too many new Doctors into the world. The AMA has one of the most powerful lobbies in Washington. People listen to them. When they don't want someone serving on a committee or serving in a position relevant to medicine, often he or she is ousted. They pack a lot of power in Washington, and it is reasonable to assume that if they wanted things like National Health Insurance or more Medical Schools; such programs would succeed.

Within the past five years the U.S. has sent millions of dollars overseas to help overthrow legitimate governments. The United States has also sent additional millions to military dictatorships that couldn't stand for a week without us. Now that we know just how much blood the CIA carries in its hands from the Coup in Chili there is no longer any excust to tolerate excesses.

As I write this Nelson Rockefeller's confirmation hearings are being pumped in over the radio. Rockefeller is a man of wealth. His grandfather took advantage of the opportunities of young land to raise a fortune. Now organizations like the CIA are playing "mission impossible" in South America; trying to establish solid governments to protect "our" investments. Many of those investments are Rockefeller's. None of those investments are mine.

Somewhere along the line the government of the United States took a wrong turn. It forgot that it was supposed to be the government of all the people. National Health Insurance is not the answer to all of the problems that plague this nation. However if such insurance was established it could be the first step in getting back on the right road.

Calculus and kites

My thoughts, like the papers on my desk, were scattered out in directions beyond my reach. Notions of quadrilateral parallelograms, velocity in opposition to decline, and Pythagorian theories pounded at my brain. I was determined to master this abominable Calculus or never move from my chair.

The clangorous din of calamity emanating from neighboring rooms tried desperatly to ooze under the cracks of my door and infiltrate my concentration. A knock aroused me from my studies and I said to come in; this being the first and foremost mistake of the evening.

The door opened slowly at first and was suddenly caught in the blizzard like storm of music, smoke, and screaming and was hurled violently against the adjacent cabinets. Papers flew up from my desk and dispersed in every conceivable point on the compass. My heart sunk into my stomach while watching three hours worth of Calculus sail out the window and across South West.

I focused my attention to the bearded mass of protoplasm that had stumbled into the room. In some vague way it resembled a human being and I addressed him like one. I dropped my pen and slide ruler thinking that a McGilvary cartoon had leaped from its pages and embodied itself in my presence. On first sight he appeared to have sexual organs protruding from his proboscus and an enormous breast centered in his forehead. Upon further investigation I discovered that a shave was in order and a bad case of acne had attacked his prefrontal skull surface.

He began by inquiring if I knew the whereabouts of some "acid". I immediatly replied that he might try the Goesman Laboratories as this was a dormitory and not a chemical warehouse. Never before had I seen a face so contorted as the expression that appeared on his physiognimy after I had spoken. He proceeded to inform me of my relevant station in life, referring to me quite often as an annal sphincter that was prone to an excess of sexual intercourse. He was much more explicit in his terminiology, however, I dare not quote him in the press.

I soon came to the discovery that study was virtually impossible at the present locale. I gathered up what was left of my belongings and took leave of the room. On the way to the stairs I was summoned by a hoarse voice into a nearby doorway. I made another mistake by responding.

The room was a veritable green house. I thought that I had made a wrong turn and had somehow ended up in a Morill Botany lab by mistake. Seated in what for all purposes was the middle of the floor was a human being possessing similar characteristics to the aforementioned fellow. He asked me if I might be interested in purchasing an order of "shit". I replied that I was unaware there was a market open for such substance.

To this he retorted that his was "good shit"; apparently of extreme fine quality. I querried what he had had for dinner and he began to screw up his face like the other gentleman had so I dropped the line of question and asked what made his shit better than anyone else's.

He proceeded to explain to me that his shit was imported from Columbia. This made little impression on me as I had recently returned from South America and was well aware of the sewerage problems one encounters in such countries.

"Ya can't get betta grass but nowhere, maaannnn!" was his almost persuading reply. I was obviously dealing with an unstable individual. The sudden metamorphosis from fecal deposit to local greenery or imported vegetation, for that matter, confused me.

"Dis the best stuff ya can get, man. I growd it maself on Mars! All the way from Mars, Maaan!" I was somehow inclined to believe him, what with the "spaced cut", I think is the phrase, expression and unworldly disposition he appeared to possess.

I abruptly ended our chat by saying no thank you, I was quite capable of making my own shit and took leave of the gentleman.

I finallly made it to the top of the library. That is to say not without escaping another confrontation. In the elevators, about the thirteenth floor, the only other passenger suddenly produced an ID card that I leaned over to examine. It was whipped from my sight before I could reach for my spectacles.

"CIA" he stated as he pocketed the wallet.

"Ah,ah, oh, I see..." I replied.

"What do you know about the OIC kid?"

"Pardon," I replied.

"Listen, kid, what's the dope situation here?"

"Oh, you see I was just..."

"Whadda ya know about the OCI kid?"

I proceeded to inform him that I had just encountered the probable two leading dopes on campus and where they could be found. He had vanished even before the elevator had stopped.

I was alone at the top of the library. I thought of all those people caught up in their strange little worlds. Twenty-four floors up; I guess I was the highest person on campus that night........

Look around

By TYLA L. MICHELOVE

On this campus there is a pervading sense of the day today, the common and ordinary. Reflections of the beauty of the area we live in and even the campus itself are passed over without much thought. Granted we are not here to sit and watch nature go by. We are here, however, to absorb knowledge, and to ignore our surroundings is basically to ignore ourselves. Knowledge in itself is not all, and to put knowledge for the sake of knowledge before any thought of your own environment is to truly waste your time. This is also true of the people who party for the sake of partying and not for afirmation of the good in life or the sharing of time with friends. Stop for minute or two and think of what you are missing and what you destroy in your non-thought.

This is, in reality, asking a lot of yourself. It means doing things like recognizing the fact that the Physical Plant has been working hard to make the area around the library quite nice, then try absorbing more than the wind, and finally, attempting to keep that area clean so that other people can enjoy it as well. Of course the library is not the only place on campus to appreciate if only people weren't in such a constant rush. The area surrounding Barlett, the entire structure called Tobin Hall, the courtyard behind Machmer, the list is practically endless if only we opened our eyes while we walked between classes or over to the Bluewall.

There is a certain amount of contentment in not paying attention to anything else but what is on your mind at the time. This, however, is the major reason for our feelings of isolation. We are so wrapped up in our own thoughts that we have no time for others, for things of beauty, for the world as a whole. Unless we wish to remain fragmented, satisfied with this pseudo-security, then all we have to do is open our eyes to our surroundings, to what we as humans have created and to what nature has created for us.

People are probably saying to yourself something like "sure would be nice if I had the time" or "that's ok on paper, but real life just isn't that simple". Time is all that we have and every minute you forget that, you are wasting it, you are wasting your money being here, you are wasting someone else's space. Life is as simple or as complicated as we make it. Yes, there are pressures. They can be dealt with. Enjoy what you have now. Open your eyes, your mind is sure to follow. Reflections of beauty are just beyond your shell of thoughts! Although it has been said before, it bears repeating, I wish you realization.

Campus store raises prices

By PETER McDONNELL
Special Correspondent

The retail prices of the "vast majority" of items sold at the Campus Store have risen over the past year, in keeping with the inflationary trend of the nation's economy.

Citing the fact that most of the items sold in the store are of the paper, plastic or wood variety, William Simpson, the Assistant Supply Department Manager of the store, told the Collegian that "prices have had to be raised by the manufacturers due to the shortage of these three materials in the country today."

He mentioned the 80 - sheet notebook which sold for 55 cents last year, now costing 69 cents. The high prices for certain items at the Campus Store."

Simpson summarized the situation by saying that "the best weapon we, as consumers, have is our resistance to such high prices which will, in turn, force the prices down."

familiar $4..33 record album price, though not extinct, has jumped in many instances to $5.57.

A genuine UMass - marked soapdish has almost doubled, rising from 15 cents to 29 cents. Another example is a University of Massachusetts T - shirt which went from $1.95 to the present $3.75.

Perhaps the only significant price decrease comes in the field of calculators. For example, a Texas Instruments SR - 11 model has dropped from $109.95 to $79.95.

Simpson said that "the American consumer is in such a position that any item which has remained at the same price is considered a bargain."

He also said he "sometimes feels awkward having to charge such

Amnesty program turnout poor

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The armed forces have discharged the first 20 deserters to participate in President Ford's amnesty program, the Pentagon announced Monday.

In the first week of the amnesty program, only about 6 per cent of the eligible deserters have telephoned or written the services to inquire about the program. The poor turnout came as a Canadian-based group of exiles is trying to organize a boycott of the amnesty offer.

The Pentagon said that during the weekend 18 men from the Army and two from the Air Force were processed and discharged at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind., the headquarters for the amnesty program.

HANG GLIDING

By: David Less
Staff Reporter

Lee Keeler loves to hang around for hours on end. What differentiates Lee from the average vagrant is the fact that Lee spends his time drifting about at two thousand feet. For four and a half hours Lee suspended himself above the flanks of Mt. Washington, establishing a New England record for flight duration in the wild, beautiful, and rapidly growing sport of hang-gliding.

A hang flider is a kite with a man suspended in its cross-bracing. Consisting of an aerodynamic wedge sail of dacron, weighing less than an ounce, and 6061 gauge aircraft aluminum, the hang-glider appears much too fragile to be trusted in a running jump from the edge of a 1600 foot cliff. Yet it was precisely this task that 85 members of the National Hang Gliding Association undertook in today's first national invitational meet at Magic Mountain, Vermont.

Gliding centers around the pilot's ability to keep his glider aloft, for as long as possible, guiding it through the swirling eddies of wind on the mountain's side, and still being able to manuever the craft to a designated landing spot at the base of the slope.

His award for accomplishing this feat is a supreme sense of exhiliration and freedom, and a free glass of beer at the end of the day. His entry fee is a dollar and a lot of guts.

Competition is divided into three categories: beginners, intermediate and professional. With speeds often exceeding thirty knots, the final events have to be limited only to the most qualified.

The events appear to be well organized, with the safety of the competitor held paramount. Wind speed and direction are gauged at three different points on the slope, and an effective P.A. system is utilized to make each pilot aware of the prevailing wind conditions while he is in flight, and to assist him while he attempts to land. The only flights that count are those in which the pilot succeeds in landing on his feet.

Tom Peghiny, flight director for the New England Hang Glide Association, was this weekend's over-all winner. Tom who is from Newton, won both the duration and spot landing competition. Second place in flight duration went to Dick Boone of Sepuleda, California, and third in line was Don McCabe of N. Conway, New Hampshire. Later in the day Don provided the spectators with a spectacular display, flying high above the gallery, low over a shocked motorist, and landing by the edge of a near-by stream. Dick Boone also copped second in the spot landing event. Third went to Larry Lewelling of Sugarloaf, Maine.

High-flyer Lee Keeler took home the award for the longest flight of the weekend. He was officially clocked at two hours and ten minutes, but an eye witness said Lee took off at 4:00, and didn't get down until after 7:00.

Gliding is a sport requiring extreme skill and knowledge. Each pilot has to know how to trim his sails and handle each thermal that rises beneath him. It is a skill that has to be seen, to be fully appreciated.

Zinn testimony refused

The property issue surfaced again yesterday in the defense testimony of Robert Avery, chairman of the board of assessors in Montague. Avery said that NU's meteorological tower was assessed and taxed in Montague as real property. Lovejoy's indictment, however, charges him with destruction of personal property.

Basically, real property is land or structures attached to the land that connot be moved without damaging them or changing their nature. Personal property is temporary and moveable.

On cross examination, Asst. D.A. John Murphy questioned Avery at length about Montague assessing procedures, apparently to make them look arbitrary to the jury. He said that property assessed and taxed as real in one town would be considered personal in another.

Lovejoy, who is handling his own defense, called three other witnesses to the stand yesterday. His questions and their answers dealt at length with the following four issues:

1- Lovejoy's truthfulness and his sincerety;

2- his active opposition to nuclear power prior to Feb. 22;

3- their belief that recourse to stop nuclear power is impossible; and,

4- the fact that opposition to nuclear power is rapidly growing in the Pioneer Valley.

As Smith was about to rule on the relevance of Zinn's testimony, a baby in the back of the court room began crying. Smith stopped and said, "The baby's objecting before I even speak," indicating he had decided against Lovejoy.

Refering to U.S. vs. Moylen, where Viet Nam war objectors had destroyed draft files, Smith said that "morality is not justification for violating legal statutes."

One who commits an act of civil disobedience, he said, "must answer for his act."

D.C. judge agrees to rule on Nixon pardon

WASHINGTON [UPI] — U. S. District Judge Charles R. Richey yesterday indicated his willingness to consider challenges of Richard Nixon's pardon and the agreement granting him custody of all his presidential tapes.

Noting that reports of Nixon's health cause "some basis for concern," Richey also won assurances from lawyers for Nixon and the Ford administration that subpoenaed tapes would not be destroyed should the former president die.

"They are not attached to a self-destruct device..." said Justice Department attorney Irving Jaffee. "The status quo would be preserved even if death should occur."

At an hour-long hearing on two Watergate civil cases, Richey said the pardon and the tapes agreement raise "substantial" questions that could have considerable impact on the cover-up trial of six former Nixon aides due to start Oct. 1.

"The thought occurs to the court after thinking it over during the weekend that it might be desirable to have a trial court resolve the questions that are extant on the validity of the agreement and the validity of the pardon," he said.

Debate union meets MIT

By DAVID KOWAL
Special Correspondent

"Resolved that: The powers of the President should be significantly curtailed."

Members of the UMass Debate Union will be defending and attacking the resolution in verbal tilts throughout the year.

Their first tournament will include two teams at M.I.T., October 5, 6, and 7. Representing UMass will be John Adams and John Cross, and David O'Brien and Howard Steinberg.

Other tournaments planned for October include Dartmouth, Brandeis, Kentucky, U. S. Military Academy, and North Carolina.

The 1974 squad of 30 members is mostly inexperienced, "but things look promising, as most members will be back next year," Ronald J. Matlon, director of debate, says: "We have an extremely young squad." There are no seniors and few juniors on the team.

He invites students interested in joining the debate team to contact him at 126 South College.

Reunion contra racismo

Estudiantes de UMass tratan de formar un grupo local de la Alianza Nacional Contra la Represion Racista y Politica - la organizacion politica formada en Chicago en 1973 para apoyar a Angela Davis.

El impulso primordial del esfuerzo sera una "reunion organizacional de programa", que se dara manana (martes) en el Campus Center cuarto no. 904 a las 7 y media de la noche, segun Isabel Johnston, 22, una de las estudiantes.

"En esta reunion vamos a definir los problemas que analizaremos en la ciudad-universitaria de Amherst," dijo la estudiante de Historia Asiatica.

Entre los problemas que se podran discutir estan la de brutalidad policiaca e la independencia portorriquena pero, "queremos que los que acudan a la reunion definan los temas de discusion."

La Alianza, formada durante una convencion en Chicago en mayo de 1973, cuenta con mas de 20 mil miembros en este pais, dijo la Johnston. En conjunto con otro estudiante, Paul Mishler, ella describe la Alianza en un despacho de prensa para "The Collegian".

"La conferencia fundadora significo el mayor esfuerzo unido de las fuerzas anti-racistas desde los primeros dias del movimiento de derechos civiles.

"La representacion de blancos, negros, chicanos, portorriquenos, nativos-americanos, asiaticos e arabes, indico que la Alianza funcionara como una organizacion multi-racial," dijo el despacho.

Las organizaciones representadas en la primera convencion incluyeron, el Partido Socialista Portorriqueno, el Movimiento del Indio Americano, el Partido Communista, la Federacion de Trabajadores de la Industria Automotriz, los Carniceros Amalgamados y el Sindicato de los Trabajadores Elestricos; segun el despacho.

"Para combatir la represion racista y politica al nivel nacional e internacional, la Alianza debe tener un fuerte apoyo local para sus programas.

"La alta incidencia de represion racista en UMass demanda un esfuerzo unificado de parte de los miembros de la comunidad," concluyo el despacho de prensa.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Wednesday, Sept. 25

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Hitch your wagon to a star if you must — but be sure that you are capable of remaining steadfast to your ideal. Keep standards high.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take care not to attempt more than you can achieve today. This is no time to fail in the sight of others; your best bet is a sure thing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You should find it a simple matter to make new friends — if you will take the trouble to attend a public gathering. Let yourself see and be seen.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Business and/or professional contact are such that you can ill afford to ignore them at this time. What you fail to cultivate may well disintegrate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Both family and career matters require your utmost in the way of attention this morning. Take care not to confuse issues during the afternoon.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — There may be some in-fighting on the employment scene as a result of your recent success. Don't expect everyone to accept losses with grace.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A new idea in combination with a new ambition should bring you to the attention of those who can make or break your chances for advancement.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Look to your past for hints to your future — but don't make the mistake of building tomorrow entirely upon your yesterdays. Consult others in the field.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — A day filled with "green lights." You should be able to meet several goals and attain several objectives during afternoon and evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You can put recent plans into action today if you are wise enough to seek the advice of one who knows precisely what your objective is.

Finast SUPERMARKETS

IT PAYS TO SHOP THE FINAST WAY

Finast will no longer increase prices of food once placed on our shelves

On Wednesday, July 24, 1974, all Finast Supermarkets began a new pricing policy on Grocery, Meat and Produce items.

1. When Finast is forced to make a price increase, cans and packages already price marked on the shelves will be sold at the old lower price. When items are restocked on the shelves, the new, higher priced items will be placed behind the lower priced items.

2. Weekly specials or "sale items" are priced lower than regular prices. Any remaining after the sale event, will be repriced upward.

3. As regular prices go down, Finast will immediately reduce the price on shelf stock, and the lower price will always be honored at the register. When a can or a package shows more than one price, the customer pays the lowest price for that can or package.

4. Baby food and items controlled by state laws are exempt from this new policy.

5. Until current stocks are sold there will be some items of our many thousands with more than one price marking on the can or package. Please bear with us during this transition.

Moses Malone: Promised land or lion's den?

By BOB HIGGINS
MDC Staff

For weeks his name and pictures were all over the sports pages of America. The sports world awaited his word. After all, this was not your ordinary 19-year old potential millionaire.

No, Moses Malone was much more. He was the greatest high school basketball prospect since a kid named Alcindor graduated from Power Memorial in New York a few years back. Every college hoop coach in the nation was willing to sell his sole to get Moses to lead his team to the Promised Land.

Maryland coach Lefty Driesell didn't have to sell anything to get Malone to sign a letter of intent. He simply gave Moses a new car, a seven dollar an hour construction job, a one million dollar insurance policy, and half the state of Maryland. The Maryland athletic ticket office was flooded with season ticket requests, and the future looked rosey for Maryland, already a national power for the past few years.

Commentary

Then, to everyone's shock, in stepped the ABA's Utah Stars. The Stars owned the draft rights to Malone, but because of financial woes had not been able to make a serious offer. A new owner stepped in, however, and he had more than enough money to make Moses listen. The sports world waited in earnest as Moses pondered. When he finally made up his mind, Moses became the first basketball player to make the jump directly from high school to the pros, not to mention becoming three million dollars richer.

An immediate uproar arose from the world of college athletics, some sectors of the press, and folks all over the nation, particularly Maryland basketball fams. People seemed shocked at the idea of a 19-year old being corrupted by the world of professional athletics.

However, the shame here lies with the colleges, not the pros. Put very simply, Moses belongs in college as much as "Deep Throat" belongs on Saturday morning television. He had proved conclusively in high school that his passing was strictly limited to the basketball court.

The colleges put academics aside, though, and were prepared to offer him anything for his basketball talents. Of course, this is just one more example which will go a step further in destroying the myth concerning the purity of college athletics.

The pros, on the other hand, were totally above board. They came right out and said, "We'll give you a few million bucks to play ball for us." Moses would have been a damn fool to refuse.

If the jump from college to the pros is as tough as they say, the jump from high school must be extraordinary. It will take Moses a long time to adjust, and he may never live up to everyone's expectations. Hopefully, however, his case will lead to a new era of honesty and candor in college athletics.

"Rowathon" psyches team, raises funds for women's crew

By LAURIE GULLION
Women's Crew Team

A "Rowathon" on the Connecticut River hopefully will alleviate the budgetary problems of the University of Massachusetts Women's Crew Club which, inadequately funded by the athletic department, cannot afford to equip its team.

The Women's Crew Club hopes, through the "Rowathon" scheduled on September 28th, to raise funds beyond the allotted budget to buy quality rowing equipment including new oars and a sectional racing shell. Two old Pocock racing shell--eight years old and fifteen years old, designed for men, and presently used by the women's club--must be replaced by lighter smaller shells that, built specifically for women, would allow them to be more competitive.

If you wish to sponsor a club member who will row the course rain or shine this Saturday, please contact any member of the crew club.

Beginning the fall season with a conditioning program that prepares twenty-five new members for the major racing season in the spring, the club emphasizes the development of good rowing technique and also concentrates on cardio-vascular conditioning through running, on-the-river training, and bicycle riding to daily practices.

The newer members will benefit by the experience of eight veteran rowers including Rose Sellew, Nancy Dowd, Eileen Gallant, Meg Riley, Cindy Flint, Barbara Andreas, Joanne Andreas, and Debbie Kirchmer, who is also a member of the U.S. National Women's Rowing Team. She recently competed with the national team in the World Rowing Championships for Women held at Lucerne, Switzerland.

"Brushes" with Trinity College and MIT on a two to three mile course on the Connecticut River are scheduled for the fall, and the season peaks with the Head of the Charles Regatta in Boston. According to Coach Bob Spousta, "The future looks bright with many promising novices. We're hopeful of becoming a recognized varsity team with adequate support. At the present time, the women's needs cannot be adequately fulfilled due to a lack of equipment and support. There are presently fifty women who have expressed an interest in crew and only eighteen will be able to race competitively."

Late goals give Soviets tie 5-5

VANCOUVER [UPI] - The soviet Union scored two goals with only four minutes remaining Monday night to tie team Canada '74 5-5 despite a Bobby Hull three-goal hat-trick in the opening period.

The tie evened the eight-game series at 1-1-2 going into the second half of the series, which will be played in Moscow early next month. In the 1972 series, Canada trailed 1-2-1 leaving here but won three of four games in the Soviet Union to take the series with a 4-3-1 record.

Hull's three-goal hat-trick in the first period put Canada ahead 5-2 after the first 20 minutes of play. Gordie Howe and Frank Mahovlich scored the other team Canada goals in the first period.

Valery Vasiljev put the Soviet Union ahead 1-0 with his second goal of the series, scoring on a low drive from the point which went under team Canada goaltender Gerry Cheevers at 3:44.

Gordie Howe, the 46-year-old veteran from the Houston Aeros, tied it up less than a minute later when he took a pass from Ralph Backstrom in the Soviet zone and fired it home over Russian goaltender Viadislav Tretiak's left shoulder.

Boris Mikhailov put the Soviets back on top, 2-1, at 5:59 when he took a pass out from the right of the Canadian nets from Vladimir Petrov and jammed it past Cheevers from just outside the crease. Johnny McKenzie was in the penalty box at the time.

Hull, the 35-year-old veteran left winger from the Winnipeg Jets, got his first goal of the game at 12:45 when he scored from the point with a slapshot that cleanly beat Tretiak.

Sox hope for miracle

BOSTON [AP] — Manager Darrell Johnson of the Boston Red Sox, with his team struggling to stay in contention in the American League East, has no thoughts of throwing in the towel.

"I'm not going with the kids the rest of the way," Johnson said Monday as the Red Sox prepared for their final road trip, "No, I'm going to play my best club."

The Red Sox, five games behind division-leading New York and four games back of second-place Baltimore, open a three-game stand at Shea Stadium against the Yankees Tuesday night with a twi-night doubleheader. Veteran Luis Tiant and Roger Moret are slated to pitch for Boston against Larry Gura and Rudi May.

"Maybe we'll do some scoring in New York," Johnson said, "We had better."

Boston, which lost to Baltimore 7-2 Sunday, has dropped 21 of its last 29 starts. On Aug. 23, the Red Sox held a seven-game lead in their division.

"We're going to have to perform a miracle now," Johnson said.

The Red Sox have 10 games remaining on the schedules.

Following the Yankee series, Boston has four games in Detroit and then a three-game home stand at Fenway Park against the Cleveland Indians, which will close out the regular season.

New Bruins "tougher" under Cherry

BOSTON [UPI] - New coach Don Cherry says his Boston Bruins will be the same as last season--but different.

"We are going to win the Stanley Cup this season, that's for sure," said Cherry, who resurrected Rochester from the depths of the American Hockey League to a first place finish last spring. He takes over a Bruins team that cruised into the cup finals last season only to lose to the hustling Philadelphia Flyers.

"Everybody expects us to win the cup and I expect it. I wouldn't have accepted the job unless I felt this way," said the 40-year-old former defenseman. "It's a tough spot to be in but I like it."

Cherry, who was given the coaching job after Bep Guidolin's contract was not renewed, said the Bruins' personnel will be almost entirely the same as last year but the style of play will be rougher.

"I like a tough team and if there's a specialty I have, it's bringing out the toughness in players."

Cherry expects his team to play more like the Big Bad Bruins of several seasons ago, a style that had been somewhat abandoned over the past two years.

The new coach also hopes his team will continue its' prolific scoring while adding muscle. The Bruins had the NHL's top four scorers last season in Phil Esposito (145 points), Bobby Orr (122), Ken Hodge (105) and Wayne Cashman(89).

Espsosito, Hodge and Cashman, the highest scoring line in league history, will be back as will the second line of Gregg Sheppard, John Bucyk and Bobby Schmautz and the third unit of Andre Savard, Don Marcotte and Terry O'Rielly.

Orr anchors the defense that includes Dallas Smith, Carol Vadnais, sophomore Al Sims and Darryl Edestrand.

Reserve wing Dave Forbes and center Walt McKechnie, acquired in the three-way deal that sent Derek Sanderson to the New York Rangers, also are expected to make the team.

Gilles Gilbert has the no. 1 goaltending chores while Ross Brooks, Den Broderick and impressive Dave Reece--a standout for the AHL Boston Braves last season--will battle for the backup job.

A number of young players looked good in training camp - former Harvard forward Dave Hynes; University of New Hampshire wing Gordie Clark; second round draft choice Peter Sturgeon, a burly left wing; and Braves' defenseman Al Simmons.

"Fortunately for me, I don't see any real openings on this team. I haven't got a closed mind but I'm afraid someone's going to have to come up with a super training camp to make the squad," said Cherry.

Since he will be working with a veteran team, Cherry said his prime job will be to put the Bruins "In the right frame of mind. I only saw them on television a few times last year and I would say overall that I don't know what their problem was. But it seemed to me they weren't in the right frame of mind."

Cherry wouldn't say it but the implication was there: the Bruins did not want to play for Guidolin by season's end.

What he did say was that he will work the Bruins hard while "Trying to keep them happy. If a person is happy about his job, he'll do it better whether he's working in a factory or playing hockey."

Booters attack BC in opener

By BEN CASWELL

The UMass soccer Minutemen open their regular season play in Chesnut Hill tonite as they take on the Boston College Eagles.

The team goes into the start of the season with what coach Al Rufe termed, "a veteran club, with a lot of experience."

"We have the talent to do something special this year. The team is ready; it's up to them now," Rufe said yesterday at the teams final preparation practice. "The first game of the season is always a big one psychologically. We would like to start out with a win which would of course be a big plus," Rufe also said.

This year's team is definetly one that is loaded with talent and experience. The squad is stocked with returning players at every position and some newcomers have also added to the team's quality.

Coach Rufe said that he will start the same team tonite that he did versus Harvard this past weekend when the Minutemen beat the Crimson 3-1. That would have Bill Belcher, Bob McChesney, and Mohammed Othman at the forward positions; Jim Vollinger, Bill McDonald, and Billy Spyker at the halfbacks; Dan Ouellette, Gary McKenna, Steve Parsons, and Dean Lungu at the fullbacks; and Marc Hanks starting in goal.

In final preparation before tonite's contest a half dozen Soccer men scramble for the ball at yesterday's practice.

Senior goaltender and co-captain Carl Vercollone will not dress for this contest. He is still nursing a shoulder injury that is now coupled with a bruised thigh that he got when he got when he saw some limited action against Harvard. Last year's leading scorer Tom Coburn is also sidelined with a groin pull. He will suit up for the game though and will probably see some limited action. Another starter from last year forward Tony King has a calf problem and he like Coburn will dress for the game and will play some limited action.

Coach Rufe stated that, "We are better prepared now than we were at this time last year. We are looking for a good year and with the guys working as a team I think we can do it."

QUICK SHOTS--B.C. beat Bentley College 2-0 last week. Last year it was 3-1 B.C. at the half, but the Minutemen came on strong to make the final a 5-3 UMass victory. The field could be a factor tonight as the game will be played on B.C.'s Astroturf. The game will be a lot faster, the ball will bounce somewhat different from the bounces on a grass field. Coach Rufe said that he felt real good about the goaltending position even with Vercollone out. Two sophomores, Marc Hanks and Buddy Butler are expected to adequately fill Vercollone's void. UMass' next game is at Orono versus Umaine on Saturday. Their first home game is against Keene State on Oct. 2.

Chaney suspended money only hangup

By GIL PETERS

BOSTON [UPI] — The dollar duel between the Boston Celtics and guard Don Chaney is official.

General Manager Red Auerbach announced Monday that Chaney had been suspended for failing to report to training camp, while the veteran guard's attorney countered that his client is no longer under contract to Boston.

"Mr. Chaney is not in violation of any contract; he has no contract," said New York attorney Larry Fleisher, who represents the NBA players' association. "His contract expired last season."

Chaney is in his option year of a three-year contract that he signed in 1971.

"Don is in violation of his contract by not reporting to training camp," said Auerbach in a prepared statement. "We have no choice but to place him on suspension."

Fleisher maintains Chaney can't be suspended because the contingencies of the option "Do not require him to play for the Celtics this season. At very worst, it doesn't allow him to play for another team this year."

Fleisher, who said Chaney could not be reached for comment, added that the defensive specialist had been the subject "of substantial interest by the ABA." He would not elaborate.

The attorney said there was just "one stumbling block" between Chaney and the Celtics. "Everything's agreed to but one thing--money."

Asked how far apart the two sides were, Fleisher said, "Far enough apart for Mr. Chaney not to be in camp and for Mr. Auerbach to suspend him.

"I think Red understands completely Don's position and from what took place Monday, I now understand Red's position," said the attorney.

Let me say immediately that the purpose of this column is not to demean or make fun of the University of Maine at Orono. This should be considered as a serious attempt to seriously describe the environment of a learning institution and the importance of athletics in relation to the university.

Orono is about as far away from the centers of urban life as one could be without being a university of hermits or ascetics. It's about 320 miles northeast of Amherst and much closer to the Canadian border than it is to Portland, Maine's metropolis. In fact Orono is even further north than Montreal.

It could be said that the student body of eleven thousand attends the University of Maine at Orono because they want to get away from it all (and believe me when you're up there you've succeeded.)

The campus itself is unexciting to the point of putting one to sleep. There are no gargantuan libraries, inhuman dormitories, or behemoth dining commons on campus either. In other words, Maine is a bit different from certain universities closer to home.

Athletically speaking, the teams coming out of Orono are pretenders of the worst kind. Imagine a team of football or basketball players competing against powers like Delaware in football or Massachusetts in basketball. They may hope that they can win, but when you play for the University of Maine, you've got to be thinking first and last of getting enjoyment out of what you're doing.

You see Maine is in a curious situation. They're the only school in the Yankee Conference that does not give out athletic scholarships. And even though the Yan Con is not New England's answer to the Big Ten, a school cannot hope to compete with any hope of success unless it grants some scholarships.

On Wednesday of this week, the Maine Board of Trustees will meet to act on a suggestion by Athletic Director Harold Westerman that the University of Maine authorize the granting of forty scholarships over the next four years to be given to both male and female athletes. It's only a drop in the bucket but it's a start and a necessary one at that.

"Walter Abbot does not want to and can't go back to playing the Colbys and the Bowdoin's," said UMass football coach Dick MacPherson after Saturday's 42-0 debacle suffered by Maine. "He can't be expected to do very much if he can't give out scholarships."

Maine is in a pretty bad position when it comes to athletics because whatever decent athletes the state does put out will logically attend universities which can offer them something more than isolation and an impossible task of winning football and basketball games. Right now that's all that Orono offers.

Interestingly enough the student newspaper the Maine Campus came out with a lead editorial in their Friday edition stating their objections to the idea of scholarships claiming that it wouldn't be right for a university to give "Joe Smith, 6'11" basketball player an advantage over any other student because he can put a ball through a hoop."

That's a great argument for proving that education should do without athletics but it's a very shallow one. You can go back two thousand years and read about the ancient Greek philosophers preaching the importance of the education of the mind and the body to refute that argument. A full education should include math, English, and physical education. And for the sake of the university's reputation Maine has got to give its athletes a chance at winning. That can only be accomplished through the granting of scholarships, if only a few.

Lovejoy learned early about environment

By CHRIS DILLARD
Staff Reporter

Since the charge against Lovejoy is for willful and malicious destruction of property, the background of the defendant has become significant to his defense.

It is necessary to show his state of mind prior to his confessed toppling of the tower to determine whether there was actually malicious intent. Towards this end, Lovejoy responded to questions asked of him Thursday by his attorney, Thomas Lesser.

Samuel H. Lovejoy was born in Springfield, in 1946. At the age of six months, he moved to Japan, where his father was stationed in the service. Three years later, his family moved to San Diego where they stayed for six months. In the next couple of years, the family also lived in Columbus, Georgia and Aiken, S.C.

Profile

In 1952, Lovejoy's father was killed in an automobile accident. At this time, a friend named Harold Porter offered his farm house to the family where Lovejoy lived until college. On this "typical New England farm" Porter "taught me to be a farmer," Lovejoy said. Later, Porter was nearly killed by the pesticides he sprayed in his orchards. Lovejoy cited this as an introduction to the dangers of putting poisons into the environment.

Because of his aptitude for science, Lovejoy was one of 150 students chosen from across the U.S. to attend the Institute for Young Scientists, which was sponsored by the National Science Foundation. It was here that Lovejoy first learned of the care

Accepts responsibility for damage

Lovejoy defends self on stand

By DAVID GREENSLIT
Staff Reporter

Greenfield — The scope of anti-nuclear activist Sam Lovejoy's Superior Court trial broadened yesterday as Lovejoy took the stand in his own defense and expounded the dangers of nuclear power and the public's inability to do anything about it.

Although he prevented the jury last week from hearing expert defense testimony concerning nuclear danger and civil disobedience, Superior Court Judge Kent B. Smith said yesterday that Lovejoy's "impressions" of those issues were relevant to his state of mind when he toppled Northeast Utilities' environmental tower on the Montague Plains.

Smith therefore allowed Lovejoy broad latitude in his testimony before the jury.

Lovejoy has accepted full responsibility for the Feb. 22 toppling of the 500 foot tower, first step in NU's plans to build a $1.52 billion nuclear power plant on the Montague Plains. He is charged with willful and malicious destruction of personal property.

Atty. Thomas Lesser of Conway did the questioning of Lovejoy, who has been handling his own defense. This avoided the awkward procedure of Lovejoy asking himself questions while on the stand.

After sketching his background and education, which had heavy emphasis in physics, math, history, and political science, the 28 year old Montague farmer told the jury how he became "unalterably convinced that this (nuclear power) would be a disaster."

He said that while he was in Seattle in 1973, 115,000 gallons of radioactive waste leaked from a storage site in Hanford Wash. The Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) stated that '"there was nothing to worry about,'" according to Lovejoy,'" since the waste wouldn't reach the Columbia River for 800 years.'"

Nuclear wastes, however, can remain radioactive for as long as 500,000 years, according to last week's testimony by Dr. John Gofman, a physician and noted nuclear physicist.

"In my mind, the Columbia River would begin to die in 800 years," continued Lovejoy. He said he was "outraged" at the "unbelievable way the AEC dealt with public

Fine Arts center scheduled for completion in fall of '75

By MARA KLEIN
Staff Reporter

This is the first part of a two part series on the Fine Arts Building.

Speculation among the student body has been growing over when the mammoth, concrete sculpture known as the Fine Arts Center will be opening. According to the Center's director, Frederick Steinway, classes should be held in the building this semester, but the complete facility won't be operative until next fall.

The 16.3 million dollar building was first conceived of eleven years ago, when studies of it were made by the state, which financed the building. Since that time the needs for such a facility changed and expanded, however it is still the most modern facility of its kind in the area.

Four performing centers and three departments are housed in the building: music, art and theatre. The music department consists of teaching studios, administrative offices, chorus and instrumental rehearsal halls, a library housing records, tapes and carouls, as well as the usual array of music books one would expect to find in a music library. A recital hall is also included in the music section of the building. The hall seats 239, and contains a concert piano, organ, etc.

The art department, which is housed on the third and fourth levels of the building, consists of classrooms and approximately 24 studios for painting, lithography, drawing, design, and etching, plus facilities for graduate students, and staff. However since interests in ceramics, sculpture, and foundry were not as high as they are today, there aren't any facilities for these arts in the building.

The theatre department contains a theatre with a seating capacity of 700, which will be both a lab and a center for performance for the department although Bowker Auditorium will still be used too. There's also a scenery shop, costume rooms and a studio or experimental theatre that is two stories high. The studio theatre is a bare, cubed workspace which also has a balcony, so it can be used as a theatre in the round.

The pride and joy of the building is its unique main concert hall, which seats 2000, in the continental style, whereby there are no center aisles, so one enters from entrances on either side of the corridors. The concert hall is intended for use primarily as a concert hall, but lectures and meetings will also be held there. It will not be used as a theatre, and was never planned for such use, since there are no provisions for full theatrical lighting, scenery, etc

Once this building opens UMass culture should be on the rise.

DVP speaker Frances Fitzgerald speaks to a capacity crowd on the "national security bureaucracy" in Thompson hall last night.

Pulitzer-winning writer hits 'security' mentality

By FRED NOBLES
Staff Reporter

Last night, Pulitzer Prize winning correspondent Frances Fitzgerald spoke to a capacity audience in Thompson auditorium about the "national security bureaucracy" responsible for a "mentality that carries over from Vietnam to Watergate."

Ms. Fitzgerald, author of Fire in the Lake, a book about American intervention in Indo-China, was critical of President Gerald Ford's continuing support of the Saigon government. Referring to former presidents Johnson and Nixon, Ms. Fitzgerald said, "Here we are after having thrown out two presidents... and the war in Vietnam continues."

Charging that President Ford is designating more aid to Indo-China than to the rest of the world combined, Ms. Fitzgerald said that, "If aid continues to Saigon, there is a very real chance that there will be another North Vietnamese offensive." Ms. Fitzgerald feels that President Ford "could balance the national budget by stopping the war in Vietnam." She went on to say that by stopping the war, President Ford would save the U.S. $3 billion per year.

Ms. Fitzgerald described the "national security bureaucracy", which she feels perpetuates Vietnam type policies, as "an entirely different culture." She said that, "In retrospect the Pentagon Papers are something like the Dead Sea Scrolls." Prior to the release of the papers, Ms. Fitzgerald feels that the American public didn't understand how the government worked. The U.S. Vietnam policy carries on from administration to administration according to Ms. Fitzgerald, because of "the dead weight of beaurocracy."

"If we don't find some way to check this beaurecracy," Ms. Fitzgerald said, "something like Vietnam or Watergate will happen again."

In an interview prior to her speech, Ms. Fitzgerald speculated on the economic future of Vietnam. "The hope of American planners," she said, "is that South Vietnam can be used as a source of cheap labor to put together Sony transisters or whatever."

By contrast, she feels that the NLF and North Vietnam are more concerned with feeding all the people of Vietnam and finding work for everyone. Pointing out that South Vietnam is well suited to agriculture while North Vietnam has mining and industrial potential, Ms. Fitzgerald said that, "The two halves (of Vietnam) have always been complimentary."

Ms. Fitzgerald's appearance was sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Facilities and funds hurt Program Council

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

Poor facilities and limited funds are two problems encountered by the Program Council. According to Mark Bennett, Program Council Director, Curry Hicks Cage is too large, the Student Union Ballroom too small and funds too limited to sponsor a large concert by a famous band.

The Program Council is appropriated $50,000 for the year by the student Senate. They are presently working on ways to supplement the budget. Mark Bennett and the food service officials are discussing the possibility of jointly sponsoring a series of concerts. The Program Council and either the Blue Wall or the Hatch would share the proceeds.

The Council has also devised a financial sharing plan with the print sales which is backed by the Art Committee. They have considered running the print sales through the University Store which would mean a 250 per cent increase in selling, according to Bennett.

The four committees of the Program Council have begun to plan activities for the fall semester. The Music Committee is having a concert on October 19th in the Student Union Ballroom. Though plans are indefinite, they are contemplating on booking either "Little Feet" or "Peter Frampton."

The Committee has hired Joda Tanaka to play the Shakuhachi, a Japanese flute on Dec. 7. Only two people in the country can play this instrument, said Sally Gotchall, chairwoman for the Music Committee.

welfare." It was then that he decided to get actively involved in the antinuclear movement, he said.

Since that time he said he read extensively about nuclear power.

A book that greatly influenced his thinking, he said, was Poisoned Power, a book co-authored by Gofman. Poisoned Power convinced Lovejoy that under current AEC guidelines, low level radiation emitted would cause leukemia, cancer, stillbirth, mutation, and genetic injury.

As his fears about nuclear power crystallized, Lovejoy said he then investigated possible recourse by private citizens to block the continuing development of nuclear power plants. The AEC, he said, is supposed to be a "regulatory arm" of government, but is really "a withered element, developed in one direction - promotion."

Lovejoy testified that nuclear Emergency Core Cooling Systems (ECCS), a system of reserve water to cool the plant in an emergency, had failed in six "small scale tests". At the same time the Union of Concerned Scientists in Cambridge determined that the ECCS was ineffective, Lovejoy said, the AEC began requiring them in nuclear power plants. He likened this to "Ford putting emergency brakes on their cars, selling them to 200 million Americans, and hoping they'll never have to use them."

He called the AEC license intervention process "a sham," and said the average citizen has neither the "time, money, or expertise" necessary for general intervention.

Recourse to the utility companies was also impossible, according to Lovejoy, since Charles Bragg, NU's vice president for public relations, has already said that local opposition would not inhibit NU's plans to build a nuclear power plant in Montague.

After reading such historical documents as the Magna Carta, the Declaration of Independence, and the Massachusetts Bill of Rights, Lovejoy said he decided that "existing authorities couldn't handle the problem" and that his rights to recourse had "been usurped." It was then, he said, that he focused on the 500 foot environmental tower as a symbol of the coming nuclear power plant.

He then gave the following account of the toppling:

On Feb. 21 he wrote a statement accepting responsibility for the act of civil disobedience he was about to commit - early the next morning.

After other members of his commune had gone to bed, Lovejoy dressed for the 15 degree weather, and, carrying a crowbar and a wrench, walked to the tower site on the Montague Plains. He then surveyed the area, made sure no one was around, and decided the tower should fall to the north, away from the nearest house.

Then, using the wrench and crowbar, he loosened three turnbuckles at the south anchor base, snapping the guy wire cables. "The unbelievable sound of the first guy snapping I'll never forget. I thought the whole town of Montague would hear it," he said. The tower swayed momentarily, then collapsed to the sand and scrub vegetation on the Montague Plains.

On the way to Turners Falls, Lovejoy met a police cruiser and turned himself in.

Lovejoy had science and farm background that is required for the handling of radiated matter.

Lovejoy attended Amherst College for a short time, but was discouraged that his Advanced Placement scores were not allowed to exempt him from basic courses. He lost interest and was forced to leave school. He then held a number of jobs while attending night school. Because of his good marks, Amherst College took him back. He was graduated in 1969 with a major in Political Science. Later in the year he moved to the farm where he now lives.

The 65 acre farm in Montague is the home of Lovejoy and 7 others, including two children. When asked who had influenced him the most to make his decision to topple the tower, Lovejoy replied that it was the four year old girl Sequoia that stimulated him to act.

"If I don't stand up for their health, safety and happiness, no one will," he declared.

Majority of UMass students want unconditional amnesty

By CHRIST SMALLIS
Staff Reporter

Results of a sample survey conducted a week ago on the UMass campus showed a marked contrast to the results of national polls on the question of amnesty.

Although the national polls showed that the majority of its participants favored conditional amnesty, the UMass poll, conducted by the Veterans Coalition for Community Affairs, showed the majority of the student body contacted to be in favor of unconditional amnesty.

A total of 616 people participated in the survey, which was conducted on Sept. 17 and 18. Of this total, 93 were veterans and 523 were non-veterans.

The survey also showed that the replies given by veterans were very nearly the same as those given by non-vets.

Sixty-two percent of the veterans contacted favored unconditional amnesty, 32 per cent were for conditional amnesty, and the remainder favored no amnesty at all.

With respect to non-veterans, 59 per cent favored unconditional amnesty, 37 per cent were for conditional amnesty and 4 per cent for no amnesty.

Those who favored conditional amnesty were split as to how it would be conducted. However more favored individual case review over alternative service. Only six people out of all queried were for limited punitive action.

According to organizational director Frank Harrison, the Veterans's Coalition was drafting a press release in support of unconditional amnesty, when the desire for a concensus of student body opinion was considered. As a result, the Coalition developed a questionnaire and its members distributed copies among the student body last Tuesday and Wednesday.

Harrison said that he was not surprised at the outcome of the survey, and he felt reassured by the strong veteran response for unconditional amnesty.

When asked about his personal feelings on the subject, Harrison said that unconditional amnesty was the only course to take, because the present program is inconsistent. He also stated that the actions taken by deserters and draft evaders were judgements of conscience, and any form of prosecution would be unjust.

Under the present system, deserters would be handled more leniently than draft evaders.

Deserters returning to this country will automatically receive a dishonorable discharge. However, they have the option of performing alternative service, and in exchange for this will instead receive a clemency discharge.

Draft evaders don't fare so well. Upon returning to this country, they will either have to perform alternative service or be subject to prosecution for violating Selective Service laws.

RESULTS OF THE SURVEY: 616 TOTAL RESPONSES

VETERANS 93 RESPONSES			NON-VETERANS 523 RESPONSES
#	Per Cent		#	Per Cent

Approval of Trustees needed to expand legal services

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

Both graduate and undergraduate student government leaders are waiting for the UMass Board of Trustees to approve the Legal Services Governing Board.

The Graduate Student Senate gave their approval to the Board at their Monday night meeting. If the Trustees approve this extension of the current student legal services, there will be three fulltime attorneys, paralegal assistants, and secretarial help available to advise and represent individual students in civil cases.

Presently, the legal staff is unauthorized to accept cases of a criminal nature or those involving possible financial benefit to a specific individual.

The Undergraduate Student Senate is funding three quarters of the Legal Services Office (LSO) funds, with the Graduate Student Senate funding remaining one quarter. Consequently, students involved in actual court cases will only have to pay court costs, not attorney's fees as well.

Voting membership of the Legal Services Governing Board will be limited to five undergraduate students, one of whom will be the President of the USS, and three graduate students, one of whom will be the GSS President. Non-voting members include the Director of the Legal Services Office and a faculty advisor "who is a lawyer and appointed by the USS and GSS Presidents."

Board appointments will be for a one year period. The length of time and exact contracts of the lawyers will be determined by the Board.

The Legal Services Governing Board will make all decisions and policies regarding the staff and services of the LSO.

No precedents have been established as to what kinds of specific civil cases the staff will be handling due to the unavailability of records from the previous Student Attorney. "This is essentially a whole new ball game", stated GSS President Jim Lindsey.

Landlord-tenant problems, domestic problems that might result in divorce — these are the areas of concern that are expected to generate a considerable demand for legal advice. "Until you know what the demand is, you can't really set the parameters," remarked GSS Treasurer Dave Winchester. "We'll just have to take the cases as they come."

At this time, both Senates have approved the Constitution of the Legal Services Governing Board. The whole issue of a Legal Services Office will probably come before the Board of Trustees' November meeting for final ratification.

The current Student Legal Services staff consists of one full-time attorney and two paralegal assistants. The office, located in the Campus Center, Rm. 922, ext. 5-1995, is open 2-4 p.m. Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday or by appointment.

In other news, the GSS Election Committee announced its recognition and certification of ten new senators for the 1974-1975 session. Only newly-elected and certified senators will be allowed to vote at the next GSS meeting, to be held Mon., Sept. 30.

Barbara Stack, GSS Vice-President, presented a proposal from the Election Committee which will exempt the School of Education and the School of Business Administration (SBA) for the '74-'75 academic year from adhering to the established election procedures.

In the case of the SBA, this proposal divides the total SBA graduate population into two categories: masters' and doctoral students. The larger of the two constituencies will be alloted two senators and the smaller will have one.

In view of the unusual size and academic divisions within the School of Education, the Election Committee's proposal offers a plan which will allow for a more equitable number and distribution of graduate student senators.

The third meeting of the Graduate Student Senate, to be held Mon. Sept. 30, promises to be an important one. An address by University President Robert Wood will highlight the agenda which will also include discussion of the Election Committee's proposal. All interested undergraduates and graduates are invited to attend the meeting and have a dialogue with President Wood on pertinent issues that concern both student bodies.

WMUA grievances must be filed now

Student Attorney General Cindi Iris says spokespersons from BMCP, CORP, BNS, and WMP must contact her today if they wish to prevent grievances "not already worked out" for WMUA's court hearing Thursday night.

Iris may be reached at 5-0716 or in room 422 of the Student Union Building.

New attorneys pledge effective student aid

By CATHERINE KOZELL
Staff Reporter

The newly appointed attorneys for UMass Students say that they intend to provide effective legal representation exclusively for the student body.

The new Attorneys, William Dorsch and Lisa Erdberg, say they will not handle any cases on behalf of the Administration. On the other hand, they cannot presenntly carry out any legal proceedings beyond arraignment against the Administration in any student-vs.-University cases.

The University Bulletin, an administrative weekly, quoted Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage as saying the University's position is that, although the salaries of attorneys for the students are paid for by the students from student fees, the fees are collected by the Trustees.

In effect, therefore, he said it would be a conflict of interest for the Trustees to approve paying an attorney to represent a student in litigation against the Commonwealth or the University.

"We're trying to run a really good, efficient legal services office. We want to do the kinds of things the students need," stated Erdberg when questioned about the general policy of the new lawyers.

Among the issues still to be resolved within the next few weeks is whether the Administration has authority over the Student Senate, according to Dorsch.

Both Dorsch and Erdberg have both graduated from Boston College Law School with Erdberg still to receive her official notification and title this December. Dorsch served as staff attorney for 3½ years with Vermont Legal Aid. Erdberg has also acquired experience by working as a legal assistant in Roxbury.

Any problems should be directed to the Legal Services Office located at Rm. 922 of the Campus Center, phone no. 545-1995. Appointments should be made, although open office hours are Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 2 p.m. to 4 p.m.

Overrules advice of Kissinger

House votes, 307-90, to suspend aid to Turkey

WASHINGTON [AP] - Overriding the recommendations of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and its own leaders, the House voted yesterday to suspend U.S. aid to Turkey until there is progress for peace in Cyprus.

Kissinger and the leaders told the House the action would endanger U.S. efforts to negotiate withdrawal of Turkish troops from Cyprus.

But proponents of the Turkish aid suspension said 80 to 90 per cent of the weapons used in the Turkish invasion of Cyprus killing 5,000 Cypriots came from the United States and America has a moral obligation to halt such aid.

"How far are we to go in underwriting aggression in order to maintain our influence in a country," asked Rep. Paul S. Sarbanes, D-Md.

The House approved 307 to 90 an amendment by Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal, D-N.Y., suspending aid to Turkey until President Ford can certify that "substantial progress" has been made toward a settlement on military forces in Cyprus.

An amendment proposed by Rep. H.R. Gross, R-Iowa, to also suspend aid to Grece until there is a settlement was rejected earlier by a 48 to 11 standing vote.

Rosenthal said inclusion of Greece would be "outrageous... absurd" because he said the invasion of Cyprus involved 220 U.S. - supplied tanks, 145 artillery pieces and other weapons including Phantom jet fighters only from Turkey.

"The only country that used U.S. military equipment to invade Cyprus was Turkey," Rosenthal said.

Rosenthal said his amendment would suspend only what is left of Turkey's $13.7 million in military aid and that economic aid would not be affected.

Chairman Otto E. Passman of the House foreign operations subcommittee said the House vote would suspend what is left of all $35 million aid for Turkey approved by Congress last year.

The suspension was tacked on to a stop-gap continuing resolution which authorizes federal agencies to continue spending at last year's rate until Congress approves their regular appropriation for the current fiscal year which started last July 1.

Arab leader suggests tradeoff between oil and food prices

By United Press Internationsl

The Emir of Abu Dhabi, ruler of a major oil-exporting country, said yesterday Arab producers would be willing to cut oil prices if western nations reduce the prices of foodstuffs and manufactured products.

The statement, the most concrete reaction so far to President Ford's effort to talk oil prices down, was made by Sheikh Zayed ben Sultan, elected ruler of the United Arab Emirates and the hereditary emir of oil-rich Abu Dhabi.

Arab radio stations quoted Zayed as telling a meeting of foreign ambassadors in Abu Ihabi, "We would be prepared to reduce oil prices if industrialized countries did likewise and cut the prices of the foodstuffs and goods they export to us."

"It would be unjust to discuss ways of reducing oil prices while the cost of other commodities remained as they were."

He said oil prices were the only prices that had remained stable for the past 20 years.

"Now industrial countries attempt to exploit the situation simply because oil-producing nations have asked for their rights." he said.

Sultan said a new phase in relations between producers and consumers should begin, and "this phase should be based on justice and equality."

Other oil producing countries reacted with surprise, concern and indignation to President Ford's speech in Detroit on Monday.

Early severe freeze kills Midwest crops

By United Press International

A premature, crop-killing freeze, striking in the aftermath of a stunting summer drought, damaged corn, soybean and vegetable crops across a broad belt of the Midwest this week and threatened to boost prices of food at the grocery counter.

The cold, hitting on the last day of day of summer and first day of autumn, nipped behind-schedule crops from the Dakotas to Ohio. Agricultural leaders, agronomists and farmers said the result would be a slash in farm income in the nation's breadbasket.

Several experts said it was too early to assess the extent of the damage, and many were reluctant to predict the freeze's impact on food prices. But Dr. W. O. Scott, University of Illinois agronomist, said: "I would suspect it would drive up meat prices."

William J. Kuhfuss, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, said it was too early to say what would happen to meat prices "though it's for sure they won't be any cheaper."

Crop expectations will be down 20 million bushels from what the Agriculture Department last predicted, he said.

Seek to prevent guerrilla attack

Israeli warplanes attack Arabs in Lebanon

Israel said its warplanes attacked Arab guerrilla concentrations in Lebanon yesterday on the nation's official commemoration of the first anniversary of the Yom Kippur war and vowed never again to be caught by a surprise Arab attack.

A military spokesman said the air strike could be considered to be "pre-emptive" to prevent a guerrilla attack on Yom Kippur Thursday. A similar Israeli strike was launched two days before the Rosh Hashanah holiday last week.

The nation marked the day with its forces concluding three days of large-scale maneuvers near the Syrian frontier, holding memorials for its 2,600 war dead and receiving campaign ribbons at army, air force and naval bases throughout the country.

In Egypt, authorities closed Cairo International Airport for 45 minutes Tuesday while the air force practiced for a military display scheduled for Oct. 6 to mark the first anniversary of the latest war with Israel.

Officials said the airport would be closed for similar periods Wednesday and Thursday for the same purpose.

Israeli Defense Minister Shimon Peres closed the armored, infantry, paratroop and air force war games on the occupied Golan Heights of Syria by telling the troops it would be a mistake for Syria to resume hostilities.

"If they do this, we will not be surprised, not even on the first day," he said. "If they try this, the price they will pay will be heavier than the one they paid in the Yom Kippur war."

Israeli planes swept into "Fatahland" in southern Lebanon for the first time in nine days to attack guerrilla concentrations in tents and rock enclaves near Mazrat Beit Naful, 10 miles north of the frontier, the military command said.

It said all planes returned safely to base from the 15-minute raid. A military spokesman said the planes did not hit the village.

In Beirut, the Israeli defense ministry said six Israeli warplanes staged a five-minute attack on farming regions of southeast Lebanon near the Israeli border.

The Lebanese statement reported no casualties but said the raiders destroyed a civilian truck and damaged plantations in the area. It said the planes attacked from an altitude of 9,000 feet.

Senate panel votes for control of tapes

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Government Operations Committee unanimously approved a bill yesterday which would prevent former President Richard M. Nixon from taking custody of the Watergate tapes or destroying them.

The bill would nullify the agreement President Ford announced Sept. 8 in pardoning Nixon. It gave the former president control of the tapes and provided for their total destruction by Sept. 1, 1984, or at the time of his death, whichever occurs first.

Sen. Edmund G. Muskie, D-Maine, noting Nixon's health problems, said speedy action was urgent "because of the uncertainties of human life."

Under the bill, Nixon would have access to the tapes for his memoirs. But "complete possession and control" would be retained by the government. No tapes could be destroyed without Congress' consent.

The bill does not specify how or whether the tapes might ultimately be made public. It forbids access to "unauthorized persons" or disclosure that would jeopardize national security or individuals' rights to fair trials.

But the chief sponsor, Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., said it was necessary to preserve the tapes so that "at some point in the future" the nation would learn how the Watergate scandal came into being.

Approval of the bill by the Senate and House is expected and Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., said he expected President Ford to "recognize the necessity" for invalidating the agreement with Nixon and to sign the bill into law.

Traditionally, materials accumulated by a president during his term have been considered his possessions.

If a court determines Nixon owned the tapes and the government seized them in the public interest, it could, under the bill's terms, fix a "just compensation" for Nixon to receive.

Nixon, however, might challenge the law on other grounds - possibly that his right of privacy was being violated. In that case, the bill provides for a trial by a three-judge court and a speedy-appeal to the Supreme Court.

Rumsfeld named Chief of Staff

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday named NATO Ambassador Donald Rumsfeld as his top White House aide replacing Gen. Alexander Haig - the last of the holdovers from Richard M. Nixon's administration.

Rumsfeld, 42, will take over the Cabinet-rank job as chief of staff after Ford selects a successor for the Brussels post. This is expected "very soon," White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen told reporters.

Haig will take command of U.S. forces in Europe Nov. 1 and become supreme commander of NATO forces Dec. 15. His continuation as Ford's top adviser, following his close association with Nixon during the pre-resignation period, had drawn stiff criticism from many quarters.

New England, without refinery, would be hurt

Sargent , Conte rap FEA oil allocation plan

WASHINGTON [AP] - Spokesmen for New England yesterday denounced as narrow and unfair a Federal Energy Administration proposal designed to equalize crude oil prices among the nation's refiners.

New England, which has no oil refinieries, would not benefit at all from the FEA plan to spread limited supplies of low cost domestic crude oil among all refiners, said Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., co-chairman of the New England Congressional Caucus.

Massachusetts Gov. Francis W. Sargent submitted a statement in which he argued that the FEA proposal actually would result in slightly higher fuel prices for New England.

"Once again, we get the short end of the stick," Sargent said in his statement during the first day of public hearings on the proposal. He asserted that New England consumers already have been forced to absorb a disproportionate share of the rise in world oil prices. Sargent's statement was read by John Verani, Massachusetts Secretary of Consumer Affairs.

Both Conte and Sargent urged the FEA to adopt an alternate proposal designed to equalize the prices of oil products by using a complicated "ticket system" to distribute low cost domestic crude to refiners and petroleum importers alike.

In New England, where 90 per cent of the residual oil used by industry and utilities is imported at world market prices, this could save electric consumers as much as $200 million a year and lower petroleum product prices by 15 per cent, Conte argued.

Conte's remarks were greeted with obvious skepticism by oil industry representatives who almost unanimously called for a speedy end to all price and allocation controls on oil. However, Conte and Sargent were backed by the testimony of Thomas J. Galligan, Jr., president of Boston Edison Co., and Richard Whiting of the New England Fuel Institute.

Whiting called the FEA proposal "clearly inadequate" while Galligan said it "ignores entirely" the problem affecting those regions of the country that are heavily dependent on foreign oil.

The plan backed by the New England officials is also an FEA proposal offered only as an alternative to the principal allocation cheme.

In a prepared opening statement, FEA head John C. Sawhill said the proposed allocation plan was designed to eliminate the wide range in prices refiners new pay for their supplies of crude oil.

The price differences are due to the two-tier pricing system results in widely fluctuating prices charged for gasoline and other petroleum products, depending on the amount of high-priced foreign oil used.

The proposal favored by FEA would attempt to solve this problem by allocating every refiner an equal supply of the low cost domestic crude.

That would be fine for areas served by refineries, Conte and Sargent argued, but would do nothing for New England which is forced to rely heavily on imported oil because no refiners are located in the region.

Sirica schedules hearing on Nixon tapes accuracy

WASHINGTON [UPI] — U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica, apparently bowing to defense demands, yesterday ordered a hearing on the accuracy of transcripts made from White House tapes by the prosecution for use at the Watergate coverup trial.

After a 2½ hour meeting with lawyers, Sirica, scheduled a hearing for Monday, just one day before the trial begins. He said he would decide at that hearing whether the transcripts can be used at the trial at all.

At least one of the six defendants has objected strenuouuly to letting the jury read transcripts as they hear the tapes played in court, contending it would place "prejudicial emphasis" on the taped conversations.

The hearing was expected to be open and to be wrapped up in one day - although there was a long-shot chance it could drag on for days, thus forcing a further delay in the trial that defendants have been unable to win even on appeal to the Supreme Court.

Six former aides to President Richard M. Nixon face trial on charge§ of conspiring to hush up the bugging scandal. The trial is expected to last at least three months, although several lawyers involved think it could run well into next year.

"We'll be lucky to be out by St. Patrick's Day," sighed one defense attorney after the meeting with Sirica.

Still unresolved is the question of Nixon's health and the impact it may have on the trial, for which he has been subpoenaed to appear both as a prosecution and defense witness. He also has been named an unindicted co-conspirator in the plot.

Consumer protection bill dies in Senate

WASHINGTON [UPI] - After four futile attempts to crack a filibuster, supporters of legislation to create a consumer protection agency gave up yesterday.

The primary sponsors of the bill notified Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield they were unable to round up the votes needed to end the filibuster. Mansfield promptly shelved the legislation for the remainder of the session.

The fourth attempt to end the filibuster failed Friday by two votes and Mansfield indicated to the bill's sponsors he would schedule an unprecedented fifth try if they could get the needed votes.

But a three-day effort to change the outcome failed.

Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., said, "We all agree that the establishment of a consumer protection agency should be the first order of business next year.

"I am confident that next year will bring a new complexion to the Senate and with it a new sense of purpose toward protecting the consumer."

Fighting erupts at Hyde Park High

BOSTON [UPI] - Fourteen arrests and three injuries were reported yesterday as racial fights at Hyde Park High School and demonstration and classroom boycotts in Charlestown and West Roxbury disrupted the ninth day of a court ordered Boston school integration program.

Fighting broke out at racially troubled Hyde Park High School at midmorning and police were called in to keep order. Two white students were injured and two arrests were made, officials said.

In the city's Charlestown section, about 1,000 persons participated in anti - busing demonstrations throughout the day and school were virtually empty as students boycotted classes to protest the desegregation plan which calls for busing of 18,235 students.

Only 442 of 2,777 students assigned to Charlestown's high school, junior high school and four elementary schools showed up for classes, the School Department said, for an attendance rate of less than 16 per cent.

Charlestown is not immediately, affected by the busing order, but was expected to be included in additional desegregation programs to be announced in January or next September by U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity.

Rocky defends Attica

WASHINGTON [AP] - Nelson A. Rockefeller yesterday defended his role in the Attica prison revolt and in lobbying top Republicans for a Navy aircraft contract.

He also said former President Richard M. Nixon's acceptance of a pardon was the equivalent of an admission of guilt.

The subjects shifted rapidly but no major opposition developed to Rockefeller's vice presidential nomination in his second day of testimony before the Senate Rules and Administration Committee.

Privacy bill passed

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The House Government Operations Committee unanimously approved yesterday a bill to give private citizens protection against the government's computer information banks.

By a 32-0 vote, the committee sent to the floor a bill which would allow a person under certain conditions to find out what information about his personal affairs is stored in the computers

The citizen would be able to get copies of the information, correct it where erroneous, and sue the government if the information is misused or abused.

Sponsors of the measure said it would protect citizens against damage to their job chances or credit and insurance ratings.

Foundation troubled

NEW YORK [UPI] - Trustees of the Ford Foundation met here last night and today to consider budget cuts of as high as 50 per cent - and possible dissolution of the foundation itself - because of declining investment revenues.

"It's true they've got this drastic budget cuts on their agenda," said Richard Magat, director of the foundation's office of reports.

Dissolution "is another option before them," he said. "But I wouldn't attempt to guess what they'll do. It's still a very early stage in the decision-making process."

Connecticut CLU hits dum dum bullets use

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] - The Connecticut Civil Liberties Union (CCLU) says it will test the constitutionality of the use by state police of .357 Magnum pistols with dum dum ammunition. The CCLU charged they inflict "cruel and unusual punishment."

CCLU Executive Director William Olds said the civil rights organization voted Monday night to take the issue Court of Common Pleas next month.

It would be the first such suit in the nation against the growing number of police agencies reportedly switching to the high velocity pistol with bullets banned in international warfare, Olds said.

The dum dum bullet flattens on impact with flesh, ripping and tearing as it zigzags through the body.

Gov. Thomas J. Meskill has defended their use recently, saying "Those who would rather use lollipops on gunmen will have to go elsewhere."

Whale slaughter: brutal, bloody and unnecessary

By JERRY MCCALLUM

Sonar has just picked up a whale. The Japanese sonarman radios the Captain who in turn notifies the Captain who in turn notifies the search helicopter to be dispatched. The location of the whale is given to the pilot who sets off to track it down. Like tugboats accompanying a liner, eleven small whale catchers hug the mother factory ship Omaka as she cuts through the choppy North Pacific. These catchers are awaiting news from the helicopter. They soon receive it. A large sperm whale has been sighted 5 miles north of the factory ship. A catcher is dispatched to hunt the whale down. These high speed boats reach the whale in no time. A crewman runs up to the bow to man the explosive tipped harpoon gun with telescopic lens attached.

The whale, meanwhile has sensed danger and begins to dive deeper. It soon tires of this for she is no match for the high speed catcher. The catcher closes in as the harpooner takes aim. He must hit her just behind the eye to give her a quick humane death. He shoots, hitting her about five yards behind the spout. The delayed reaction explosive tip fails to go off, as it does on occasion. The whale struggles hauling the catcher along with her. After four and one-half hours of towing a 90 foot catcher (engines full speed astern) at five knots the whale dies in a pool of its own blood. This is comparable to throwing a spear into a horse and forcing the horse to tow a UMass bus for several miles until it collapsed and died. Whale hunting is a cruel business. Yet this description of a typical whale hunt happens somewhere around the world every 12 minutes. Every 12 minutes a whale is killed. Several species such as the blue whale and the sperm whale are on the verge of extinction. During the past 50 years roughly 2 million whales have been killed.

Whaling today is not romantic as in the days of Moby Dick. It amounts to no more than a military operation with factory ships, airplanes, helicopters, sonar, high speed catchers, and explosive tipped harpoon guns. The whale has little chance of escaping its death once sighted.

Who hunts whales today? With the exception of the small fleets of Europe, natives of the Argoes Islands in the Pacific, the Azores, Eskimoes in Alaska who hunt pilot whales for food; Japan and Russia are the only nations which have large whaling fleets. It is rumored that Russia, because of economic problems with its fleet will cease whaling in three years. Japan, however is unrelentless and defends its whaling on the basis of Japans need for food and traditional dependence on whales for a source of protein. If this is true, why are thousands of pounds of whale meat exported to Great Britain for use in dog and cat food. Conservation organizations such as the Friends of the Earth and the Sierra Club researched and found that every product made from whale could easily be replaced by synthetic goods.

Whaling is a small industry representing only $150 million. Yet this small industry is driving the largest mammals who inhabit this planet to extinction. Conservation groups organized a boycott of Japanese goods but this is'nt working because Japanese products are so proliferous and common in America. Public Opinion is one of the answers. This could sway Japan to cease if it were intense enough. What can you do? Take two minutes and write a letter to the Prime Minister of Japan, Mr. Tanaka, c-o Soviet Embassy, Washington D.C. and relate to them of your concern for whales and also the fact that you won't purchase their products until whaling ceases. If we allow such an important creature to become extinct, then what is the future of our own "so-called" intelligent species?

Correction on campus bank

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Campus Center Board of Governors, I would like to clarify several points made in an article on the proposed on-campus bank which appeared in the Tuesday, September 24 Collegian.

First of all, I would like to point out that the article is neither accurate nor up-to-date. It refers to a memo about the bank written by a man when he was no longer connected with the operations of the Campus Center. The former student who was quoted has not been connected with the Campus Center for several years.

The facts are as follows:

1. The proposal for a bank is now at an advanced stage. The cause for delay is bureaucratic inertia in Whitmore and in the State and Federal approval systems.
2. The problem of security has been considered and will not necessitate major renovations or risk to students.
3. Any and all renovations will ultimately be the financial responsibility of the bank which rents the facility.

Let me emphasize the major point behind the proposal for a full-service bank. The bank would provide a broad range of services to students and the University community while saving the student owned Campus Center as much as $50,000 annually. The Campus Center Board of Governors, the student board that runs the Campus Center, has guided the development of this proposal and will continue to see to it that the interests of the student body prevail in its implementation.

A copy of the latest revised Bank Proposal will be available in the Board of Governors' office.

Inexperienced need not volunteer

To the Editor:

There are those who say that no one cares enough, no one is willing to give the time and effort that is needed to work with people who need help, especially if the work is non-paying. I'm talking about volunteer work, the kind of work that places like Outreach are supposed to recruit for. Well, I'm not one of those who think volunteer work is a waste of time or an inconvenience. I am deeply interested in doing counseling, working with people who need someone to talk to, to listen to. Yeah, volunteer work ... nice work, IF you can get it.

You go down to the Outreach office and look in their placement manuals, and talk to the kind and helpful people there. You leave with several names and places to contact about work. You feel like you're finally getting somewhere. Boy, were you wrong. Every place you go, they hand you the same damn line: "I'm sorry, but it's against our policy to use volunteers with no prior experience in counseling. I'm afraid we haven't the facilities necessary to train you." I will grant you, some places may be initiating new programs. They may not know what they want. But I do. And I don't want another deal like Westfield. I went down with the desire to really try to help these kids in whatever way I could. But all we did was play cards, bring candy and break up the boredom and monotony of their day. I don't want to do the same thing at Northampton and Belchertown. But don't get me wrong, I am not putting down these programs. I think they do a lot to help. It's just not what I'm looking for.

But it doesn't really matter what you want or need. All that matters is experience. You've got to have it to be hired. But my friends, you can't get it if no one will hire you. They don't seem to understand that. So, next time you hear someone say that no one cares enough to do volunteer work, set them straight. Caring isn't enough, willingness isn't enough. You gotta be experienced. Maybe if I have a nervous breakdown, and go into therapy, maybe then I'll be experienced enough to help someone else.

Free food

To the Editor:

Taking the entire UMass campus into consideration, where do you think the most beautiful area is? Where can you be by yourself and get into your own thoughts? Well, if your answer is the parking garage don't finish reading this article. But, if you find that the UMass orchard behind Orchard Hill is the place to be; whether it's because of the fantastic surroundings, the delicious fruit trees or both, then please read on.

The orchard contains a wealth of fruit such as plums, pears, berries, apples and peaches. This orchard is yours and let us tell you, it could be the best thing we, as students have. Unfortunately it is on its way to hell. For example; the limbs on the peach trees are partially broken off, the plum and pear trees are producing fruit so small you need a magnifying glass and so hard you need a sledgehammer! There are approximately one hundred apple trees in the orchard and I wish you good luck in finding a fungus free-bug free apple.

The first major step to save our orchard would be to prune all the trees. The simple act of pruning would help stop limbs from breaking off and would help produce larger and healthier fruit. Money is always the first item considered, but pruning should not cost very much. Remember, we do have a forestry department on campus! What a research project for a student, what a lesson for a group of students, what a way to bring our orchard into a healthier state!!

We feel that it is a crime to have that beautiful orchard right in our reach and then to watch it slowly, painfully die when it is unnecessary.

You know, it won't be long before entering freshmen ask the question, "How did Orchard Hill get its name"?

Heal thyself

To the Editor:

Upon reading Fred Weiss' article, Butter, not guns, I found many of my own beliefs explicated. For instance, I am one who shares the belief that the United States should stop sticking its nose into foreign peoples business, especially if they resent it. Time and time again the U.S. has tried to "help" nations by force or whatever, and it has failed in many cases. In many instances the only thanks we got were ridicule and hateful resentment. So I say the hell with them. Lets help only those who ask for it. Lets make the U.S. a strong nation internally. As Weiss declared, we must be strong to cope with Russia. The thought of becoming friends with Russia is pure heresy, I believe, especially with Nixon out of office. Take a look at anyone who previously tried to do it before. Russia is a spider's web, and a very sticky one at that.

Outside of China, the U.S. is the only main threat to Russia, and we must stay that way to ever hope for world peace. So lets get our nation back in the left lane, and pass away our recent failures. As an Econ senior and a first time writer to the Collegian, I hope to see more people coming out of their collective shells to express their opinion, as I have just done. The time is now.

Pleasing or poisoning?

"Oh, how lucky you are! You're not on the meal ticket. You can eat what you want when you want it!"

I realize that there are numerous advantages to not owning a meal ticket, but there are also times when I seriously consider giving away my hot plate, Teflon pan, and Ajax for dishes. One of these times is when I'm balancing my groceries at the end of University Drive and I don't get picked up hitching. As I knock my slipping bread back into the bag with my nose, I entertain myself with images of limitless orange juice, egg salad plates, fried chicken and other culinary delights that just sit there for the taking. But then my dreamy dining commons dissipates into the reality of lines, endless starch and that strange, almost psychedelic ham. (Where do those colors come from, anyway?)

Has everyone on campus had dinner guests? I assume that most of us have. This can be a feat requiring great manual dexterity and imagination. First, I must get a pan large enough. Does anybody on this floor have a large pan? No, so I'll improvise. I cook half the sauce in one pan on one hot plate and the other half in another. All is well in the beginning until the heartbreaking smell of burning food comes to my nostrils. The frying pan is fine, but the quart-size sauce pan obviously is not. I take my only other pan and put as much of the rescued remnants into it as will fit. What a waste of good food, but there really isn't anything I can do with the half cooked pintful of sauce.

All is well for a while. My pan is clean once again and ready to be put back into service for the spaghetti. With some juggling of pans on the available burners, I miraculously finish cooking. It is with a sigh of relief that I serve my guests on my bed which doubles as a dining room set.

Eating is probably the easiest part of not having a meal ticket. It is true that if I'm starved at midnight, I can make myself tomato soup or whatever my little heart desires. Chances are, it will be the simplest sustenance possible, as I don't have the gadgets necessary to prepare anything moderately complex. Usually, I'll have a banana.

The worst part about living on campus has got to be the bathrooms on weekends. Balancing the dishes on my left arm, I survey the sinks. The first one is partially full of macaroni which will probably lie there until a janitor fishes it out Monday morning. The next two are full of soaking dishes. I greet my next door neighbor who is washing her face and begin to wash down the toothpaste that spots the remaining sink. After a generous scrubbing, I proceed to wash my dishes.

If I wasn't a senior, I'd apply to Butterfield which feeds people with food that is rumored to be edible. Perhaps more floors could install kitchens in storage rooms as one SW tower did, but I've been warned that this will probably go down as the first and last experiment of its kind. I have a two remaining alternatives to tide me over the next time the sinks really get to me -- I'll either go home for the weekend, or out to MacDonalds.

Sleeping through the seventies

By REID FISHMAN

There's a peculiar culture at UMass these days. It involves disillusionment and contentment, change and lack of change, dreams and experience. It belongs to those that came to college at the end of an era and others that come in search of that era. It can be seen on the faces at campuses across the nation and can be heard through the echoing of those who cry, "It's just not like it used to be.", and those who walk around campus in disbelieving solitude.

Most of those enveloped in this syndrome began their college experience in a tumultuous age of revolution and mistrust of despotic authority. Now they find themselves misplaced in a world that was raised on "Marcus Welby" and "the Mod Squad" - a world that's already forgotten the lessons of Chicago and Kent State and has begun searching for "happy days" - for the fifties, when everything was taken care of for you and nobody worried too much about the problems of ecology and overpopulation, or attempted to help minority efforts around the world.

But there are others involved in this culture, and for them, the problem is much greater for it concerns the tail of a comet - those who looked at UMass from childhood as the land of parties - a dream world where everybody let loose from the oppressive bonds of high school and peer pressure. These are the most discontent members of the culture and will probably end up either leaving UMass of converting to the new culture.

The culture of the sixties is dead. The culture of the seventies has arrived at UMass with much less excitement than most of its predecessors would have believed possible. The new culture is advanced by those who were children during the sixties revolution and heard their parents screaming about those "dirty radicals" who were "throwing bombs and burning buildings". The members of this culture didn't have to come to college to get their first taste of the best drugs, and sex has been real to them for some time. They don't understand it when old UMies revere in the memory of Pierpont and the days of the trip.

On the other hand, The relics of the sixties culture don't understand this need for uninvolvement and they don't realize that the new culture has attained its lessons from those days. It has taken those lessons, swallowed them, digested them, and shut them out, only to develop itself into is own culture - a culture of intimacy and personal caring.

It almost seems like a generation gap of only a few years, but the gap is there in politics, music and general day to day activities.

It almost seems like a generation gap of only a few years, but the gap is there in politics, music, and general day to day activities. Each cullural generation must develop itself from those before it, and the new culture that has arisen seems almost like a rejection of the shortcomings of rebellion and disregard for society. If that rejection continues, then the remnants of the sixties will soon be forced to abandon their ways or suffer the wrath of society, either from those before them, who scorned the mood of the sixties, or from those after them who reject that mood. In such event, the sixties culture will all but disappear from the world, its memory to be recorded through the writings, compositions and graphics of those who were instrumental to that culture.

"How many roads must a man walk down before they call him a man? How many seas must a white dove sail before she sleeps in the sand? How many times must the cannonballs fly before they're forever banned? The answer, my friend, is blowin' in the wind. The answer is blowin' in the wind."

STRIKING OUT ON ANOTHER ISSUE

Cry from the convent

By BARBARA HOFFMAN

Unmarried, unrushed, and under twenty-one — I was earmarked for Dormitory Living. Orientation found me slackjawed at the five prospects, all of which failed to tempt me. Though I had logged enough time in and out of camp bunks to deny any claim to being fastidious, the cellular, pastel-with-a-vengeance units I glimpsed were not the places I would willingly spend eight months in and eighty dollars a month on.

Dutifully, I attended slideshows, asked informed-looking people pointed question, and ventured (though somewhat timidly) into a Southwest high rise lobby. For several days I toyed with the idea of living directly across from the pond, high up in a Sylvan-seeming tower, but further exploration proved my Dream Dorm to be none other then the library. Sylvan, my future roommate declared, was off in the woods somewhere (she had never been able to locate it during her orientation), no doubt the site of the countless rapes and mutilations UMass chalked up annually. But wasn't Southwest..? Yes, an Upperclassperson confided gratuitously, Southwest did boast a high crime rate, but then, what could one expect while living in the fifth densest area in the world. And Orchard Hill: once you hiked all the way up there...As she filled in the lurid details I re-erased the numbers from my Housing Preference card and blindly scrawled a huge ONE next to Central. Two years later, I am still at a loss as to what logic prompted me to do this.

Supposedly we are all creatures of habit, and habit is what I attribute my prolonged stay in Van Meter to habit, and a streak of masochism. What other forces could prompt me to remain in an all-girl dorm referred to as "the Nunnery"? Why do I subject myself to the lusty male cries that echo from Chadbourne each night, promising some great debauche for all two hundred of us Nuns? Why does my having a "good day" hinge upon whether or not I catch the Orchard Hill bus? And why do I volunteer to flip one hundred forty four pancakes some Sunday mornings to feed the multitude of fellow female slit-eyed sufferers?!

Even my mother doesn't understand me.

And as I read about the twenty-odd unfortunates who must stay in the Campus hotel due to filled dormitories — those students who might right now be flipping the dials on their color TV or trudging that short, carpeted distance to their private bath — I cry inwardly.

"Punish me too, OSCAR!!"

The bargain of a lifetime

By DIANE UNGER

"She is twenty three and still all alone. I don't know what we're going to do." — The words of an Indian mother about her unmarried daughter in a sector of India with relatively few males. For them it's the only way of life. Without marriage, it's death.

Is UMieland any different? Man certainly hasn't come up with any new ways of creating life: Man-Woman is still the best buy around. But must we come down to that same ignoble frenzy!? Are these four years comparable to the thirty seconds at the end of every game show when one must frantically decide what one truly wants, and if not available, grab whatever is presented during the limited time?

"You have one more semester, Ms. Imupset. Would you rather have what's behind Herter Hall. what's inside the garage, or what's in Room 609 of the Campus Hotel?"

"Or would you rather keep what you've got (mealticket and all) and wait until the Big Deal?" (Big deal...)

"The Hotel! The Hotel! I'll take the Hotel!!!" The M.C. turns momentarily to a short-sleeved man backstage, shrugging his shoulders at him. "I'm sorry, Miss," he continues, "We seem to have made a mistake. Our surprise in the Campus Hotel was given away last semester in the 'I-Like-A-D.C.-Lady' campaign. If you want, you can still have either of the first two deals or else you can now opt for what's beneath the pinball machine."

"I'll take it!! I'll take it!!"

"Or would you rather trade it all away, books and bodies, for our Big Deal?

"How big is it??"

"All I can tell you is that it's floating in the Campus Pond."

At this point of finality, and only at this point, does the contestant-student ever falter. The girl weakly stammered, "I-I'm not sure."

"Our time is up. I'll have to tell you that our Big Deal of the semester was an Inflatable Man, courtesy of the Rowing Team of Dickher & Dickher of Beverly—"

"I'l join!! I'll join!!"

"I'm sorry, Miss, but rules exclude females from the team. Although I'm sure you could probably work out some sort of an exchange with the boys—"

"For Christ's Sakes, who has the time for all the boys!? I'm in a hurry! Just gift wrap the inflatable one and I'll take him home with me — he should be good for at least a couple of years..."

Efficiency has tradeoffs

Technological growth may not be democratic

By FRANK OLBRIS
Special Correspondent

The ecological principle that diversity results in efficiency and stability seems to have an analogous social effect in highly complex societies. When a social-technological issue is influenced by only one interest, that interest is "efficient" in benefitting itself, but the social system may be harmed because other effected segments of society don't modify the "payoff" to decrease the costs to themselves.

For example, when General Motors bought up and destroyed mass transit systems in the 30's, 40's, and 50's (see Environmental Action magazine for March 16, 1974), General Motors benefitted greatly by increasing the demands for cars, but American society started paying enormous and long range costs, in increased fuel consumption, air pollution, and urban sprawl.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Recently, however, the degree of technical sophistication required to analyse public policy questions has increased substantially. The Liquid Metal Fast Breeder Reactor (LMFBR) system of power generation is being pushed by the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) and the nuclear equipment manufacturers, who stand to make a bundle if such programs are adopted.

But who speaks for the public? If the advocates of the LMFBR largely control the technical workers in the nuclear engineering fields -- where else but the AEC and the equipment manufacturers would someone specialized in those fields find employment--, how is any independent analysis to be done?

When questions of the long term effects of stable biological poisons used by agriculture to control pests were raised some years ago, the existance of conservation groups and of life scientists employed in other areas provided sufficiently diversified groups of alternate interests and expertise to mount a real challange to chemical companies' interpretation and pressures concerning the uses of the chemicals.

It wasn't easy and required developing public concern and knowledge, then through that, political pressure to offset the chemical companies' control over many legislators and governmental agencies. This it started to provide a more critical review of previously unquestioned assumptions.

The Supersonic Transport (SST) fight was another illustration of the beneficial aspects of a diversity of well organized interests in our social system. The aircraft manufacturers and the Nixon administration supressed adverse economic analysis of the program and dismissed potential environmental harm.

It was the environmental organizations and the Federation of American Scientists who drew on technical and scientific expertise not beholden to the proponents to expose the bad aspects of the program to the public and to Congress there by sparing vast social investments in a wasteful and unneeded transportation system.

Currently, the Army Corp of Engineers' pork barrel projects such as dam building, stream channelization, diking, etc. still retain sufficient political payoffs to continue, even though their purpose of decreasing flood damage costs is actually having the opposite effect. Losses have increased substantially since the 1930's when the Corp became heavily involved in flood prevention. Citizen's groups are becomming more informed of the systomic biological and social harm such beneficial-looking projects have.

As the general public becomes more informed and as more scientific and economic analysis is done by independent experts to prove the harm such policies produce, a more realistic and intellegent public policy may emerge. This is a long range problem and will take time in order to dislodge entrenched political and economic interests -- but it will eventually happen if citizen groups can get the facts exposed.

The lessons to be learned from these and many more examples are simple but require public involvement.

There is a great danger in an advanced technological society, which allows those interests (military, industrial, governmental) able to fund advanced technological research to use the results of the knowledge for their own benefit without accomidation of the effects on other segments of society or restraint in their use if effects are sufficiently harmful.

Certain elements seem to be necessary to prevent narrow interests being served at the expense of others or of the general public interest.

Primarily, an active and informed citizenry is necessary to counter political pressures of special interests in forming public policy. Secondly, citizens need to support independent, private organizations to carry on the necessarily more sophisticated analysis, to provide continuity of pressure on public policy questions, and in turn to spread knowledge about such issues to the general public.

As college students and graduates, we are the best equipped segments of the population to become involved in such technological public policy decisions. Therefore, we should develop lifetime habits that keep us continually informed of public policy developments and remain active in organizations that deal with such issues.

On campus, we can start the habit of citizenship by joining groups such as MassPIRG and Environmental Action (formerly CEQ) which become involved in public policy questions which have substantial technical aspect.

PIN BALL

Mark Parisi

Gottlieb's ROYAL GUARD

You've been playing pinball for the past six hours. You've fed ten dollars worth of quarters into "King Kool" without winning one game. Practice makes perfect, though, and you're on the verge of winning your first game. There's one ball to go, and you need a scant 25 points. You shoot, miss all the bumpers, and the ball goes sailing through that little space that the flippers don't reach. You walk away in disgust; after totally destroying the machine.

Sound familiar? Despite episodes like this one, the mind-occupying game of pinball is probably the most popular non-alcholic pastime of the male UMie. Anytime you go into the Bluewall or Hampden Dining Commons, there'll be lines of people waiting for the chance to play El Toro, Red Max, or Skyrocket. Those quarters and dimes put into the machines add up to big money. Arthur Strohl, of the Campus Center administration, explains "The machines originally come from the manufacturers such as Gottlieb, Williams, Bally, and a few others. They are sold to an independant vendor. Ralph Lackey, from Boston, supplies the Campus Center and Southwest with their machines. He has an agreement with the University so that he pays 76 percent of the revenue from the machines to us, and he keeps 24 percent.

"If anyone thinks the vendor is getting ripped off, he is mistaken. We get from 43 to 45 thousand dollars per year on pinball," Strohl stated. This means that the vendor makes approximately 12 thousand dollars per year on UMass alone.

Strohl said that UMass' share of the revenue is used to offset Campus Center overall operating deficits and the C.C. fee debts.

The incentive to play pinball is the replay. It's simple. Score a certain number of points, or knock down a number of targets, and you get an extra game. Many people complain when they see the replay score constantly increasing. The reason for this, says Strohl, is "the vendor must have some way of maximizing his profit." The UMass machines give the player a better break, though, because they all offer free games, unlike in New York State, where they only offer one or two extra balls.

This year, a new experiment will be tried with the machines. They will be rotated every month, with the poor sellers being replaced by different machines. Some machines have also been moved to the Student Union near the main entrance to the Hatch.

There has been a lot of controversy as to what the best machines are. Bud Wilkes, the Retail Services Manager for the Campus Center Complex, says the three biggest sellers on campus are, "King Kool," "Outer Space," and "Lawman." "Some of the machines are seasonal, like "Home Run," and "Grand Slam", which are extremely popular in the spring. We try to keep the most popular machines in good condition, despite almost constant use."

A new type of machine is the computer machine, such as the Ping Pong and Air Hockey. Last spring, the Campus Center purchased an air hockey game for $1500.00. Since then, people have been spending an average of $200 per week on it.

The ping pong game, despite being a quarter a game, is also extremely popular. If anyone remembers, that game used to be where the machines are in the Campus Center, but the machine was stolen intact one night, so the new one was put in the Bluewall.

"If anyone is interested," said Wilkes, "They can try to get pinball in their town. Simply make a request to the Campus Center, prove they have sufficient security and the potential to support it, and machines can be put in any dorm."

Pinball addiction can strike anyone. Steve Gardner, of Grayson House, is a regular at the Campus Center machines. Before coming to UMass from his home in Vermont, he had never even seen a pinball machine. Until the beginning of last year he was not even a regular player. But last year he caught the sickness.

"Ever since the beginning of last year, I've been playing every day. Now, on a good day, I can play for a couple of hours on a quarter." He says, though, success doesn't come easily. It takes lots of time, dedication, and money to become a good player."

The best way for a beginner to start is to find a machine that gets stuck on the last ball, so that the last ball keeps repeating. That way you get a lot of free practice.

Use the tilt to your advantage. If the penalty is only the loss of one ball, and you have matches the last few number of your score, tilt the machine so the score will stay the same and you will get the replay.

Giving the machine a good bang sometimes helps, too. Don't overdo it, though. One night a guy got mad at the machine, so he lifted it up by the end, and flipped it over backwards.

The following is a general list of the ten most easiest games to play. A smart beginner should start on the easiest games, and work their way up.

The list, easiest to hardest, is Red Max, El Toro, Outer Space, King Kool, Skyrocket, Flying Carpet, 2001, Grand Slam, Spanish Eyes, and Spin a Card.

UMass may lead nation in polymer research

By BOB PAQUETTE
Staff Reporter

Any student who has had even a small amount of chemistry can tell you what a polymer is

It's a long molecular structure which has led to the discovery of plastics, rubber and synthetic fibers, such as dacron and orlon. What they may not know is that UMass is probably the largest school in the country in terms of polymer research.

Just a couple of years ago, the Polymer Science and Engineering Dept. offices were located in the annex outside of Draper Hall. Now they are on the seventh floor of the Graduate Research Tower.

The department receives the majority of its funding in the form of grants from the federal government. The National Science Foundation, for example, provides a Material Research Laboratory grant of $235,000. In addition to the federal grants, the department also receives support from sixteen private industries, totaling over $55,000. Altogether, the department received $944,000 for research this year.

The department consists of 12 faculty members, about 50 graduate students and 40 postdoctoral researchers, who come to study from all over the world. Each student is involved with a particular research topic that he or she studies along with the assistance of one of the faculty. Dr. Frank E. Karasz, for example, assists students on such topics as Transitions in Polypeptides or Transport in Polyurethanes.

While most of the courses offered in the department are offered only on the graduate level, there are some courses available to undergraduate seniors (those listed in the 500 series).

This past summer, six members of the class of '75 worked for the departmentc each receiving $1,000 scholarships for their services. The department also helps in providing excellent job opportunities when students complete their graduate level courses. Virtually all of the students receive about six offers.

Deerfield Tory was Minuteman

Professor A. R. Riggs of McGill University in Montreal, Canada, and Amelia F. Miller of Deerfield, authors and historians, have recently uncovered a startling fact about one of Deerfield's leading "Tory" families.

Jonathan Ashley, Jr. (1739-1787) son and namesake of Deerfield's stern minister, the Reverend Jonathan Ashley, and nephew of Isreal Williams of Hatfield one of the so-called "River Gods" of the Connecticut Valley, was himself a prominent lawyer and former member of the General Court of Colonial Massachusetts. Although until now considered a firm Loyalist, as were others of the family, Riggs and Miller have evidence to show that Jonathan Ashley, Jr., marched from Deerfield in the ranks of the Minutemen at the Lexington alarm on April 20, 1775.

According to George Sheldon, nineteenth century historian of Deerfield, War Deparoment service record§ do not include the name of Jonathan Ashley, Jr. Riggs and Miller have found a Deerfield Town Committee report listing those who served 1775-1779. Ashley's name appears first on the list of Deerfield men who marched to Lexington.

Weed and snail diet shows severity of food shortage

Editors Note: President Ford appealed at the United Nations last week on the world food situation. The situation in the Indian village of Siuli Bari illustrates the urgency of his plea.

SIULI BARI VILLAGE, India |AP| — Adary Mal hunched low to prepare the main course for her family's only meal of the day.

It was a wad of weeds.

Beside her squatted one of her six children rummaging through a handful of snails hunted in the fields to give the family protein.

"I am eating these things every day," said Dukhu Mal, gesturing at his wife's weeds. "What else can I eat? I have no choice. Look at my skin. Look at my bones."

His stomach puckered around the navel and his voice was a weak whine as he told how hunger has taken over this village of 150 families about 170 miles northwest of Calcutta.

Hunger, the centuries old enemy of India, also has attacked thousands of similar villages in West Bengal, Gujarat, Orissa, Bihar, Rajasthan and Maharashtra states.

Despite official expectations that hunger can be beaten, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi is reported to be sounding out the United States, Russia and Western Europe for emergency food aid to contain the crisis.

President Ford told the United Nations last Wednesday that Washington would cooperate with a proposed worldwide system of stockpiling food for emergencies, and that the United States would increase food aid to needy nations to relieve hunger in the world.

But the news in Siuli Bari remained the silent drama of landless laborers picking the weeks in front of their mud and thatch hovels to fill the distended bellies of their hungry children.

About 40 per cent of the two million people in this district belong to landless families like the Mals. Their traditional lean period between spring planting and fall harvesting usually is filled out by farmers willing to loan rice against promises of work in the harvest.

But this year rice prices have doubled to more than 60 cents for 2.2 pounds in Bankura distriet, and the farmers have sold their stocks to traders for cash. There's nothing left for the local hungry.

Government shops selling at subsidized prices have cut their ration to 10½ ounces a week a person and are unable to supply even that because of depleted supplies.

Reports of starvation deaths appear regularly in Calcutta newspapers. The Communist party leader in West Bengal State, Promode Das Gupta, charged this week that 500 persons have perished from hunger over the last several months.

Fraternities, Sororities regain popularity on nation's campuses

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Boola boola is back on campus.

The fraternities and sororities that were casualties of the political and social activism of the 1960's are springing back to life, revived by a combination of nostalgia, changing student attitudes, less rigid rules and a desire to save money on living expenses.

"It's no longer passe to be a joiner," said a spokesman at the University of Denver.

An Associated Press survey showed the resurgence generally was greatest in the West and Midwest. Only a few Eastern colleges reported little new interest in Greek-letter organizations.

Students at several schools also noted that the new fraternities and sororities are not affiliated with national organizations which, in the past, set rigid rules for membership acceptance.

Anne Hawley, assistant dean of students at the University of California at Berkeley, a center of activism in the 1960's, said 250 girls were pledged to sororities so far this year and the rush hasn't really begun yet. Last year, there were 222 pledges and in 1970 there were only 99.

"We've brought back five fraternities in the last two years and one sorority is in the midst of recolonizing now," Mrs. Hawley said. "They're really on the upswing.

"The students in the late '60's were very much alienated by social injustices. The attitude was very much 'do your own thing.' Students of the '70's openly express a sense of belonging."

The Greek-letter organizations at the University of Wisconsin in Madison were almost wiped out in the late '60's and early '70's. "There's a very definite resurgence of interest," said Lynne DAvis, the chairman of the Collegiate Panhellenic Association rush committee. "It's still a far, far cry from those years of long ago when a girl felt her life was over if she didn't make a sorority, but there certainly is a renewed interest."

Inflation was one of the reasons cited for some of the new appeal of fraternities and sororities. "Living in the house is cheaper than living in a dorm," said Gary Taylor of Arizona State University.

William Lucy, assistant dean of student activities at the University of Maineiat Orono, said every fraternity house was close to overflowing and added that one reason was money: living costs in the fraternity house are from $50 to $150 cheaper per semester than in the dormitories.

Some of the mazing and other antics that gave fraternities and sororities a bad name have vanished.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT AS CUPID? The Indiana U. Student Assembly is considering sponsorship of a computerized date-matching service, according to a story in the Indiana Daily Student.

If the IUSA approves, it will inherit a private service offered by Interpersonal Research, headed by a grad student. He offered his brainchild "because many people thought the operation is a fly-by-night enterprise. IUSA would give the program respectability," he adds.

Because IUSA will sign a "no financial risk" contract, it won't lose any money on the service.

The business manager of the dating service hopes to match 5,000 applicants, according to IUSA prexy, whose name is Flock.

Wednesday, Sept. 25

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Hitch your wagon to a star if you must — but be sure that you are capable of remaining steadfast to your ideal. Keep standards high.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take care not to attempt more than you can achieve today. This is no time to fail in the sight of others; your best bet is a sure thing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You should find it a simple matter to make new friends — if you will take the trouble to attend a public gathering. Let yourself see and be seen.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Business and/or professional contact are such that you can ill afford to ignore them at this time. What you fail to cultivate may well disintegrate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Both family and career matters require your utmost in the way of attention this morning. Take care not to confuse issues during the afternoon.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — There may be some in-fighting on the employment scene as a result of your recent success. Don't expect everyone to accept losses with grace.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A new idea in combination with a new ambition should bring you to the attention of those who can make or break your chances for advancement.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Look to your past for hints to your future — but don't make the mistake of building tomorrow entirely upon your yesterdays. Consult others in the field.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — A day filled with "green lights." You should be able to meet several goals and attain several objectives during afternoon and evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You can put recent plans into action today if you are wise enough to seek the advice of one who knows precisely what your objective is.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — This is no time for you to be sitting idly by while others make gains and reputations. Do what you can to initiate a new and better deal for yourself.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Keep yourself in readiness for that single opportunity which can carry you to the top. Take advantage of any chance to be seen in action.

Defensive end Bill Cooke a weekly YanCon all star

Amherst: The first weekend of Yankee Conference football games found New Hampshire's Mike Keough, Rhode Island's Dan Whitaker, Massachusetts' Bill Cooke and Connecticut's Russell Clarke being honored for outstanding performances in their respective games.

Keough, a junior quarterback from Hyde Park, Mass. completed 7 of 12 passes good for 147 yards and two touchdowns in his first varsity start as he led the Wildcats to a 28-0 triumph over Boston University.

Whitaker, senior fullback from Warwick, R.I. gained 138 yards rushing in 31 carries, caught 4 passes for 46 yards, and scored three touchdowns to highlight the Rhode Island offense in a wild 48-36 triumph over Northeastern.

Cooke, a 6'5 - 252 lb. defensive end who now lives in Albany, N.Y. was in on four quarterback sacks as well as five other tackles as Massachusetts upended Maine 42-0.

Clarke, sophomore fullback form New Haven, made his starting debut as a varsity player for Connecticut a memorable one as he carried for four touchdowns and 207 yards in 44 rushing attempts as the Huskies downed upset-minded Vermont by a 36-22 score in the first league games for both squads.

Ruggers fall to Norwich, 16-14

Saturday's match at Norwich proved to be one of the least friendly encounters the UMass Club has participated in of late.

Not only was an early starting time an inconvenience, but the weather which was monsoonlike did little to encourage the less than fanatic rugger.

In fact the weather, the long drive and the early kickoff all contributed to make the Norwich trip more of a chore than usual.

Nevertheless the local ruggers did engage in the scheduled match and were edged out by a 16-14 score.

Ball control and precision of execution were the order of the day, and Norwich certainly commanded in both these departments.

Though tough in play the UMass club could not keep the necessary controi of the football for long periods of time.

The rain drenched ball was impossible to pick up as it's slippery structure condemned the ball to squirt out of hands on nearly every occasion.

Norwich opened the scoring fairly early in the first period with a storybook scissors play which tallied up the first four points.

The water ladened ball hindered all future conversion attempts on the afternoon.

The significant happenings after this stage of the match were the injuries sustained by the UM ruggers. With two members of the scrum being sent off for repairs.

From there the rains and Norwich controlled the play as the home team rolled up three more trys.

Late in the game while two men short UMass fell victim to a full stacked Norwich side who employed a style of play only used by the most unpolished sort of beasts.

It's a shame that such a decent match degenerated into a petty schoolboy scrope at the end.

The B and C teams also dropped their matches by 8-5 and 7-0 scores, respectively.

The post match activities were limited to non-existant, though the opposing captain apologized pointing out it was a formal weekend for them.

So the UMass Club was left to drink their beer alone.

Next week - UNH, up there.

UMass quarterback Mark Tripucka, shown here over center Bruce Pinto in last Saturday's 42-0 rout over the Black Bears of Maine, has his work cut out for himself this coming Saturday when the Minuteman travel up to Dartmouth to do battle with the Big Green from the Ivies. Tripucka used his running and passing game to perfection vs Maine, but it won't be as easy against Dartmouth. Dartmouth is considered to be the biggest challenge thus far in the young season.

BIG NEWS -- Pitt star running back Tony Dorset prepares to turn page of notebook in this action-packed photo. The star is on the verge of all-time Pitt rushing record.

Number 3,000 for Kaline

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Al Kaline of the Detroit Tigers became the 12th player in major league history to collect 3,000 hits in a career Tuesday night when he drove a fourth inning double down the rightfield line against the Baltimore Orioles.

The game immediately was stopped, the ball retrieved and taken with the bat Kaline used to a box adjacent to the Tigers' dugout.

There it was presented to American League President Lee MacPhail, who will take them to Cooperstown, N.Y., to be added to the Hall of Fame Collection of baseball memorabilia. Bowie Kuhn, the commissioner of baseball, was not at the game.

Kaline's hit, the 139th of this, his 22nd and last season in the major leagues, came on Dave McNally's first pitch in the fourth inning with Detroit leading 1-0.

Typically, the embarrassed Kaline had to be coaxed from second base by officials and a cheering crowd of about 11,000 over to MacPhail's box. There Kaline had a deep smile of satisfaction on his face as he talked briefly with Detroit General Manager Jim Campbell.

Kaline had grounded out to short on his first trip to the plate, but his hit never was in doubt from the moment he swung.

Although Kaline became the 12th player in the Major Leagues to reach the 3,000 hit plateau, he was the first in the AL in 49 years, and also the first to do it since the establishment of the designated hitter rule in the American League last season.

All of the previous 11 had to play defense, too, just like Kaline did for the first 21 seasons of his career.

His accomplishment is as distinguished by those who didn't make it as it is by those 11 who previously made 3,000 hits.

The last to do it, before Kaline, was Roberto Clemente of the Pittsburgh Pirates, who got his 3,000th — and last — hit in the next-to-last game of the 1972 season. Clemente was killed in an Airplane Crash Dec. 31, 1972.

The last to get 3,000 in the American League was Eddie Collins, who got his 3,000th hit on June 5, 1925, and eventually finished with 3,311.

Ty Cobb is the All-Time leader with 4,191. Also over 3,000 were Stan Musial, Tris Speaker, Hank Aaron, Honus Wagner, Nap LaJoie, Willie Mays, Paul Waner and Cap Anson.

But players like Ted Williams, Babe Ruth, Rogers Hornsby, Lou Gehrig, George Sisler, Luke Appling and Frankie Frisch never made it. All of them, however — like the 11 previous members of the 3,000 hit club, except for Mays and Aaron who aren't eligible yet — are in the Hall of Fame.

Kaline has not played a single inning in the field this season. Some say this detracts from his accomplishment, but Kaline says, "I really don't care what people say."

"Self-centered people are the only ones who worry about what other people say about them," he said. "I knew the only way I was going to get it was if I was going to be the DH."

"I think he would have gotten it even without the rule," says Buddy Blattner, former player and now a broadcaster for the Kansas City Royals. "He would have played first base. He's a pretty good first baseman."

Are the Black Bears for real?

Every year UMass plays UMaine in "football", and every year the former invariably comes out of the contest with an inflated opinion of itself. This reporter thinks that one should not pose the question, "Is UMass for real?", (taking into account the sorry showing against Villanova last week in a 13-17, mistake ridden loss coupled with this week's 42-0 blitz of Maine "Are the Maine Black Bears for real?"

There are, of course, two schools of thought toward the answer of this question; the Negative School and the Affirmative School.

The Negative School believes that UMaine is not for real in the strictest sense of the words. It states that the Black Bears can be likened to good samaritans; when any other team, large or small, is either having a rough season or is in the midst of a losing streak, Maine can always be counted upon to turn their butts toward the sky for a good swift kick.

commentary

The Affirmative School states that UMaine is, in fact for real and every year it takes the field in full possesion of its faculties, trying to win the ballgame. I find this difficult to believe. Our friends from up North have been being kind to us since 1909 when this series was initiated. In 21 games, Maine has only four victories and one tie (obviously mistakes) to show for their efforts. As a matter of fact, they go out of their way to be kind; in five years they haven't dented the UMie defense for a single touchdown and the year before these generosities they were gracious enough to only score one TD in a 49-7 good-samaritanism.

"A fluke", you say, "UMaine will shortly right itself and then we'll be in for long seasons without a break."

This reporter can't buy the above opinion. Possibly, if the Black Bears were only courteous in football, this explanation might be acceptable. Let us not forget, however, another sport in which our northern comrades eased our grief. After a season of heartbreaking losses in basketball, (one point to both Providence College and Boston College) Maine once again "turned the other cheek" and let the Minutemen boot them to the tune of 108-38...on Senior Day, yet.

For all this and more, UMaine, we give you our heartfelt thanks.

By MDC STAFF

UMass and Bryant College were tied for the top spot with 397 strokes apiece. The tie was decided on each team's sixth highest score. An 81 by Rick Olson of UMass proved decisive since the sixth highest score for Bryant was an 89.

John Lasek and Dave Grochmal paced the UMass linksters with a pair of 78's. Howard Terban and John Moriarity chipped in with a pair of 80's. Tom Toski Jr. shot 81 along with Olson.

Twelve colleges with 84 players teed off in the tournament sponsored by the golfing Toski family. Tom Toski is the pro at Hickory Ridge.

The order of finish after UMass and Bryant was Central Conn, 3rd, 398; UConn and Rhode Island tied for fourth at 400; Salem State, sixth, 401 Boston College, 7th, 402; with Williams, Amherst, Springfield and Vermont far back in the field.

Castro likes ABC; exchanges gifts

NEW YORK [UPI] — If you turned on ABC Wide World of Sports last Saturday, you may have been stunned to see Cuba's bearded Premier Fidel Castro chatting with American Sportscaster Keith Jackson in Havana.

"I never thought it would happen," said Keith Jackson of ABC-Sports, who just returned from the World Amateur Boxing Championships in Cuba. "You can't schedule him to appear for anything. He might pop up in a garage or in a sugar field or anywhere."

Jackson said Castro was at Ringside and after the fights started to leave when the head of the Cuban Television Network motioned the Premier toward ABC cameras.

"He just started talking and our cameras went on," said Jackson, who gave Castro an ABC-Sports banner and received a Cuban cigar in return.

"It was a Montecristo Special," Jackson said. "For my money it's the best in the world."

Jackson said that during the brief interview that Castro, who used an interpreter, seemed an "affable" man "but deadly intense."

"We realized that we weren't getting any place with our guides or monitors, and we decided to present the Premier with the uniform and some books on baseball. If he came over to us while we were in Cuba, we would just start talking to him and have the cameras ready."

Jackson, who last visited Cuba in 1950, was pleased by what he saw of the new Cuba.

"The people are better off now than when they were in 1950," he said. "At that time only two per cent of the population controlled the country and the other 98 per cent were left in poverty. The streets are now clean; people are not drunk in the street, and kids are not trying to sell their sisters."

However, Jackson said that there are still many problems in the Communist country. "They don't have any faculties for getting fresh fruit into Havana from Oriente Province. There is no such thing as a clothing store in Havana. There is just a place where you get clean clothes, and as a capitalist, if there was anything that I wanted to have in Cuba, it would be the paint concession. Everything needs a paint job."

Jackson said the Cuban officials he met all talked warmly about re-establishing diplomatic relations between Washington and Havana, and from the information he received, Jackson said he expected President Ford to do this after the November elections.

Booters kick BC in opener

By BEN CASWELL

CHESTNUT HILL — Boston's chilly weather led to some very cold play of the UMass Soccer Minutemen in the first half, but they really warmed up in the second half (although the weather didn't) and went on to shutout the Boston College Eagles last night, 4-0.

The first half was actually more than cold for UMass, it was freezing. The only score of the half came early when forward Bob McChesney made a nice drop pass to Bill Belcher who fired it past the Boston College goaltender. UMass play in this half was fairly sloppy as was the play of the Eagles. Coach Al Rufe commented that, "we were losing the ball in the first half on some strange bounces." This was related to the fact that the game was being played on Astroturf and many of the UMass players took some time to get used to it.

The Minutemen got some fine defensive play from their fullbacks in the first half. Dan Ouellette, Dean Lungu, and Gary McKenna looked especially strong against the relatively weak offense of the Eagles. Goaltender Marc Hanks was not tested severely too many times but he had a few good saves of a rare BC flurry of shots out in front near the end of the half.

On offense in the first half UMass looked very sloppy. Their passing was off and they were not controlling the play. As Coach Rufe said, "In the first half B.C. was playing a kick and run type of game and we were trying to play that type with them. That is not our game and it showed."

When the second half began the UMass passing game was at its best. Early in the half two different UMass players nearly connected for goals only to have their shots go off the crossbar. Bob McChesney actually did put the ball in the net but it was called back on an offside infraction.

Tony King started off UMass' second half scoring taking a long lead pass and putting a nice corner shot up high that made the score 2-0. The next few minutes of play were wide open with several UMass scoring chances being called back on offside calls. Then out of virtually nowhere Mohammed Othman drove in a shot from about thirty yards out that eluded the busy B.C. netminder. Othman's shot was a fine cross corner kick that went up high on the strings and really sewed up the game for UMass.

The final Minuteman goal was definitely the play of the game. Forward Bob Stanley took a short pass from Othman and did some great ball-handling as he danced laterally around three B.C. defenders stopped at the edge of the goal area, faked back and then fired a waist high shot into the net to finish the scoring.

Later co-captain Jim Vollinger was robbed on a hard shot that the B.C. goalie made his best save of the night on. This goalie was called for walking infraction on the play, however, and Vollinger got a free kick from a poor angle and the shot was easily stopped.

"The second half was the way we like to play," said Coach Rufe and it was that kind of play, that led the Minutemen to an unimpressive but nonetheless very important and convincing opening game win.

QUICK SHOTS — Next game is against UMaine at Orono on Saturday. Maine was second in the Yankee's YanCon last year and beat UMass 1-0. First home game is a week from today against Keene State.

Sox sweep Yanks, 4-0, 4-2; fans erupt in repeated brawls

NEW YORK [UPI] — Luis Tiant and Roger Moret each pitched complete games Tuesday night when the Boston Red Sox swept a doubleheader from New York, 4-0 and 4-2, to drop the Yankees into second place in the American League Eastern Division Race.

The two losses, before an unruly paid crowd of 43,438, left the Yankees one-half game behind the Baltimore Orioles, who won their game with the Detroit Tigers.

A dozen or so fights, including three major ones, broke out during the second game and the umpires warned the crowd several times to stop throwing objects onto the field.

Two fans were dragged by special police out of the stadium via the playing field in scenes that were reminiscent but never approached the violence of the crowd problems experienced last October during the New York Mets-Cincinnati Reds playoff series.

The Red Sox scored their first two runs in the fifth inning of the nightcap to take a 2-1 lead on singles by Mario Guerrero and Juan Beniquez, a walk, and an infield out by Carl Yastrzemski. They added the runs which turned out to be their margin of victory against loser Larry Gura in the seventh on a walk, Jim Rice's double, an infield out and a passed ball by Thurman Munson. Bobby Murcer drove in both Yankee runs in the second game as Moret squared his season's record at 9-9.

In the opener, Tiant yielded six hits for his seventh shutout and 21st victory of the season with the help of a two-run triple by Yastrzemski in the third inning.

Orioles squeeze 5-4 win

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Andy Etchebarren's squeeze bunt in the eighth inning scored Brooks Robinson from third base with the winning run and overshadowed Al Kaline's 3,000th career hit Tuesday night when the Baltimore Orioles rallied for a 5-4 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Trailing 4-3 against reliever John Hiller, Don Baylor doubled with one out and scored on Robinson's double to right field for a 4-4 tie. Robinson dashed to third base on Hiller's wild pitch and scored when Etchebarren bunted safely down the first base line.

Kaline's two-bagger down the right field line leading off the fourth inning made the Tigers' designated hitter the 12th man in baseball history to obtain the 3,000 hit milestone.

Oriole reliever Bob Reynolds, 7-5, gained the victory after replacing starter Dave McNally in the seventh inning when Tiger shortstop Eddie Brinkman's two-run homer produced the 4-3 edge.

Brinkman walked and scored on Ron Leflore's two out double for a 1-0 lead in the third inning.

Tiger pitcher Vern Ruhle was the victim of Leflore's outfield error during a two-run Oriole fifth inning. Mark Belanger and Rich Coggins singled with two outs and scored when center fielder Leflore dropped Paul Blair's fly ball.

Seven days in sport

Sox expire, Pats on fire

Starting today and continuing for every Wednesday throughout the semester, "Seven Days in Sport" will be a regular feature on these pages. Steve Saraceno will provide a summary of the previous week in the world of sports.

By STEVE SARACENO
Sports Staff

Well, the Great Overlap is upon us. 'Tis the time when the average sports fan is driven bughouse trying to keep up with the avalanche of sports info. Ask Joe Fan to repeat last night's big story and he'll mumble something about Dewey Evans catching a game-winning 31-yard TD pass from Gilles Gilbert to lead the Celtics to their first preseason victory.

Things need clarification...thus, this column...

The big stories of the last week...The Sox settled comfortably into their coffin, losing two-out-of -three to both Detroit and Baltimore...The Patriots won over the Hackensack Orphans (Giants) and in so doing gained sole possession of first... The Minutemen gained over 300 yards rushing in a 42-0 whomping of the Black (or is it Teddy) Bears of Maine...and it was Upset City, USA, for many of college football's Top Twenty...

For details to these stories and other bombshells, read on...

BASEBALL-- The Red Sox had a 2-4 week, to make it 20 losses in their last 29 ballgames. However, they did manage to beat Baltimore Saturday in a rain-plagued 6 hour and 48-minute classic that the Globe's Peter Gammons tabbed "The Ultimate Bill Lee Game". After Moonman had gone the route (ten innings), Lee beamed, "I had fun. I feel great. I loved it". What a crater...

The Orioles moved to within one game of the Yanks as they swept 'em in a three game series...The Cardinals clung to the top of the N.L. East with some grand larceny from Lou Brock...The Reds fell to four-and-a-half behind the Dodgers as they went 2-5...and amazing Fergie Jenkins won No. 24 for astonishing Texas, which with a minor miracle or two could give Oakland a run for the title...

...and finally, Dick Allen called it quits. "He's still a child", said his manager, Chuck Tanner.. But, boy, that kid could hit...

FOOTBALL--The Patriots had 28 passes completed against them by Norm Snead (jeez!, but still topped the Giants, 28-20. The Pats are now the only undefeated team in the AFC (!)...

...For the second straight week, the Monday night game contained a dilly of a finish, as the Eagles nipped the Cowboys on a Tom Dempsey 46-yard boot with 25 seconds left...

The Minutemen mangled Maine as John Ramboli, Rich Jessamy and Keith Lang did nice things to their rushing averages and bad things to Main tacklers. It was the MacPherson-Men's fifth straight blanking of the Black Bears...

...In other college football...it was supposed to be a "blowout" weekend for the Top Twenty, meaning that most ranked teams were to romp. Instead, the biggies got knocked off left and right. A few cases in point: LSU (No. 6), Arkansas (9), Nebraska (4), Penn State (7, lost to Navy, no less), and UCLA (11, which lost to Iowa, a team that didn't win any games last year)...

CAMPUS MISCELLANEOUS--The Soccer team beat twelfth-ranked Harvard in an exhibition...and The Collegian football squad opened workouts with many talking national title...

PRO MISCELLANEOUS--The "Courageous" successful defending of the America's Cup over the Australian defender Double Cross (something like that) set off riots of joy in nearly every American city..The Russians stalemated Team Canada--one, win, one loss, two ties...

The Bruins tied Philadelphia (remember them?) and were shutout by Montreal (some fellow named Dryden is making a comeback for that team)... and the Celtics opened training camp at Mass Maritime, thus touching off a spat of rather inane photos of "Captain" John Havlicek at the helm of a training ship pointing out icebergs to his "mates"...

LOVEJOY ACQUITTED

Wins verdict on technicality

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
Collegian
VOLUME CII, ISSUE 16 AMHERST, MA. THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1974

By DAVE GREENSLIT
Staff Reporter

GREENFIELD — Sam Lovejoy's Superior Court trial ended abruptly yesterday afternoon when Judge Kent B. Smith ruled that the state had failed to prove an essential element of the indictment and ordered the jury to return a direct verdict of not guilty.

Lovejoy was charged with willful and malicious destruction of personal property in the Feb. 22 toppling of a 500-foot meterological tower on the Montague Plains, site of Northeast Utilities' proposed $1.52 billion nuclear power plant.

reaction below;

news analysis,

see p. 10

Referring to personal property as "a big hole in the indictment," Smith said that the evidence presented had established the tower as real estate. He became convinced, he said, when a member of the Montague board of assessors testified that the property was assessed and taxed as realty.

Smith conceded that the statutes concerning property were "archaic," but said that the board of assessors is a "subdivision of the Commonwealth" and, in light of their decision, he could not "in good conscience" send the case to the jury.

Before Smith made his ruling, both Lovejoy and Assistant D.A. John Murphy ironically joined forced to argue against the directed verdict, a motion which Lovejoy had filed earlier in the trial.

Murphy, of course, wanted to win the case, and argued that "tax purposes are not conclusive as a matter of law."

Lovejoy, who wanted the jury to determine whether his act was justified given the danger of nuclear power, said that "Franklin County would not be best served by (the Court's) ruling on a technicality."

Trustees receive budget

By JUDY FRIEDLAND and SUSAN STUEBING
Staff Reporters

The Board of Trustees will receive an $80.8 million budget for UMass-Amherst for the fiscal year 1976 at their meeting next Wednesday.

This figure, which comes from their Budgets Committee who met Tuesday, eliminates the creation of new faculty positions and increased student admission for next year. The basic thrust of the budget, according to Warren Gulko, Budget Director, is to meet the rising cost of inflation and to increase the University support staff.

This amount is $13.6 million more than the operating budget for fiscal '75. Of this increase, $10 million is required to keep up with the rising cost of living.

Gulko emphasized that the budget request is very realistic and follows a "fairly conservative" policy on inflation.

"We calculated the budget while assuming that the current rate of inflation will not continue," he said.

The budget request allocates $700,000 to the creation of 78 new support staff positions. Gulko explained that there is a "critical need" for support personnel, which are clerical and technical workers, due to the University's rapid growth within the past 15 years.

Callahan considers Lovejoy retrial

By a Staff Reporter

Hampshire and Franklin County District Attorney John M. Callahan is "thinking about" retrying Samuel H. Lovejoy, 27 for his toppling of a weather tower taking AEC-required date for nuclear power plant proposed site in Montague.

Lovejoy was acquitted yesterday by a Greenfield Judge in a directed verdict on a charge of malicious destruction of personal property in connection with the destruction of the Northeast Utilities tower last spring.

Retrial "is something that will have to be considered", Callahan said, adding, "it's something I'm looking into."

Callahan said Massachusetts law which distinguish personal from real property are "very antiquated" and he wants to file legislation correcting them.

Asst. District Attorney John A. Murphy, who tried Lovejoy, said he "was extremely disappointed" at the acquittal. "He's the judge and he makes the rulings," Murphy said of trial Judge Kent B. Smith.

The owner of the 500-foot weather tower that was collecting AEC-required data for a proposed $1.3 billion reactor power plant in Montague had no comment after the acquittal.

Student rent board instituted

By JIM PAULIN
Staff Reporter

A board which will represent the student body in matters concerning dormitory services, rents and the food services is being established according to Matt Burns, a member of the Rents and Fees Committee of the student senate.

Called the Residential Life Joint Policy Board, it will be subordinate to the Rents and Fees Committee and will meet with the Office of Residential Life, the office in charge of all matters relating to residential areas.

The proposed Board will consist of 21 members; two from each residential area including the Greeks and The commuters (which includes married student housing); three from the undergraduate senate; two from the graduate senate; one person representing student dining commons employees; and a person representing students employed in the dormitories. The parties involved (Student Senate, residential area governments, Greeks, commuters) are meeting now and are ironing out policies so an agreeable constitution can be ratified.

The Food Services Governing board will be incorporated into the board. "We're going to take all those who know about the Food Services and shift them to the Residential Life board where they will serve on a food service committee" Burns said.

Burns says the constitution probably would not be voted upon until the middle of October. "It has to deal with so many diverse groups that its hard to set up". He also went on to say "it's not the kind of thing you can make up and run off in one day".

After the constitution is ratified, the board will still have to await the unanimous approval of all parties involved, according to Burns. When and if the board is established, it will have an enormous task in effectively representing the domestic opinions of the thousands of students affected by decisions made by the Office of Residential Life.

The Board will work with Ken Dean, director of the office of residential life.

"We're trying to establish one full line of communication from the students and one full line from the staff," he said.

20% of faculty consult with corporations

By SANDY CARLIN
Staff Reporter

Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Robert C. Gluckstern estimates that between 10 and 20 per cent of the faculty here are involved in consulting with private corporations. Gluckstern says faculty members are able to contribute new ideas to the University by consulting and doing research with private corporations.

The UMass faculty consulting policy has recently surfaced in the hiring controversey of professor Gideon Ariel.

The consulting policy of UMass entitled, "Policy On Compensation For Certain Additional Services" says it is the responsibility of every university to promote and encourage the search for new truth and knowledge for the benefit. of mankind..."-whereas the university is recognized for scholarly and creative work of its faculty."

Even though such a policy exists, many faculty members have recently expressed the view that they would not participate in consulting because they think it's unethical.

The University Policy does have certain restrictions which say, "The first duty and first loyalty of a member of the faculty is to the university" who "is under obligation to render to the University the most effective service of which he is capable."

The policy also demands that faculty members do not undertake such consultations if they can't give their best efforts to the University.

Another stipulation in the policy is that faculty members report their participation in consulting to their Department Head. Since UMass holds classes six days a week, the policy limits the time for consultation and research by the faculty to the equivalent of one day a week.

Along with consulting, the policy also states that faculty members may endorse commercial products providing that the University's name is not used in the endorsement.

"It would be absolute mockery of the law," Smith told Lovejoy, "to tell the jury to disregard this big hole in the indictment." He reminded the defendant that he faced five years in prison and said, "This is not the classrooms of Amherst, Mr. Lovejoy, this is life itself."

"I know that your honor," replied Lovejoy, "that's why I'm here."

Before calling for the jury, Smith said to Lovejoy, "If I release you, you're not being released on a technicality...You're being released on the law."

The jury then returned and Smith told them that it is "the Commonwealth's burden to prove beyond a reasonable doubt each essential element of the indictment" because "liberty and life are so precious." He said that the state had not proved the property involved to be personal, adding that it was not Murphy's fault.

He told the jury that had the case gone to them, they would not have debated the "pros and cons of nuclear power" during deliberations. Smith also said that just as national security was not justification for breaking the law in the Ellsberg break-in, "the facts (nuclear danger) do not establish justification in this case."

"The law doesn't know how to handle justification," he continued, "neither do people in the free world."

Finally, at 3:00 p.m. Smith said to the jury, "I'm acting on my conscience" in ordering the jury to return a verdict of "not guilty by direction of the court."

Before leaving the room, he said to Lovejoy, "Before you do it again, Mr. Lovejoy, think of the Constitution that both you and I love."

Outside the court room after the decision, Lovejoy said that he had "a good case to present to the jury," but he appeared satisfied with Smith's ruling.

Samuel Lovejoy

A juror then came up to congratulate him, and Lovejoy said to him, "Sorry I put you all through such a hassle."

"You handled it very well," said the juror as he turned to leave, "just don't do it again."

Need some credits? SVS has the answer

E.B. BRODY
Staff Reporter

Still need a course to fulfill your requirements this semester?

Student Volunteer Services (SVS) is offering a number of courses and work collectives through the various residential areas, a number of which are still open.

SVS, a student initiated and supported program for "social action and radical social change", has been offering "collectives, colloquia and courses for credit and placements in over 125 community projects," since its development and subsequent inauguration last July.

Through both credit and non-credit student volunteer experiences, SVS hopes to benefit and provide enriching experiences for various local communities, as well as the students involved.

In addition to information available in their booklet, the SVS personnel said some of their plans for the future, including a film-lecture on Thursday night at Orchard Hill: "Defenses of Profit as a Revolutionary Tool for Social Change." The speaker will be Mr. John Hammar, President of Work, Inc. in Holyoke. They hope to have further lectures in the future, as well as an alternative careers conference, and Global Survival work.

The following courses are still open, until this Friday.

Orchard Hill, 385A: Citizenship and Social Change
Orchard Hill 385I: Compulsory Mis-Education in America
Orchard Hill 385K: Jury Project
Orchard Hill 385J: The Caribbean Region

Wednesday brings new budget

Since 1970, according to Gulko, there has been a 27 percent increase in both student enrollment and faculty positions, a 29 percent increase in Physical Plant employees and a 57 percent increase in the maintenance area while the support staff has only grown by 10 percent.

"Last year, there were only four new secretarial positions created for the entire University," said Gulko.

Gulko hopes that the reorganization of Whitmore and the development of the Residential Life board can hold down student fees for next year.

"The Health Center Fee will definitely not be raised," he added.

The budget increase also includes $400,000 for library acquisitions, 1.3 million for maintenance and $1.5 million for program adjustment, which he describes as "shots of additional funding to various activities," such as University Without Walls, the Arts Center and Student Services.

After the Board of Trustees votes on the request, the governor will review and modify it and submit it to the State Legislature. The finalized budget will appear in June.

Security problem plagues Fine Arts Center

By MARA KLEIN
Staff Reporter

This is the second part of a two part series on the Fine Arts Building.

As with any new building, be it a house, skyscraper or, as in UMass's case, the Fine Arts Center, there are bound to be problems that need to be ironed out.

According to Frederick Steinway, the director of the building, security is the problem which concerns him the most. Because it is physically impossible to button up the building at night after the workmen have left for the day, there are many people wandering around the building late at night. Although he realizes that the students roaming through the building are just curious, they could easily get hurt, since the building isn't completed yet.

Also few lights are on in the building at night, tools are sometimes left lying around, etc., so there are many ways a curious UMie can get hurt. To date no damage has been done, other than empty beer bottles left lying around the building, but there is always that one person who'll get his kicks from being destructive, so Mr. Steinway hopes that students will wait until the building is open to the student body before exploring.

The building can't open due to a sewage ban imposed by the town of Amherst if lifted. This ban went into affect a year and a half ago, while the building was under construction, and a variance has been requested by the University. According to Mr. Littlefield, Whitmore's spokesman on the matter, the University should be granted a variance within the month.

None of the auditoriums have lighting or sound systems, and in all probability they won't be installed until the spring. This delay, as were many others is due to strikes which took place while the building was under construction.

Telephone cables are finally being installed next week. This had been delayed due to the strike that Westinghouse had recently. All of these problems frequently set back construction schedules for any large buildings.

By next October when the building opens with its gala celebration, most of the problems with the building should be remedied.

Dele Ojo charms audience

By RON CHAIT
Staff Reporter

"I believe in making people happy," said Emperor Dele-Ojo. "If the public gets the group, they like us.

Emperor Dele-Ojo and His Africana Internationals put this theory to the test last Monday night as more than 250 people crowded into the Student Union Ballroom to view some traditional African music and dance.

In a cabaret-style setting which encouraged persons to dance, the emperor and his group got most of the gathering onto the dance floor with a contagious blend of JuJu, Highlife, Chachacha, and Afro-indigenous (folk song) music.

The Emperor and the Internationals showed several examples of native cultural dance. The most unusual were a fire-eater who passed flames over his body and into his mouth, and a man who danced barefoot on bits of broken glass.

The 34-year-old Dele-Ojo said he is not an emperor by any birthright. He said he was crowned "a hero by my fans" after a war tour in 1966, and the title "has nothing to do with politics."

Dele-Ojo and His Africana Internationals have been together since the group formed in Nigeria in 1964, and have toured all over the world.

Sponsored by the UMass Arts Council, this was their first New England appearance, and crowd response tended to be favorable.

"I think they're fantastic," said Kirby Gilmore, a UMass graduate student who once lived in Africa. He added, "The guitar work is very clean."

Ajku of Springfield College called them "exciting. They're just downright 'badd'."

Others suggested the group was "really together" and "filled with infectious happiness."

A few persons complained about the tables being far from the stage, causing "too much psychological distance," Many persons complained about a lack of enough heating. Both problems were alleviated when the individuals got up to dance, however.

Emperor Dele-Ojo said, on behalf of the group, that they enjoyed their stay here, and would try to return someday.

Alliance formed against racism

By DONNA A. DIODATI
Staff Reporter

Uniting in an effort to remedy Amherst area social problems, some 20 people recently formed a local chapter of the National Alliance against Racist and Political Repression.

At the Tuesday night meeting, it was announced that political activist Angela Davis will speak at UMass Thursday, October 3. Davis is a national chairperson of the Alliance.

The Alliance, according to local organizer Bobbie Ramsay, was formed two years ago in Chicago to protect and defend those who are victims of racism and class bias. The Alliance has been politically supportive of the cases of Angela Davis, the Wounded Knee defendants, and the Raleigh, N.C. rally held July 4, Ramsay said.

Locally, the problems of racism in the media, harassment of politically active students, and the quality of UMass education, were cited by organizer Isabel Johnston as possible areas of Alliance concentration.

Louise Simmons of the Hartford chapter told the group of the work the Alliance is doing there. She said that the Amherst group might follow her chapter's lead by publishing a newsletter, contacting area clergy, and offering concrete actions for concerned citizens to take in solving social problems.

The local chapter has formed task forces to contact area governments, student organizations, faculty members, and community groups.

The appearnace of Angela Davis and an October 27 Madison Square Garden rally for Puerto Rican independence were discussed as possible ways to recruit more Alliance members.

The next Alliance meeting will be held Wednesday, October 2, at 5:00 p.m., at a place to be announced.

State, Amherst pledge funds for five-college bikepaths

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

Within a few years there will be bike paths along most of the major roads and arteries leading to other towns and the five colleges, according to Wendy Lindquist at a circulation committee meeting of the Amherst Planning Board this week.

The state has funded 2.1 million dollars for the five college bikeway system and the Town Meeting this year has appropriated $32,000 for correcting edges of roads and building ramps. Also, Federal funds are expected to help finance the system.

"The bikeway system will be built in phases and not done all at once," said Lindquist.

The proposed plan entails widening roads for bike lanes, raising sewage grates to the same height as the roads, rectifying traffic problem areas or avoiding them by establishing by-passes and installing more bike racks downtown.

There will be two basic types of bikeways: a seperate lane for high volume, high speed roads and lanes separated by a painted line. On low volume roads bikes and cars will share the same roadway.

"Not all bikeways will be asphalt some will be gravel chips or compact sand." Lindquist said.

The committee hopes to facilitate access to recreation areas and plans to build a path leading to Puffers Pond.

The increased number of cyclists and a long range planning committee report that pinpointed transportation as a problem resulted in the proposal of the bikeway system.

According to Lindquist, the highest number of bike accidents are on North Pleasant Street and the intersection of East Pleasant Street, North Pleasant Street and Triangle Street. Cyclists involved have been either under 10-years of age or between 18 and 24.

Handgun control to be debated tonight

Handgun control will be the topic of a debate to be presented tonight at 8:00 p.m. by the Amherst League of Women Voters, according to the League Public Relations Director. It will be held in the Amherst Junior High School cafeteria.

Dain Perry, Deputy Director of the Massachusetts Council on Crime and Correction, will debate Nathan Silverlieb, Director of the Pistol Division of the State Rifle and Pistol Association, and also an officer in the Gun Owners Action League. The Moderator will be Tom Bornstein, an assistant to Chancellor Bromery as well as a lawyer and labor mediator.

There is growing concern about the tremendous rise in the crime rate, and heated arguments over whether the increasing proliferation of handguns is protective, or is actually destroying us. Thus the debate should prove most lively and informative, organizers say.

Also urging attendance is "People vs. Handguns," a Mass. citizens group which advocates strict handgun controls, and is working for legislation to support that position. Already established in Boston, this group is now trying to organize in Western Mass., and desperately needs the help of citizens interested in fighting the handgun threat. More information about "People vs. Handguns" will be available at the debate.

Shepp, Roach discuss music

The Orchard Hill Residential College, in coordination with Professor Archie Shepp's "Revolutionary Concepts in African-American Music and Professor Max Roach's Percussion Workshop," will present a discussion-demonstration on Traditional West African Music with Abraham Kobina Adzinyah tonight at 7 p.m. in the gallery at New Africa House.

Adzinyah is from Ghana and studied at the Institute of African Studies at the University of Ghana. He holds the esteemed rank of Master Drummer. For the past five years, Adzinyah has been an instructor at Wesleyan University. He has lectured and performed all over the world, including the Soviet Union. In 1968, he was one of the featured performers at the Mexico City Olympics.

There is no admission fee and all interested students and faculty are invited to attend.

Case compared to Watergate tapes

Judge overturns Calley My Lai conviction

COLUMBUS, Ga. [AP] — Citing unrestrained and uncontrolled pretrial news coverage, a federal judge overturned the My Lai murder conviction of William L. Calley Jr. yesterday - and also compared Calley's difficulties in obtaining government evidence to the Watergate tapes case.

The judge ordered that Calley be set free, although his decision can be appealed by the Army.

U. S. District Court Judge J. Robert Elliott devoted 85 of the 132 pages in his opinion to demonstrating how he felt Calley's constitutional rights to a fair trial had been ruined by incessant portrayals of Calley as "a mass murderer to a ghoul" by the American press.

Elliott's opinion also contended that when the U. S. Supreme Court ordered former President Nixon to produce certain Watergate tapes, "that move decided the Calley case."

He said the high court's ruling broke the privileged barriers erected under the separation of powers doctrine.

During Calley's court-martial, Rep. F. Edward Hebert, chairman of a House subcommittee investigating My Lai, refused to furnish Calley's lawyers with transcripts by Army commanders relating to the massacre and cover-up. Hebert refused on the basis of congressional independence from the judiciary despite a request for the testimony from the presiding military judge, Col. Reid Kennedy.

"If we substitute the word 'legislative' for the word 'presidential' or 'executive' we see that the Supreme Court in deciding the Nixon case also decided the Calley case," Elliott's opinion stated.

Judge Elliott's other key contentions were that Calley was denied the right of confrontation with witnesses when the military judge refused to subpoena high-ranking Army officials and that Calley was convicted on charges and specifications "improperly drawn."

Calley, 31, was convicted 3½ years ago for the murders of 22 Vietnamese civilians at My Lai. He was sentenced to life imprisonment but that sentence was reduced by military review to 10 years.

The former Army lieutenant has been confined to the disciplinary barracks at Ft. Leavenworth, Kan., since Elliott took his appeal under advisement June 25. Before he was sent Ft. Leavenworth, Calley had been confined to quarters at Ft. Benning, Ga., since shortly after his conviction until Feb. 11 of this year when he was released on bail.

Calley has less than two months to serve before he is eligible for parole review. However, the Army was expected to appeal Elliott's ruling and could file a brief staying the release order.

Nixon's phlebitis spreads to lung

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] — Former President Nixon's phlebitis has spread from his left leg to a dime-sized blood clot in his right lung which will require extending his hospital stay, his physician said yesterday.

Dr. John Lungren said the embolism in the lung was "a potentially dangerous situation but not critical at this time."

"He has a hell of a will to live," Lungren said.

In Washington, President Ford was advised of Nixon's condition, shortly after the announcement, a White House spokesman said.

Presidential Press Secretary Ron Nessen said Dr. William Lukash, Ford's personal physician, had talked by telephone with Lungren and advised Ford.

Nixon is under court order to appear as both a prosecution and defense witness at the Watergate coverup trial set to start Oct. 1. The latest medical bulletin indicated he would not be there at least for the opening days.

Lungren revealed the complications at a special news conference at Long Beach Memorial Hospital where Nixon was admitted Monday for treatment of blood clots which had formed below and above the knee of his left leg.

The former chief executive suffered no pain from the new clot, Lungren said. He said it was a "silent embolism" which had no surface manifestation. Lungren said it was "about the size of a dime" and was discovered through use of a lung scanner.

"Naturally this means the hospital stay will be extended," Lungren said.

When Nixon entered the hospital Monday, former Presidential aide Ronald Ziegler said he would be there about a week. Lungren said Wednesday the former President probably would remain at least until the middle or end of next week.

Nixon has received two subpoenas ordering him to appear as a witness at the Watergate coverup trial of John Ehrlichman.

Agnew and Ehrlichman requested financial aid, says Rockefeller

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Vice presidential nominee Nelson A. Rockefeller disclosed yesterday that both Spiro Agnew and former White House aide John Ehrlichman sought - but were refused - financial help from him after they were forced to leave the government.

Rockefeller completed his testimony in the Senate Rules Committee hearings on his confirmation, answering questions on a broad range of subjects with obvious ease for close to three full days on the stand.

The committee still must hear from private and public witnesses and review audit reports on Rockefeller's tax returns by the Internal Revenue Service, but reportedly expects to vote on his confirmation by the end of next week or soon thereafter.

Rockefeller said that Agnew, who resigned the vice presidency last October after pleading "no contest" to tax evasion, called him seeking help "in connection with a book."

"What he was really asking for was someone to sponsor or finance advance payments for a book," Rockefeller said. Asked if he did provide Agnew with any assistance, he replied, "I did not."

Agnew later signed a contract with Playboy Press for a novel which has not yet been published.

Rockefeller said he received two letters from Ehrlichman, whose trial on conspiracy and obstruction of justice charges begins Oct. 1 in Washington. Both letters requested money for his legal defense fund, Rockefeller said, and he failed to answer either.

"From a human point of view I'm embarrassed to say I did not answer the letters," he added. "From a human point of view, these things are very sad."

Rockefeller said he never contributed any money to the Committee to Re-Elect the President, which became deeply involved in the Watergate scandal.

He also replied "No" to the question of whether funds "from you or your family were used to disrupt the 1972 Democratic National Convention?"

Under questioning on other subjects, Rockefeller refused to rule out the possibility that he might invoke executive privilege at times if he became president, and opposed wage and price controls.

California court accepts Nixon's bar resignation

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] - The California Supreme Court accepted the resignation of former President Richard M. Nixon yesterday from the California State Bar.

The resignation was accepted "without prejudice to further proceedings in any disciplinary matter pending against him before the State Bar if he again seeks to become a member thereof."

The brief order followed the recommendation of the State Bar. The bar originally had resolved to oppose acceptance of Nixon's resignation, but later reversed itself.

The former president sent a letter of resignation dated Sept. 11 to the State Bar.

The bar's board of governors adopted a resolution recommending that it be rejected because Nixon had failed to acknowledge that a disciplinary matter was pending against him.

The State Bar's usual practice is to reject resignations that fail to acknowledge disciplinary action pending.

On Sept. 16 Nixon sent a second letter to the State Bar in which he acknowledged that an investigation was in process. The following day Brant Abel, president of the board of governors, forwarded this letter to the court. He said a majority of the board had indicated over the telephone that they favored acceptance of the second letter.

Sierra Club delegate raps energy meeting

DETROIT [AP] - Major decisions on power strategies are being taken at the World Energy Conference without any input from the public which must live with the risks that go with those decisions, a Sierra Club delegate charged yesterday.

Mary Sinclair, representing the conservationist group at the week-long conference, said in an interview, "The citizen-consumer voice that has the most at risk in the questions that are being considered has no input whatsoever.

"I have tried to bring out the issues, particularly in connection with nuclear power, because there is a tremendous drive in this conference for broad proliferation of nuclear power."

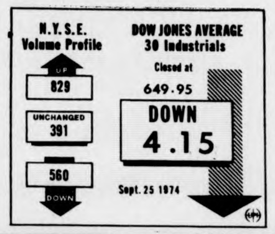
While the WEC invited other major environmental groups, she said, the $200 registration fee plus transportation, hotel and meal bills were "so high they were just priced out of these sessions."

Thus, though the terms environment and ecology are used frequently in papers and discussions here "some of the energy specialists reporting seem to regard the environment as an antagonist instead of a major energy resource and ally in supporting the biosphere," she said.

Lord Zuckerman, the conference leader who gave the opening-day address, concluded that "with the prospects of severe short-falls in energy supply before us, the aims of environmentalists interested in amenity and the conservation of nature, need urgent reassessment."

"I would say Zuckerman is the perfect spokesman for the industry point of view," Mrs. Sinclair said. "He left the impression that it's just a rather emotional, irrational and unknowledgable kind of public reaction that we're dealing with on the nuclear issues."

In act, she said, there are at least seven Nobel Prize-winning scientists who have expressed strong concern about the whole nuclear fission program especially the piling up of highly toxic plutonium 239 in waste from nuclear plants that must be isolated from the biosphere for 200,000 years.



Arab leaders seek unity during oil price debate

By United Press International

Arab foreign ministers in New York for the current United Nations General Assembly gathered yesterday to discuss how to handle President Ford's demand for lower world oil prices. In Paris, France cut oil imports by 10 per cent.

French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing ordered the cutback. A spokesman said he told a cabinet meeting France "absolutely cannot surpass" an outlay of $10.5 billion for oil next year.

This will buy 10 per cent less oil than France purchased in 1973, though the oil cost far less that year. Giscard said further cuts will be ordered if necessary.

France's foreign trade deficit will be about $6 billion this year and the French franc is eroding at a rate of 17 per cent a year. Both difficulties are largely due to the soaring cost of oil.

The Arab meeting at the United Nations was called officially to discuss strategy for the General Assembly debate on Palestine. But Arab sources said U.S. pressure for lower oil prices was the most urgent issue.

Ford called Monday for a sharp reduction in soaring world oil prices. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger echoed him in a speech the same day to the General Assembly. Ford repeated his concern yesterday.

The Arab meeting was scheduled for 5 p.m. EDT at the Arabs' U.N. delegation headquarters. So far the oil producing countries have reacted to Ford's demand with surprise, concern and indignation.

In Washington, Ford welcomed Italian President Giovanni Leone to the White House Wednesday and in the course of his greeting, said inflation and "access to fairly priced resources threaten the stability of every economy" throuughout the world.

"The very nature of these problems defies solutions by unilateral measures," Ford said.

President Carlos Andres Perez of Venezeula took a fullpage advertisement in the Wednesday New York Times for an open letter to Ford. Perez said the industrialized countries pay "outrageously low prices for our raw materials" and then sell manufactured products at "Even-higher prices."

Perez offered to work in an international forum to establish a balanced relationship in the prices of raw materials and manufactured goods.

But Manuel Egana, former Venezuelan minister of development, said oil prices have risen too rapidly and should be gradually cut back $4 from their present world average of $11.65 a barrel.

Israeli planes hit southern Lebanon

By United Press International

Israel ushered in its most solemn religious holiday of the year yesterday with a second consecutive day of air strikes against suspected Arab guerrilla targets in southern Lebanon.

The raids came hours before the start at sunset of Yom Kippur, the Jewish Day of Atonement, which also marked the first lunar calendar anniversary of the 18-day Middle East war of 1973 when the holiday fell on Oct. 6.

In a newspaper interview, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said he had detailed bargaining maps ready for the negotiating table whenever one or more Arab states agree "that the intention is to advance towards peace." An interim settlement with Syria, as well as Jordan and Egypt, was still possible, he said.

An army spokesman in Tel Aviv said all planes returned from their midday attacks on the same wooded hill country in southeast Lebanon singled out in similar strikes Tuesday near the village of Mazrat Beit Naful, 10 miles north of the border.

Israeli forces call that part of Lebanon "Fatahland," because it had frequently served as base for Arab guerrilla attacks on Israel.

"We don't intend to wait until they come across the border to kill us," the spokesman said. "This is the preventive policy we have been carrying out all along."

Newsmen in Lebanon said three spearate formations of six planes - Skyhawks and Phantoms - machine gunned wooded ravines and farmland for about 10 minutes each but reported no casualties. In Tuesday's attack, the Lebanese defense ministry reported, one civilian truck was destroyed and farms and orchards damaged.

N-bombs vulnerable

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Sen. John O. Pastore, D-R.I., warned yesterday that some nuclear weapons sites in Europe are vulnerable to terrorist attack and said it might be necessary to take the weapons out of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Pastore, vice chairman of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, said that the nuclear weapons should be removed unless NATO allies take steps to see the sites are secured.

Pastore said members of the committee have remained silent about the problem, partly "because we did not want to give the hint to any madman...."

Boston school empty

BOSTON [UPI] - The atmosphere remained tense yesterday at racially troubled Hyde Park High School and no classes were taught, but a strong presence of uniformed police inside and outside the building prevented violence from erupting.

Attendance at the school, closed last Friday due to serious racial fights and school bus stonings, was 853 out of 1,800 assigned at the start of classes and that dropped hours later when about 100 white students left the building and went home. Classrooms were empty throughout the day and there was no instruction.

Hondurans starving

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras [UPI] - Rescue officials warned yesterday that thousands of the estimated 300,000 to 350,000 people driven from their homes by Hurricane Fifi would start dying of starvation in 48 hours if help in large quantities was not forthcoming quickly.

They said first reports of starvation deaths are beginning to reach this capital.

Helicopters, planes, rescue boats, cars and trucks swarmed yesterday over flood-devastated northern Honduras with food and medicine for flood victims but officials said it was not enough.

Lebanon P.M. quits

BEIRUT [UPI] - Lebanese Premier Takieddin Solh yesterday submitted the resignation of his 15-month-old government in face of mounting criticism of his failure to combat inflation and safeguard internal security.

Guarneri String Quartet opens Chamber Music Series Tuesday

Tuesday evening, Oct. 1, the Guarneri String Quartet will open the UMass Chamber Music Series when they appear in an 8 p.m. concert in Bowker Auditorium.

Although in age they are the youngest chamber group, each one (violinists Arnold Steinhardt and John Dalley; violist Michael Tree; and cellist David Soyer) is an enormously gifted virtuoso and each has won international acclaim. To music connoisseurs the Guarneri String Quartet is the "world's master of chamber music" according to Time Magazine.

The quartet made its debut in 1965 and has since performed throughout the United States, Canada and Europe. Despite a relatively brief collaboration, the quartet displays a unique technical virtuosity, beauty of tone, musical understanding and taste. In traditional quartets, the first violinist is the unofficial leader; the Guarneri has no real chief.

The instruments used by the Guarneri Quartet are priceless. Arnold Steinhardt plays a violin made by Joseph Guarneri about 1728; John Dalley's instrument was made by Nicholas Lupot in 1819. The viola of Michael Tree was made by Dominicus Busan about 1785 and David Soyer's cello was made by Andrea Guarneri in 1669.

Mr. Steinhardt has been a winner of both the Leventritt and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Competitions and made his solo debut at the age of 14 with the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

Mr. Dalley made his concert debut at the age of 14 and toured widely throughout Europe. Prior to joining the quartet, he served on the faculty of the Oberlin Conservatory and was Artist-in-Residence at the University of Illinois.

Mr. Tree, noted both as violist and violinist, made a Carnegie Hall debut at the age of 20 and solo appearances with the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Los Angeles Orchestras and at the Spoleto Festival.

Cellist David Soyer, following a solo debut at the age of 17 with the Philadelphia Orchestra, distinguished himself in chamber music with the Bach Aria Group, the Guilet Quartet and the New String Quartet.

For the concert at Amherst Oct. 1, the group will play Quartet in C Major, Op. 59, No. 3, by Beethoven.

Tickets are now on sale at the UMass Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, and are priced at $3 and $4 for the general public, and at half-price for UMass-Amherst students.

Variety show plugs food prices

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Agriculture Department is drawing mixed reviews on a plan to send a song-and-prayer tent show across the land to convince Americans that food prices aren't all that bad.

The proposal was submitted to Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz by an aide who urged the show be put on the road quickly to counter what he called "the distorted view" consumers are getting.

Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., said Wednesday he thought the tent show idea "almost incomprehensible" and that more effort should be spent on helping farmers and reducing middleman food profits.

"Instead of 'Dr. Butz's Traveling Medicine Show' rolling through the countryside peddling verbal massage oil to the public, farmers and ranchers would like some kind of explanation as to why the department sits on its hands while they have to sell their calves for less than half the cost of production," McGovern said.

A draft of the tent show plan, obtained by The Associated Press, showed its objectives included:

—"Communicate to citizens in major metro markets the facts about today's food situation, why food is a bigger bargain here than anywhere in the world.

—"To give citizens an opportunity to ask questions and voice complaints, thus giving useful feedback to USDA.

—"To instill in the public a greater confidence in the department, to strengthen the department's credibility."

Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal, D-N.Y., said it was an "outrageous idea" and that USDA had used the line about Americans paying less for food than people in other countries for many years.

Social graffiti

By BOB FOSTER

A crucial popular art form has not kept pace with rapid social transformation. Graffiti has been consistently backward in its treatment of social issues.

Initially, one must recognize scribbling on a blank wall with pen or marker as a form of art. Oftentimes, critics consider this creative outlet to be a form of malicious mischief, the product of poor toilet-training. They label it destructive and rationalize it, crediting its existence to warped minds and tortured hands. Little do these critics realize that this form of creative pleasure dates back farther than any canvas or mural.

Graffiti-ists are easily able to document historic roots to the era of the cave. Ancient man expressed himself not in words, but in pictures upon the wall of his shelter. The pictures became so much a part of reality that they were integrated into solemn rituals similar to the ritual of the modern graffiti-ist. Oftentimes in my anthropological and psychological studies of graffiti-ists, I have witnessed cruel ceremonies of self-inflicted pain as the fervent artist attempts to scribble in the unreachable spot. The ultimate high of the dedicated graffiti-ist is the perfect picture, the perfect phrase placed in a location that no other individual can reach. Thus, do not be surprised to see an ardent artist scaling the library's edifices in search of the perfect nook for his genius.

Yes, graffiti is art. It is the art of the people. But today, the times change too fast and people cannot seem to keep pace. As with all other traditional phenomena, graffiti has also suffered a certain degree of Toffler's "future shock." Thus, those nonparticipating observers such as myself are plagued by ancient scribblings of another era. "Impeach that Dick, Impeach Tricky Dicky, and Impeachment Now" lack meaaing today. Little has been written on the walls about the nature of Gerald Ford. Instead, graffiti-ists still insist on and find pleasure in tickling the feet of a dead man.

Defenders of the art form point to its historical value, its timely expressionism. Yet, they misunderstand the value of good graffiti. One can recognize a master craftsman by the timeless nature of his sayings, his drawings. True, certain impeachment phrases should be saved for posterity. They were reflections of the times. But, graffiti must continue undaunted. Graffiti-ists must berate society at an even greater pace today. American society lacks a singular purpose, a unity of direction that is so crucial for its continued existence. Without the graffiti-ist to drag society screaming into reality, all hope is lost.

Thus, I issue the call for all graffiti-ist to drag society screaming into reality, all hope is lost.

Thus, I issue the call for all graffiti-ists, masters and amateurs alike, to update their graffiti. Do not torture the skeletons of the past, but give hell to the demagogues of the present.

Bob Foster is a Collegian commentator.

Ecological ignorance

By ERIC FLEET

The enemies of the economy, under the guise of environmentalists, have succeeded in sabotaging the progress of nuclear power plants in America. They have duped the public into a panic over the so called hazards of nuclear power. Thanks to the sustained efforts of the news media the people are in a panic over thermal pollution, radiation, and the "inevitable" holocaust which would destroy mankind with the construction of atomic reactors. These fears have been proven uncalled for time and again yet the great American propoganda machine continues to stir them up. To what purpose this war against the public welfare? In the light of the present economic outlook there can be only one explanation. The collapse of the economy, which would inevitably follow this ploy, is indeed the desired end.

By 1985 the United States will be importing over $20 billion worth of oil. With the inevitable trade deficit, the mysterious devil now destroying the dollar abroad, we would be risking a total collapse of the economy. Today the OPEC nations already have so many dollars they are buying thousands of American businesses, which is hurting us badly. The dollar would have to be devalued time and again to offset the impact on the economy. With developing nations bidding up the price of oil the U.S. would soon be unable to compete. The nation would be starving for fuel.

At the same time we cannot tap our coal reserves because of the effect which strip-mining has on the landscape. Burning of coal would also be unfeasable as it would not meet clean air standards. The most surprising aspect of coal-fired plants destroys the pretensions of environmental paranoia. Dr. Hans Albrecht Bethe, Nobel Prize winner in physics and professor at Cornell University, stated in a Forbes interview, "a coal-fired power plant releases more radioactivity into the air than a well-designed nuclear plant." More surprising, "the radioactivity (of a nuclear plant) is less than that which is in your body." What the ecologists forget is the miniscule amount of radioactive material needed for power. The success with which presently opperating plants have met bears out Dr. Bethe's testimony.

The "environmentalists", for the most part misguided, are being led by a highly educated core of elite activists. One can only wonder how they ignore the facts. The truth of the matter is that this group, of one political persuasion, desires to bring about the economic destruction herein described. They are well aware of the consequences of their actions which are, in fact, their motivation. What they could not achieve through social legislation, dissent, and violence they are now achieving in the name of ecology. Their depression harvest may not be far away.

Farm workers fight continues

To the Editor:

The farm workers of the United States are undergoing severe struggles in order to gain recognition of their rights. The main problem is that the workers do not have the right to vote for the union that they wish to have represent them. The farm growers think that the workers are much too ignorant to have this privilege, mainly because they cannot speak the English Language. By assuming the right to select the union for the workers, the growers are taking the privilege of voting from them. As of April, 1973 the farm workers are--against their will--represented by the Teamsters Union; a union whose benefits are low in quantity and quality as compared with those of the United Farm Workers Union.

The farm workers have tried to solve their problem among themselves, using walkouts and strikes as major weapons. These methods were to no avail because of the violent actions taken by the Teamsters; actions in which two workers were killed. The farm workers cannot afford to be unemployed and the United Farm Workers Strike Fund is not large enough to support all the strikers. Until a solution is reached many of the workers are forced to join the Teamsters Union.

The only alternative left to the workers was a nationwide plea to the large chain stores and the consumers; a plea to boycott! The objective is to make the growers suffer considerable drops in profits, thereby forcing them to let the workers elect the union that they wish to have represent them. Boycott committees sprang up across the nation. These committees consist of socially conscious people who persuade the large chain owners to sign commitments to sell only United Farm Worker or locally grown lettuce and grapes or none at all. If the chain signs the commitment it will be guaranteed full consumer support and recommendations from the committee members as a good place to shop; if not the committee will organize a non-violent picket in order to inform the consumers of the social injustice the store is committing, in this way trying to make the store suffer an economic loss. If enough consumers get the facts on the workers and boycott, chain stores across the nation will be forced to sign commitments. Stores that sign commitments will be checked from time to time to make sure that they do not go back on their word. If a store is found scabing [selling non-UFW produce] it will be given a deadline by which time it must take all the scab lettuce and grapes off its shelves. If the store refuses to comply with the demand it will be picketed upon at the end of the deadline.

Here at the University of Massachusetts the Juan de la Cruz Boycott Committee meets every Wednesday at 7:30 in room 901 of the Campus Center. It is a very active committee which, engages in many services, for example giving facts about the farm workers to the consumer, negotiates commitments with chain owners, organizes picket lines and runs store checks. These are just a few of the services it performs. It is committees such as this one that put New England in the number one slot of the lettuce and grape boycott across the nation.

Amnesty is dead

To the Editor:

Real amnesty is dead. It died when Gerald Ford's conscience directed the conditions by which military exiles and draft resisters were to achieve forgiveness. It died when those exiles and resisters informed the public that forgiveness was not what they wanted anyway. Finally real amnesty died when the national news media found new issues to deal with at the expense of thousands whose only crime was their unwillingness to kill. Why then should we try to revive a dead issue?

We must primarily attempt to explain why conditional amnesty was offered to people who said beforehand they would not accept. It has been suggested that Mr. Ford was trying to sooth opposition to his pardon of President Nixon. Perhaps Mr. Ford does not want to jeopardize his political future by an offer of unconditional amnesty. Another possible argument concludes the government may wish to embark on other military adventures for reasons as obscure as Vietnam and an unconditional amnesty would encourage more draft resistance and desertions in such an event.

But most important of all we have to justify 55,000 American deaths. We are told by responsible people that unconditional amnesty would make a mockery of those who fought and died in Vietnam. We are also told that one American died for each draft dodger and deserter.

It is about time that the People realize that those 55,000 deaths as well as thousands of Vietnamese, Laotian, and Cambodian deaths were a mockery of basic American principals, specifically Freedom Of Choice and Democracy.

Are we really supposed to believe that those dead had the freedom to choose life over death or that Democracy exists in Vietnam?

Until we, as a nation, can admit we were wrong in Vietnam, then we cannot expect an attitude conducive to unconditional amnesty for all those injured as a result of the Vietnam War. If we do not resolve this issue once and for all, we may someday be faced with the dilemma of supporting another immoral war or being incarcerated for refusing to kill. We are all casualties.

Ping-pong

To the Editor:

There is an outragious imbalance on campus! One can listen to ones favorite music piece in dynamic stereo, enjoy a daily newspaper for free, ride all around campus and Amherst for free; and then suddenly is "forced" to pay for the use of a teeny ping pong ball and low upkeep paddle and table.

This most basic recreational outlet is clearly overlooked by the "priority makers" of this dynamic college.

Toilet paper, matches, water and air, are free for the most part because they are inexpensive. Dinner mints, toothpicks, and most rest rooms are free because relatively they are inexpensive and good.

Ping pong is inexpensive, and not only good but virtuous, to a student who wishes cheap satisfying recreation in such a game.

I don't know if the student body is raving over the game, but let it be free and already its more desirable. If someone could enlighten me on how to achieve free ping pong, or even share my feelings, I would be pleased in hearing from them.

Great threads - empty heads

"Some people know how to dress right and some people know how to live right."
Dean Tucker

It was the war. And Nixon. But always the war. It was an attitude that was more open and less materialistic. It was doing everything in jeans because owning too many clothes was bad for the environment and because clothes created bogus, artificial barriers anyway. It was UMass. It was only three years ago.

I went to a party last weekend, and all the signs of the change were there. You had to be here in different times to see the change, but if you were one of that minority the differences stood out like a lighthouse in the fog. The people were all dressed up, the talk was of either the self centered issue of who was taking what course so that they could get into grad school or it was useless inanity. The air of competition, the upper hand, and other forms of dominance were back. The beverage was warm Genessee beer. My friend, who coined the quote at the top of this column that night, was wearing jeans - and drinking champagne from a bottle.

There are some similarities, but they are only superficial. Sure, they're still smoking pot in Amherst, but the reason is for the pure, hedonistic abandon that comes with letting your hair down after a long week in pursuit of the new Holy Grail called future security. Education is still the vehicle, but only to that one narrow end and to hell with the rest of the world.

But the change goes even further beyond the obvious, which for all its visual impact merely constitutes symptoms of the disease. Simply stated, the disease is a bad case of everyone being into themselves to the exclusion of almost everything else.

The not so obvious signs of the malady are just below the surface for everyone to see, but again a person would have to have seen different days to notice it. Political consciousness, fading fast even when today's seniors entered UMass, is dead, a victim of the greed that turns people back to a concern that is solely for their own affairs. After all, how can we give a damn about starving people when there's an antifreeze shortage? People's struggles for freedom and dignity around the world have once again taken a back seat to that job that will pay twelve thousand five a year when we all get out of grad school with our masters degree in business.

This larger lack of consciousness has given rise to circumstances here that are indicative of the trend. Students are once again conforming to the academic system that has placed their futures in the hands of people who are for the most part arrogant, incompetent, and insensitive to what should be the real role in education in the future of the world. They, too subscribe to the get what you can while you can philosophy that the haves of the world were so able to flaunt when wealth and power were inextricably part of our system.

What they don't realize, both student and teacher, is that the preconditions on which our past arrogance was based on crumbling. The real crunch is going to arrive soon, and it's going to make waiting in a gas line look like a day in the park. That twelve thousand five job is going to turn to ashes, and the only logical recourse for a person who has devoted his life to that goal will be to rise up in anger and make war on those people who have not only taken away his anti-freeze but are threatening his life. And it won't be a new scenario, even though the results will be far more tragic. And it will still be called imperialism.

It used to be that people of our generation would laugh at what we considered our parent's irrational fears for us when they'd ask "What's this younger generation coming to?" After all, we were going to really try to be the first people to recognize everyone's dignity and try to live in harmony with the world around us. But that's all out the window now, and the race to apocalypse is breaking all speed records.

So I guess I really shouldn't have been surprised when I heard a colleague of mine say "What's the younger generation coming to?" the other day. It's a statement which symbolized a kind of baseless fear that I laughed at in the past, but if it's true that the generations are changing every three years instead of every twenty, then that leaves people in the 20-26 year old age group in a kind of limbo while their elders and juniors hasten the day when we'll all live in misery or maybe not live at all.

You know, it's kind of a shame. We really had a good thing going.

Ziegler on the move

Ron Ziegler as we all know is in California attending to the needs of former President Richard Nixon. No one knows how long Ziegler will maintain the job because Congress is debating the amount of money Nixon is to be allowed for transformation from public to private life.

Ziegler has been job hunting. He was most recently seen in Disneyland where he has interviewed for a job. Ziegler got his start at Disneyland and later transferred his skills to the White House, a similar organization.

Ziegler's interview was related by a reliable source to me the same day it took place:

Interviewer: "Mr. Ziegler, I see that you worked before. What did you do?"

Ziegler: "I was a Public Relations man for the amusement park."

Interviewer: "And I see also that you left our happy family to work in Washington, D.C."

Ziegler: "Yessir, that's right."

Interviewer: And I see also that the company you worked for folded."

Ziegler: Yessir, that's right."

Interviewer: "What did you do at the White House?"

Ziegler: "I distributed news packages to reporters every day."

Interviewer: "That's interesting, we don't have any openings in that field here now, how are you at g Bratworst subs, we have an opening in Germantown for a Bratwurst sub man."

Ziegler: "Not too good, but I make a mean Orange Julius."

Interviewer: Orange Julius, let me see, we just hired a guy named Connaly to make Orange Julius; he used to work with milk men, so we had to give him the job."

Ziegler: "Yessir."

Interviewer: "I see that you put on a show each day with your news packages, is that right."

Ziegler: "Yessir, I did that, I did it so well that once my boss gave me a rousing slap on the back in public."

Interviewer: "I see, maybe we have something for you after all Ziegler. What size pants do you wear?"

Ziegler: "Thirty-six/thirty."

Interviewer: "And shirt?"

Ziegler: "Sixteen, thirty-three."

Interviewer: "Wait here Ziegler while I make a phone call."

Ziegler: "Yessir."

The phone was dialed and a connection made. The interviewer asked for central costuming. Finally...

Interviewer: "This is tiltawhirl in personnel, do you have a Goofy costume in a thirty-six/thirty pant and sixteen/thirty-three shirt? you do? Excellent." Ziegler you're all set. You are going to be a guide for children in Fantasyland. All you have to do is answer questions of little kids ... tell them anything you want. They'll believe you.

Ziegler: "Oh, good, just like when I worked in Washington. They believed anything too."

Would you buy an Orange Julius from this man?

TEDDY LEAVING THE RACE ?

Commercial con

By DUDLEY C. PHILLIPS IV

Most people watch television which is corporately owned. All corporately owned television is supported by sponsors who make their funds by the sales of products, services, etc.; This is only one side of the situation.

The shows we watch on commercially-owned T.V. are, in a loaded way, statistically popular. The people on these television 'majorities' are compulsive or habitual watchers who have been indoctrinated by the networks. I am sure they feel as though they are 'choosing' when they select from the alternatives the networks offer them and intimidated by their own statistics.

The criticism is not new. The same criticism has been leveled at networks for manipulating the publics' values for financial gain and sales promotion, syndicated news reporting, and bias of editorial.

We watch what the people who pay for commercials want us to watch and have calculated as being popular. These same people support their position with statistics gained from addicted spectators. This indoctrination and seeming 'proof' is further reinforced by advertising psychology and marketing (market research) techniques.

We have become accustomed to having entertainment decisions made for us. We are now being asked, very subtly, to give up even that decision, and 'take in stride' whatever comes.

The Noxema Shave Cream commercial helped me understand. If you are walking in the woods and have a desire to smell something fresh, an attractive woman dressed in Sax's best will come out from behind a tree and suggest Noxema (and that isn't all). She puts foam in her hand.

The scene is the guy in a shaven state, the same girl, and remembrance of how Noxema brought them 'closer' together and made a 'smoother' relationship.

It may be that what we need is senuous artificiality, but not with Noxema manufacturers and marketers doing the arrangements.

I would rather let Crest become a family discussion or Pepsi (Pepsico) a national song writer; than let Noxema, Salem Cigarettes, or Winchester plan my outings, make my dates, or choose my entertainment.

It is important to understand the advertising-marketing motives. These firms (people) must make money by showing sales increase for their clients. One of the directions this can take is the directives that "Where the market is not, a market must be made."

The commercial network solicits advertisers to use the television as an advertising medium and supports its programs by the monies these advertisers pour in. If a show does not produce a greater market of spenders,(the television watches), it must be removed.

The Noxemas, Fords, Toyotas, Banks, and politico campaigners will not stand alone. There are many who participate in this advertising and control game. The cigarette and cigar advertisers are clearly malicious.

If warm summer days, visions of green, and water sounds, spent with a beautiful woman or man in a romantic setting, means cigarettes; my sympathies are out to those who think so. They need friendship and direction, not advertising con.

All the commercials I mentioned have increased sales. Principles or humane directions are not rewarded in advertising or manufacturing; marketing effect gets rewarded.

The first thing a non-controlled person can do is be defensively aware of the 'advertising art' and remember the motive of this 'art' is predetermined: The keys to a psyche are the keys to your pocket.

The commercial television watcher is the desired marketing effect at this time — "Gotcha, Public!"

Lovejoy innocent

Eugene B. Sturgeon, a Northeast Utilities spokesman at the Hartford-based utility said there would be "no comment." Other spokesmen said the same.

But Charles Bragg, another Northeast spokesman, told the Greenfield Recorder the utility would seek "no recourse through civil action."

Reaction to the acquittal from environmentalists and nuclear power objectors focused on Judge Smith's directed verdict.

Johnathan Souweine, director of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group at Amherst said the trial "failed to satisfy anyone's needs."

"But I think the trial has served at least one major purpose," Souweine said. "The amount of useful information provided the citizens of western Massachusetts about the monumental dangers of nuclear power was extensive."

Portia Weiskel, a resident of Leverett, adjacent to Montague, and a leader of the Montague Nuclear Concerns Group said she was "ambivalent."

She said she was happy Lovejoy was acquitted but upset that testimony by radiation expert Dr. John Goffman and BU Prof. Howard Zinn was excluded from the jury by Judge Kent B. Smith.

Asst. DA John Finn said he was glad Judge Smith chose to tell the jury in his charge that Lovejoy's motivations should have nothing to do with the deliberations should the indictment have been valid.

"I think that the question of real vs. personal property was very clear," Finn said. "I think at the very minimum it was a matter for the jury to decide."

Judge Smith prohibited the jury from considering the distinction by "directing" them to an innocent verdict. Finn said he thought the distinction between real and personal property in Massachusetts law "ought to be eliminated."

The verdict

Public won, others lost

By BILL DENSMORE
MDC Staff

The acquittal yesterday of Sam Lovejoy for destruction of a weather tower at the proposed Northeast Utilities nuclear power plant site was a disappointing experience for Judge Smith, the 14 jurors, the State and Lovejoy himself.

Because he was acquitted on a point of established law instead of the motivations for his action, the 27-year-old farmer from Montague failed to justify his action morally.

Lovejoy was acquitted on a point of law instead of the motivations. For that reason, the 27-year-old farmer from Montague failed in his attempt to convince the jury that his tower-toppling action was moral.

Moreover, had Lovejoy been convicted, he would have had the opportunity to appeal to the state superior court. He is now prevented from appealing or having his case appealed by the state because of double jeopardy - an individual may not be tried twice for the same offense.

For the state, and for assistant district attorney John Finn, the trial was an embarrasment. To proceed with a full case and have Judge Smith direct an innocent verdict certainly damages the DA's effectiveness.

But the distinction between real and personal property is a fine one in Massachusetts law. Real property is considered to be permanently attached to the land - like a house or flagpole, according to Amherst attorney Richard M. Howland.

Personal property is considered that which is moveable - for instance the furniture in a house.

Lovejoy was indicted for "malicious destruction of personal property" - the Northeast Utilities weather tower. But Judge Smith, in directing yesterday an innocent verdict, ruled that the tower was in fact real property - a fixed object rooted to the ground.

Lovejoy wished the interpretation to be that of personal property - the tower was like the antenna on a house, moveable. He argued so in court. But apparently Smith interpreted Massachusetts law as making the tower real property - thus invalidating the criminal indictment issued against Lovejoy.

The jurors, through the whole proceeding were nothing more than court observers. They played no real part in the intellectual arguments advanced by Judge Smith, the DA and Lovejoy for two reasons:

--Smith excluded them from hearing testimony by Lovejoy's star "motivation" witnesses, Dr. John Goffman, a nuclear radiation critic and BU prof. Howard Zinn, an authority on civil disobedience.

Moreover, Smith, in his charge to the jury, actually told the citizens they would have had to disregard the motivations for Lovejoy's act had the original indictment been accurate.

--When it came time to rule on Lovejoy's guilt or innocence, the jury was ordered to provide an innocent entry by Smith - polled each individually in open court - because the indictment was incorrect.

The hotest seat in the trial was not the juror's box, therefore, but the judge's bench. Judge Smith was forced by his own interpretation of law to exclude Lovejoy from trial by his peers - a position he certainly did not wish upon himself.

Moreover, the indication clearly was left that Smith would not have tolerated consideration of Lovejoy's anti-nuclear motives - both in his exclusion of Zinn and Goffman and in his directions to the jury.

So the only winner in the proceeding was the public - who had a chance to view a rare spectacle in western Massachusetts - a political trial. Moreover it was a trial for what Lovejoy and the press interpreted to be environmental motivations.

As MassPIRG director Jonathan Souweine observed, nothing else would have provided so eloquent a forum of public policy and nuclear power.

Finast SUPERMARKETS
IT PAYS TO SHOP THE FINAST WAY
Finast will no longer increase prices of food once placed on our shelves

On Wednesday, July 24, 1974, all Finast Supermarkets began a new pricing policy on Grocery, Meat and Produce items.

1. When Finast is forced to make a price increase, cans and packages already price marked on the shelves will be sold at the old lower price. When Items are restocked on the shelves, the new, higher priced items will be placed behind the lower priced items.

2. Weekly specials or "sale items" are priced lower than regular prices. Any remaining after the sale event, will be repriced upward.

3. As regular prices go down, Finast will immediately reduce the price on shelf stock, and the lower price will always be honored at the register. When a can or a package shows more than one price, the customer pays the lowest price for that can or package.

4. Baby food and items controlled by state laws are exempt from this new policy.

5. Until current stocks are sold there will be some items of our many thousands with more than one price marking on the can or package. Please bear with us during this transition.

Nurse-majors hold workshop this weekend

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

Games, films, role playing and human relations excercises, will highlight the second in a series of Cross-Cultural Communication Workshops to be held this weekend, Sept. 27-28 in Campus Center 801.

Junior nursing majors and foreign students will participate in this weekend's workshop, sponsored by the Office of Foreign Students.

Ann Gillespie, Director of the workshops, says "The idea is to get at cultural differences, not similarities".

"The group is kept small, about 20 nursing majors and 20 foreign students, to allow greater interpersonal communication."

The hope is that, through participation in these workshops, the nurses will be better able to deal with culturally different situations when they begin their practical nursing experience," she adds.

Nursing majors, foreign students and others may attend this weekend's workshop by calling the Foreign Student Office at 545-0019.

News letter debuts this fall to keep Greeks informed

By CARLENE MURPHY

A new student publishing venture will make it's debut, this Fall, when 1,500 copies of the bi-monthly "Greek Newsletter" is distributed.

Editor Robert Palumbo, secretary of the Greek Council and member of Phi Sigma Kappa, says the publication is designed "to keep the Greek area informed."

Financed by the Greek Council, the newsletter will contain reports from the student senators, individual house reports, Greek Council committee reports, news from the Greek Affairs office at Whitmore, and notices of upcoming events.

The newsletter will be distributed to the 24 fraternities and sororities free of charge.

Public urged to attend M-health conference

Belchertown volunteers and other interested people are urged to attend a conference Friday, Sept. 27, to set up a proposal to be presented to the State of Massachusetts by the Mental Retardation Representation Project.

Funds will be cut from the Mental Retardation Representation Project (MRRP), at the end of November unless a new proposal is formed.

The MRRP, funded by the Massachusetts Dept. of Health and directed by Attorney Ray Bilodeau, delivers legal services to the mentally retarded in western Massachusetts.

The conference will be held at St. John's Episcopal Church in Northampton.

There will be a panel discussion at 9 a.m. and workshops in the afternoon to discuss what kinds of legal problems the mentally retarded face and the formulation of a more workable system to meet these problems.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Thursday, September 26

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — New doors may well open to you this morning. Do whatever is necessary to persuade another to allow you your chance for gain.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Make sure you're ready for advancement before you go after it. You could gain what you can hardly cope with at present. Take your time; learn.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — If you are in the market for an influential contact — and who isn't? — this could well be your best day in months. Put your best foot forward.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Employment matters are especially favored today. Meet one in authority before you make any decision for or against change.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18) — Keep energy in reserve during morning and afternoon hours. You'll be needing it in excess when events begin to unravel themselves at evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The Pisces with highly developed creative instincts stands the greatest chance for gain today. Don't give all your artistic secrets away.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You should be able to achieve at least one of your goals now—if you apply yourself consistently enough to be truly effective.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) —There is no reason why you should be shy about putting forth your own ideas. You have enough knowledge to put two and two together correctly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — A good day for new beginnings. Don't be afraid to set out on a new and different course of action — if you have the backing of others.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — So long as you can keep at least one finger in the pie that symbolizes your own career, you should be able to branch out now with great success.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A day for you to try to demonstrate genuine leadership. Take yourself and your followers in hand and move forward through progressive action.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 2) — You may have to forfeit some adventure this morning to achieve a long-standing goal this afternoon. There are decisions to be made in the afternoon.

HOW DO YOU THINK MOST PEOPLE YOUR AGE DIE?

It's not drugs.
It's not suicide.
And it's not cancer.
It's automobile crashes.

More American people between the ages of 15 and 25 die in automobile crashes than in any other way.

At least half of those deaths are alcohol related. And the drunk drivers who cause most of them are under 25. Sometimes, many times, they kill themselves.

One of the most dangerous things you can do is get drunk and drive home.

You can change it. You have to.

You march against the war. You fight for clean air and clean water. You eat natural foods. You practice yoga. You are so much for life. And you are so much against killing.

It would be unthinkable for you to wittingly kill another human being.

So then, why is this happening?

Tired Team Canada readies for Finns

HELSINKI [UPI] — A tired Team Canada '74 squad took the ice at the Helsinki Ice Hall for a short light practice Wednesday, four hours after their arrival in this nordic capital.

The World Hockey Association (WHA) All-Stars arrived by chartered jet from Vancouver and set up a training camp, preparing for the four-game continuation of their series against the Russian stars which resumes in Moscow Oct. 1.

In the four games held earlier this month in Canada, the Canadians and Soviets tied 1-1-2.

The Canadians will train at the Ice Hall, site of the 1974 World Championships, and then play the Finnish National Squad on Friday. Two days later they play Sweden in Gothenburg for the final warmup before Moscow.

Several team members said they were tired after their flight, and the squad arrived an hour late for its first practice session.

The Canadians first game should not be too difficult since the Finns have lost some star players and have a new coach from the team that placed fourth in the World Championships.

Two top players from last year's team, Captain Veli-Pekka Ketola and defenseman Heikki Riihiranta, now play for the WHA's Winnipeg Jets, and Coach Kalevi Numminen quit because his job as Sales Manager for an ice hockey stick company took too much of his time.

Making a comeback as coach is Seppo Liitsola who managed the team until 1972. He complained three days ago he had not seen any films of the Canadians and did not know their style of play.

WBZ loses Sox TV rights to Channel 38

BOSTON [AP] — Station WBZ-TV reported Wednesday that it has lost the television rights to Boston-based games of the Boston Red Sox, effective at the end of the 1974 season.

General Manager Sy Yanoff said that Red Sox General Manager Dick O'Connell had awarded television rights, starting next season, to WSBK-TV Channel 38, a UHF station.

"Frankly, we were surprised by the Red Sox decision," Yanoff said. "For the past three years, we have enjoyed a relationship that resulted in an increased number of games and wider exposure and recognition of the Boston Red Sox.

"There are certainly no hard feelings and we feel that we made our best possible offer for the continued rights."

The Red Sox were in New York for a night game with the Yankees and there was no immediate comment.

WBZ-TV, the Boston Group W outlet, also has been the originating station for telecasting Boston games on a New England network. The television stations included WTEV of New Bedford, WGAN of Portland, Maine, WABI, of Bangor, Maine, WAGM in Presque Isle, Maine, WWLP in Springfield, and WVNY of Burlington, Vt.

WSBK-TV owned by Storer Broadcasting Co., also televises games of the Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League.

Mermen battle BC

By MDC STAFF

For the UMass Water Polo Club, the preseason comes to an end and the real thing begins this weekend. Friday will see some tough competition in town as Boston College and UMass square off in the last of a 5 game schedule of scrimmages.

Thus far, the UMass squad is 3-1 having lost only to defending New England champs Southern Connecticut, 13-11. UMass wins include 2 convincing victories against Amherst College, 16-7 and 20-5, and an unheard of 16-0 shutout of UNH last weekend.

Although the game with B.C. is only a scrimmage it serves as a good indication of things to come. UMass will face B.C. during the regular season and view them as one of the toughest hurdles on the way to the New Englands. The winner Friday has a decided psychological advantage when the two teams meet again.

For those of you who plan to take in this Friday's bout, herewith is a brief introduction:

Water Polo is a relatively new sport in the United States. Like so many other sports that have found their way here from abroad, it first became popular in California and has gradually taken hold around the country. The UMass club is now entering its third year in existence.

One member of the UMass squad, Henry MacLean, has played the game on the high school level in California. Besides playing an excellent all around game, Henry has the tendency to throw the ball, what you'd call, fast. That is to say that his teammates would like to imitate his shot...if only they could see it. That is to say that when a goalie has the misfortune of stopping one of his shots it is not that the goalie was quick enough to get in front of it but, rather that he was not quick enough to get out of the way. But, in any case, when Henry fires it, its usually the corners of the net that take the brunt of the attack.

The line up of a water polo team is similar to that of a hockey team with the exception that there are two centers instead of one and the goal is wider. The playing area is approximately the length of a basketball court and the players are not allowed to touch the sides or bottom.

So if you can imagine swimming up and down the "court" instead of running, you can join the crowd of people who wonder where anyone gets the energy to crawl out of the pool when the final whistle blows. Which leads us to the question of how and why the UMass squad plans to survive 2 such contests this Saturday in Durham against UNH and Hebron Academy. If you want to know how, this writer has no answer. If you want to know why, stick around while the visiting team is leaving Friday. You'll be sure to hear them say, "Take care. And thanks for having us."

Face off time (if that's what you call it) is 4:00 this Friday in the Boyden pool and the action promises to be furious. The good guys will be wearing white and will be out to prove that the old saying is true.

Davis two-out, two-run single keeps O's in first

BALTIMORE [UPI] - Tommy Davis' two-run single with two out in the ninth inning rallied the Baltimore Orioles to a 5-4 win over the Detroit Tigers Wednesday night and kept them in first place in the American League East.

After the Orioles had rallied for one run going into the inning trailing 4-2, Davis lined a single into centerfield, scoring Al bumbry with the tying run and Paul Blair with the winning run.

Wayne Garland, 5-5, gained the win in relief of Ross Grimssley, who was touched for four runs and eight hits in five innings.

Rookie Dan Meyer's two run triple sparked an early outburst that gave the Orioles their 4-2 lead. Meyer, a left-handed hitting outfielder, ripled after Bill Freehan walked and Leon Roberts singled in the second inning. Aurelio Rodriguez scored Meyer with a sacrifice fly.

Baltimore scored single runs in the second and sixth innings against Lolich, 16-20, with Brooks Robinson doubling home one score and Bob Oliver singling home a run in the sixth inning.

Lolich ran into trouble in the ninth when Andy Etchebarren singled with one out. Pinch-runner Rich Coggins moved to second when Curt Motton walked and Al Bumbry pinch ran for Motton. Paul Blair's single drove in coggins with Bumbry stopping at second. Bobby Grich's fly advanced the runners to second and third before Davis' game-winning hit.

Singles by Al Kaline, Freehan and Reggie Sanders gave the Orioles a 4-1 lead in the top of the sixth inning.

The ball eludes grasp of UMass flanker Lee Harriman, as Maine defensive back Steve Vance gets set to upend Harriman. He has five receptions so far, averaging ten yards a catch. A better passing attack will be needed against Dartmouth, UMass' next foe, to go with the fine running game shown so far. Dartmouth looks to be a tough game, as it will be the Big Green's season opener. Dartmouth is shooting for their sixth straight league title.

Foreman:"ready"

N'SELE, ZAIRE [UPI] - Heavyweight champion George Foreman pulled a "Butterfly" bandage from his right eye and announced "I'm ready to fight today," thus ending speculation about his Oct. 29 meeting with Muhammed Ali in this Central African Capital City.

The champion met with newsmen after having the bandage removed from his cut right eye, injured in a sparring session with Bill McMurray eight days before the original Sept. 25 date. He became angry when a writer asked him to confirm the new date for the fight.

Gogolak hero

DARIEN, Conn. [UPI] — Pete Gogolak, kicking specialist for the New York Giants, may have been responsible for police catching up to three suspects in the robbery of his neighbor's home in Darien.

The three men were stopped by a state trooper 12 miles away on the Connecticut Turnpike in Greenwich yesterday and in an ensuing gunbattle, two of the suspects were killed and the other wounded.

Gogolak said he was out in his garden when he noticed a white Cadillac parked in a drive across the way and out of view from the home of Ronald Ball, an attorney who died Monday.

Unknown to Gogolak, three robbers were in the Ball home, taking jewelry from about two dozen mourners who had returned from Ball's wake.

One of the men returning to the car saw Gogolak, who questioned his presence on the grounds.

The man replied, "You better get out of here." A warning shot was fired and the other two men came running from the house, dropping loot as they fled.

Gogolak retreated to his house and phoned Darien police, who rushed to the scene.

Sox expire

NEW YORK [UPI] — Elliott Maddox delivered a one-out single that scored Sandy Alomar with the only run of the game in the bottom of the 10th inning Wednesday night to give the New York Yankees a 1-0 victory over the Boston Red Sox behind the seven-hit pitching of George "Doc" Medich.

The victory enabled the Yankees to remain only one-half game behind division-leading Baltimore in the American League East while the loss virtually eliminated the Red Sox from contention. Boston now trails the Orioles by 4½ games with only seven to play.

Maddox, who had three of the Yankees' seven hits off loser Bill Lee, came through with his game-winning hit after Alomar had led off the inning with a walk, moved to second on Fred Stanley's sacrifice and advanced to third when Roy White beat out an infield hit.

Medich, who struck out six, boosted his record to 19-14 while Lee dropped to 17-14.

Both teams blew numerous scoring opportunities over the first nine innings.

The Red Sox loaded the bases on Medich with two outs in the first but the Yankee reighthander got Dick McAuliffe on a fly out to end that threat.

In the sixth, Carl Yastrzemski led off with a single and moved to second on Darrell Evans' sacrifice but Medich retired Fred Lynn on a fly out and McAuliffe on an infield grounder.

Then, in the ninth, with one out, pinch-hitters Cecil Cooper and Bernie Carbo reached base on a walk and a single respectively. But Yankee third baseman Graig Nettles made the defensive play of the game with a diving stab of Juan Beniquez's liner to third and he was able to throw out Carbo at second for the force, shutting off a sure Red Sox run.

The Yankees blew an opportunity in the sixth when Maddox doubled with one out but Lee got Bobby Murcer on an infield grounder and Lou Piniella on a fly to center. And in the seventh, Munson's leadoff single was erased on a pair of force plays and Sandy Alomar's fly out to right.

Money: It's our choice now

Money, money, money. That is what it seems everyone wants and needs in this country today. Our society has evolved to a point where that is a fact and a rule. Look at the names of the supposed two leading men in our nation today, Ford and Rockefeller, two names that have been synonymous with money and big business for years and years. That is where our country is at now.

That is also where sports is at now, and quite unfortunately so. Professionally, most athletes are in the highest pay brackets in the world. And are they satisfied? Some are and some are not; many bargain for more and more money year after year. Holdouts for higher wages and better contracts are a common occurrence nowadays.

But is that what sports should be all about? It is not what I was taught when I was growing up with sports as one of my major activities. I was taught to participate for the fun and enjoyment of it all and the overall experience that sports and competition would give me in dealing with more serious life situations. Once money, and not just money, but "big" money, becomes a part of the picture that seems to change things for me. Different motives and different meanings come into sport then and I am not really sure if they are healthy ones or not.

On the collegiate level money problems similar to those in professional sports also exist. Of course everyone knows that college athletes do not get paid but many do get helped along with the financing of their education. Scholarships are what I am speaking about, and some people question even their validity in the educational process. Usually scholarships are "above board" as they say, and people who deserve them, get them. But anyone who is familiar with Dave Megyssey's book, Out of Their League, knows that everything is not always "above board." Megyssey, a former St. Louis Cardinal football star, who played his college ball at Syracuse talks about the little unnamed, unaccounted for gifts that alot of athletes received almost from out of nowhere. Alumni were often the bearers of these gifts and for this I see no place in amateur, collegiate athletics. It only breeds bad feelings within teams and within departments and can only do harm to programs in the long run.

But much more important than who gets what money in what sports at colleges is the problem of funding for certain programs. (For those of you that have found this column somewhat meaningless so far, hang in there for this is the crux of the matter coming up.) The funding problem exists at this university in full and almost unstoppable bloom. Money is very tight all around. Everyone knows that. Athletes, coachs, and administration alike are trying and must continue to try to find solutions to this problem that could mean the end of many sports at this university quite soon.

We have here, right now, one of the most complete major college athletic programs in the country. And it is imperative that we keep it that way. If it is up to the administration to strive towards that goal then they must be forced to. We as students must realize that it is our money as members of this school and as taxpayers in this state that is being used. We must see it used to the school's and to our own best interests, which should be one and the same.

The ideal of college athletics should be quality and participation. We as participants should be the determinants of what is to happen and where monies should go. Do we want a limited amount of programs that strive towards nation-wide excellence or do we want a greater number of programs that stay within the realm of New England levels of competition? Of course the ideal would be to have the "best of all possible worlds" and have a great number of programs that can strive towards national prominence. But if this is not possible within the reality of the finances available then how should we deal with the problem?

It is up to us to decide. And we had better do it quick before it is decided for us.

They called him St. Jack,and you can number among his heirs people from David Bowie to Jerry Garcia and yes, possibly you. Bowie and Garcia at least admit their paternity; most people are unaware of it. But if you have ever hitchhiked more than a few miles, smoked a joint or thought of yourself as a freak, then Jack Kerouac has touched your life. That poor tortured bastard, lashed by the thousand guilts of the Roman Catholic church and a mother who never stopped, a lover who preferred whores and his fist, a cultural revolutionary who ended up worshiping William F. Buckley and always dug ice cream and the flag, also wrote a book called On the Road, and in so doing punched, as Jimmy Breslin said, a hole in the wall of 1957 American consciousness that Ken Kesey, Bob Dylan and all of us "long-haired broken chromosomed acquarian communard anarcho-syndicalist" folk have been trucking through ever since.

They called it "The Beat Generation." Size was not its strong point; there were maybe five major beat poets and writers — Kerouac, Allen Ginsberg, Gregory Corso, William Burroughs (who says he wasn't), and Gary Snyder. The strange thing was that this tiny crew, united only by mixed disgust and fear of the plasticized, militarized monster called 1957 America, managed to utterly terrify almost all of that monster's cultural elite. The critics gibbered about immorality, news editors at Time misrepresented facts to fit the way things were 'supposed' to be (just as with Vietnam), and a lot of people ignored the elite, read the books and the poetry, and found out that life had more to it than two car garages and corporate careers. One of those folks was named Ken Kesey; he did some acid and took off in a bus piloted by Neal Cassady, the hero of On the Road, and that led to the 1967 Summer of Love, presided over by beat poets Snyder, Ginsberg and Michael McClure. And if many of us are still learning from those ideas, just remember they publicly started in September of 1957 when the Viking Press brought out a strange little "novel" called On the Road.

For Kerouac, it started — and ended — with Lowell, Massachusetts. Though the town was named after a Boston brahmin and was originally a neo-utopian experiment in town planning, by Jack's time it had little to do either with the upper class or utopia. It was a classic New England mill town, a red-brick core of giant textile mills surrounded by wooden tripledeckers filled with Irish, French, and Greek workers. It has never been a pretty place, and these days, most young people who got out of Lowell seem to want to keep it that way. Yet, though no child of Lowell ever travelled further or harder, Jack never did succeed in leaving this place, and there lies the tale.

His parents had migrated to Lowell from New Hampshire, and with Papa Leo running a small printing shop, Memere set about raising a family that included Gerard and Caroline when Jack was born in 1922. If Gerard had lived, Jack might never have left Lowell. But when Jack turned four, their room became the scene of a six month deathwatch, and the already super-sensitive little baby of the family suffered through a half-year of listening to his brother's gurgling mixed tears and pants for breath. By the time of Gerard's death, Jack's consciousness had been flayed into an anguished mess, the product of Gerard's 'canonization' by local nuns and his mother's vicious frustration at losing her first born. It was unnecessary for her to shout at him, as she did when he was twelve, that "you should have died, not Gerard." He already felt it, and Gerard, a mother he could not please, the Church, and Lowell twisted into a spiral worm that writhed in his brain for the rest of his life. But Lowell was also crazy old junkmen who enthralled him with stories and mysterious hints of a world different from white lamb Gerard. It was a world that included The Shadow from cosmopolitan New York City, and a beautiful teacher named Helen Mansfield who had faith in his love for words and didn't laugh like his parents when he said he wanted to be a writer. And it even had soul-friend Sebastien Sampas, one person at least in provincial Lowell with whom to share the intimacies of full communication.

So when Jack left high school he chose to go to Columbia, to The City, to an intellectual world apart from Lowell. And there he met Allen Ginsberg and William Burroughs and Neal Cassady, haunted the richly, filthy streets of Times Square, wrote a novel, began and ended epic trips across America with and without 'Dean Moriarity', and learned from those trips that Columbia University notwithstanding, "Novels" could not say what he wanted them to say. But as Allen Ginsberg said, Jack was "The Great Rememberer," and he couldn't forgot that worm. It gave him the sensitivity and the wisdom to write the way he did. And it killed him.

A biography of such a person requires vision and sensitivity. Unfortunately, Ann Charters displays little of either in Kerouac, Her book is about a man obsessed with Lowell, but shows no sense of intimacy with the town. It is about a cultural revolutionary, yet never considers at any depth either the tradition he rejected, the sources he found for the beginnings of an alternative tradition, or the directions the new tradition took in his wake. Moreover, at least two of the book's characters report errors of fact sufficiently serious as to challenge the book's entire credibility. Finally (did she learn nothing from him?), it is mediocre writing.

To take these charges in reverse order, Kerouac is marked by a creakily academic writing style that is all-to-frequently reduced to

EVERYTHING'S COMING UP ANGELA

A musical worthy of a standing ovation has arrived at the Winter Garden on Broadway. The musical is the American favorite, by Jule Styne-Stephen Sondheim, "GYPSY". Now starring the incomparably fabulous Angela Lansbury, whose interpretation and performance of Madam Rose can best be described as PERFECT — ANGELA IS PERFECT.

"Gypsy" comes to Broadway from nine months of packed houses in London's West End. Opening night at the Piccadilly Theatre found such luminaries in the audience as Stephen Sondheim and June Havoc (Gypsy Rose Lee's real life sister). Sondheim said "I never saw "Gypsy" until I saw it with Angela." June broke into tears at Angela's insight and resemblance of her mother in the role of Rose.

"Gypsy" left London with three members of the original cast: Angela Lansbury, Zan Charisse and Bonnie Langford as Baby June. Since the first performance last May in Toronto, Canada, "Gypsy" has broken box office records all across America. Opening last Monday, September 23, 1974 on Broadway.

"Gypsy" is scheduled for a ten week limited engagement at the Winter Garden, which is already sold out. There is no doubt in my mind that the contract will be renewed and renewed and will run for years. It will undoubtedly walk off with the Tony's. My only question is which Antoinette Perry Award will be given to Angela for her flawless acting, one for Best Actress in a Musical? or Best Actress in a Dramatic role? or both?

A Salute to Industry

Below The Salt has been the kind of magazine that would print peculiar work. We pledge to uphold this tradition, but can't promise everybody's peculiar work will fit. Your's must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces to the line. The deadline for each Thursday's edition is noon the previous Tuesday; but you can write to us anytime.

Below The Salt is a weekly fine art - real world magazine of the UMass Daily Collegian, student newspaper, Amherst, Mass.

"The truth was doomed to die. It was being downtrodden, was being drowned, burned, ground to ashes. But look — it has survived, it lives, it has been printed, and nobody ever will be able to wipe it out."

Faster and faster smoking too much

A small bird, shrouded in gray ash, its class indistinguishable, struggles to move its tattered wings in a desperate attempt to fly. Far below is a stagnant pool of brown, muddy water shaped somewhat like a figure-eight. In the upper region of the lake three objects can be seen slowly floating towards each other. From such a distance it is impossible to discern whether they are boats, branches, or bathers; however, the rising din of an engine would persuade one to believe they might be motorboats.

The heel of a well polished, black, military boot stomps across the huge body of water. The mud splatters up the brown pant leg, blending in and hemorrhages, down the shiney, smooth surfaced footgear. The three are no more; the lake becomes a puddle embedded in a footprint on a battlefield; they vanish in the chaos.

The roaring strain of the engines increases as the earth covered jeeps arrive carrying the wounded. They struggle through the incessant trenches of mud creating more lakes, ponds, oceans, worlds. ----- dateline ----- Pyongyang, North Korea (UPI) ARMIES CLASH AT HEARTBREAK RIDGE — Bloodiest Scene of the Korean Conflict to date -----

The lake was within a mile from the house, so they walked, cutting through their own back yard. When they had arrived at the cool spring, the old man filled the tin oil can to the brim with water and set it on a large flat stone near the falls.

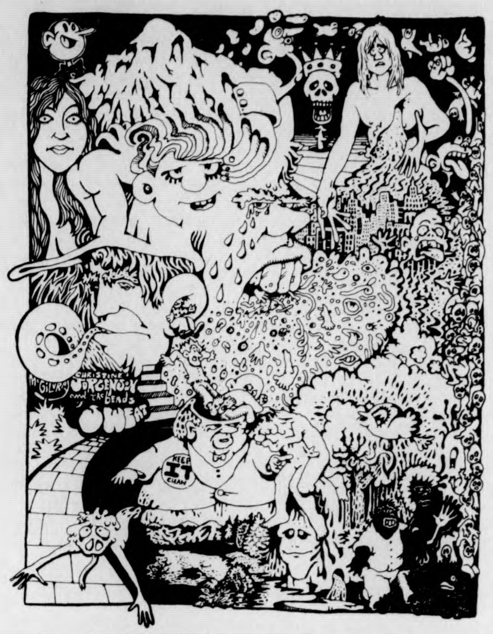
His young son watched wide-eyed as he loaded and rechecked the shotgun. The sun reflected down off the metal firing piece and formed a star at the end of the barrel.

What remained of the can was across the other side of the lake. It had shattered in every conceivable direction. The ground and the trees nearby were soaked and pieces of tin clung to them.

"That's what a man looks like, son, when he gets hit."

The surf lapped up onto the shore every few seconds, each time pushing the body up a little further in the sand. The area around him was stained with red. He rose and fell with each returning wave. Gulls cried indifferently from above.

"In times of painful tension and vulnerability, choose war;" said the gray mustached philosophy teacher to his class, "it hardens; it produces muscles!"



The last of the company exits from the smoldering remnants of what was once a pulsating city. Through the ascending steam and smoke come to men dressed in army wear with white arm bands bearing red crosses. Loose back packs, torn jackets, seemingly endless paraphenalis bouncing down from their belts, they carry out a stretcher on which lies the shredded remains of what could be once identified as a human being.

The crowds cheer; hats fly; the boys are home.

Still in his combat boots, the young man was nearing the outskirts of his home town; six years since last he had seen this place. His heart beat faster and faster with every step.

Buns up and fallen arches

McDonald's is growing into an American National Institution. In order to ease tensions with France a few years back, we sent them one, which is now proudly displayed on the Champs-Elysees only three blocks away from the cite of the now burned-out American drug store we shipped there when drug stores were in vogue.

Around the United States, parents are able to keep their kids behaving by promising to take them "out to eat" if they keep out of trouble. High school males take their "chicks" and "broads" to the fast food "restaurants" and impress them by ordering a Big Mac and a Filet o' Fish.

Now, I haven't really got anything against this tremendous establishment; I just won't eat there. I decided that a couple years back, when I went in for a meal and heard someone in the back room screaming, "That's not a pickle, it's moving." Within two minutes after that, I heard different voices saying "Throw it in the vat with the French Fries. Nobody will be able to tell the difference once it's fried." When I got my Quarter Pounder, (I still haven't figured out how they got that cute name; it certainly has no relationship with the hamburger or anything they put in with it). I looked inside it, and found no meat. I took it back. The "waitress" said, "How do I know you didn't take out the meat and swallow it in in a gulp right away?" I looked at her and thought about that. She gave me a new hamburger. I looked inside this one, and after first mistaking a pickle for it, (I think it was a pickle, but it was red and chunky inside) I found the meat. I took a bite of the sandwich and found the catsup thin, but thicker than water. I snuck to the back to see the 16-year old who was slopping on the catsup. They pay him 75c an hour, plus all of the "food" he can eat, uh, stomach. Sure enough, there was a Band-Aid on his finger.

Now, I haven't got any objections to other people eating there. I occasionally point out that eating one heaping teaspoon of peanut butter has more nutrition than a meal at McDonald's, and probably better taste, but if people enjoy watching others get change back from their dollar, it's O.K. with me.

Phillip Roth's latest novel . . .

My Life as a Man (330 pages)
Holt, Rinehart and Winston
P. 330, $8.95
By Phillip Roth

A Smorgasbord of Psychosis

by Don Aucoin

Phillip Roth, seemingly secure in his position at the forefront of America's "pop" novelists (topped in sales only by hacks such as the late Jackie Susann, Irving Wallace, et. al.), has not been content to sit back and count his royalties. On the contrary, he has been prolific to the point of coming out with six books since 1967, when When She Was Good was published. Then came Portnoy's Complaint, the savagely lewd and hysterically funny treatise on a Jewish-mother-to-end-all Jewish-mothers and her hopelessly screwed-up progeny. This best-seller also induced a spate of cocktail party jokes about "Phillip Roth, the one-finger typist". (Presumably, he was masturbating with the other hand — Get it?)

Now, several books later, here is Roth's latest offering, My Life as a Man, packed full of wit, fury, indecision, hate, love, and more; much more. Indeed, one is sometimes overwhelmed by the sheer amount of things going on in the book. The protagonist, Peter Tarnopol, is a prize-winning writer in his mid-thirties whose career, and life, have been on a steady downhill course since he met his wife, Maureen. This women is the supreme Rothian bitch, a sort of mythical monster who makes Peter's life miserable from the day she enters it. She blackmails him into marrying her; they spend three fun-filled years together replete with fights, tears, and attempted suicides; they are separated and until her death four years later, she adamantly refuses to give him a divorce. Peter himself sums up his wife in the preface to the second section of the book. "In her lifetime, Mrs. Tarnopol was a barmaid, an abstract painter, a sculptress, a waitress, an acress (and what an actress!), a short-story writer, a liar, and a psychopath." The battles between these two are more venomous than anything Portnoy ever had with The Monkey, often ending in actual physical violence.

My Life is divided into two parts. The first consists of two short stories written by Tarnopol concerning a fictitious character named Nathan Zuckerman. The second is Tarnopol's autobiographical account of the years Before, During and After Maureen. A few pages into the second section, titled "My True Story", one begins to see the correlatives between Tarnopol's short stories and his real life. Events and characters of his own experience take on a slightly different aspect in his stories, and, like Scott of Zelda, it turns out he's always writing about his goddamned wife. The Tarnopols, however, lack the grace and beauty of the Fitzgeralds.

The essential element in Roth's work is suffering; humorously perhaps, but people are suffering nonetheless. It is a very bourgoeis kind of pain, or, as Tarnopol's brother Morris puts it, they are "capitalists in search of a conscience." Peter Tarnopol is in search of something else too: his manhood. Or rather his own somewhat twisted conception of it. It is this constant inner debate about what makes a "man" that causes him to a) marry Maureen, whom he despises, b) continue seeing Dr. Spielvogel, a psychiatrist who is convinced that his problems are all due to narcissism and a repressed hostility towards his mother (Tarnopol's, not the doctor's), c) run from the only truly good person in his life, a devoted mistress named Susan, and d) allow his ex-wife's memory to rule him even when her death has at least "freed" him. When he finally leaves Susan, after three years of what he considers happiness, she reaches up from her chair and holds him for an instant by his penis. That eloquent little scene says a lot about Tarnopol's relationship with women, though it is not Susan who has him "by the balls", but Maureen, her fingers stretched beyond the grave and fastened securely on hubby's crotch.

As always, Roth's dialogue is brilliant and revealing; one has the sense of a line being spontaneous and at the same time carefully structured to shape the situation. He has quite a bit of fun with cliches; making fun of them, capitalizing them a la Tom Wolfe, using them as a springboard to go off on a whole new tangent. Roth touches many bases in this book. He exalts Flaubert and several other literary geniuses; disparages the Freudians and the New York divorce laws (having felt victimized by both, I'm sure); and discusses the roles and attitudes of women in the fifties. The women are a shade too stereotyped, being either bitchy or submissive. There doesn't seem to be a middle ground with Roth. My Life as a Man deals with some familiar themes such as incest, Oedipal complexes, castration worries; a veritable smorgasbord of psychological problems. Just as Susan considers herself "a collection of symptoms instead of a human being", so do the other characters wrestle with what they are, what they would like to be, and what others say they are. With all the world a psychoanalytic stage, and all the men and women cast as subjects beneath the author's expert eye, the world of Phillip Roth becomes a fascinating place to visit.

More on Jack

"and then Jack did such-and-such... and then Jack wrote..." As my friend Eileen said, "she's the master of the seven word sentence."

As to the errors. Charters tells us on several pages of Jack's great love for Philip Whalen, a San Francisco poet. It was a love so great that Jack asked Whalen to edit his "The Book of Dreams" for City Lights Press. While Jack certainly loved Whalen, Whalen has never edited Jack or anybody else, and he had no idea where Charters latched onto the notion. He speculated that it came from Jack himself. But as Charters herself remarked, by the time she got to know him, he was a highly unreliable, usually sadly drunken witness. Since she never interviewed the easily available Whalen, the mistake stood. Carolyn Cassady, on the other hand, tells us that the book is in fact riddled with errors, some of which she combed out in a reading of the manuscript, allowed by its editor. Quite a few remain, including a misquotation of Mrs. Cassady that changes acknowledged hear-say into fact.

So we are left with the general substance of the book, and it is flimsy. Charters indeed states that Krouac was hung up on his Lowell childhood, but bursts through it in eight and a half pages, giving the reader no real idea of its power and meaning. Somehow in this biography of a Roman Catholic mystic, she leaves out the fact that he had religious visions as a child, and if she made much effort to understand the Church, it doesn't show.

The great achievement of Jack's life was his rejection of the "Novel" and his decision to write his own way and screw the establishment. Yet there's nothing here about the establishment, about the all pervading influence of the New Criticism, which so effectively entombed prose and poetry in post war America. As a result, the grand courage of his act is obscured. Many of Jack's teachers didn't make it into the book either. Neal and Allen are here, but Herbert Huncke, who introduced Jack and Allen to the nightmare carnival world of 42nd Street both literally and with his stories, is not. Nor is Celine, or the films that entranced Jack, or — in any depth — Charles "Bird" Parker, or any part of the Afro-American culture that influenced Jack so much. Finally, Jack's heirs are absent, the hippies he so feared but who had learned so much from him. Perhaps that is because Charters feels Kerouac hadn't offered any "real alternative." Yet is any more alternative needed from a picaqresque novelist than saying NO! to the corporate state, no to Moloch, no to consumption, to a world lacking in human tenderness? Is there any realer alternative than love?

So if you feel a need to inquire into your own roots and discover the real Kerouac, read him; and if you've already absorbed On the Road, step up and try his masterpiece, Visions of Cody. It is wholly appropriate that Neal Cassady, 'Cody Pomeray,' is the main subject of this behemoth, for Neal was the catalyst that flashed Jack into finding his own voice. Cassady is without a doubt one of the great mythological heroes of modern America. Disturbed, unhappy, at times suicidal, he was also "the farthest-out guy I've ever known," pulling fragments of the American culture together into raps and translating them through a body at the far edge of human physical limits into "an art form that really hasn't been discovered yet." That was Jerry Garcia talking; he knew Neal in his Kesey days, and when you hear him play today, remember that the genius behind the guitar considers himself a student of Cassady's.

So did Jack. Visions of Cody opens with Jack's greatest gift in full and beautiful display; it is a description of a diner, a movie theater, and a subway station. Yet it is not merely description but recreation, detail after perfect detail coagulating into a picture so real that you go to bed and dream about it and know; that you've been there, been to a 1940's diner that was not white tile and aluminum but wood and marble, the theater funky, a B-movie cistern of our culture's image bank, the subway station haunted by the bums Jack loved and learned from, far from the gleaming efficiency of BART commuter trains. The passage builds to a description of a woman eating in a cafeteria, Jack's intuitive reading of her consciousness almost telepathic, and crests with a whirling kaleidoscope of psychedelic light flashes through a cafeteria window, neon and tungsten and glass and car headlights and fender reflections — all of which reminds me of Hesse's Magic Theater, but this is real, literal description, truth.

My friend Murphy says that he wishes Jack had stayed with the traditional novel form, had more discipline, had edited himself. So let's hear from Allen Ginsberg, Jack's other great friend: "The art lies in the consciousness of doing the thing, in the attention to the happening, in the sacramentalization of everyday reality, the God worship in the present conversation, no matter what."

Allen is speaking in a book entitled The Visions of the Great Remberer, recently published by the Amherst based Mulch Press. Cody is a difficult and complex book, and we are fortunate that the Mulch people and Allen have combined to bring us a page-by-page commentary, as well as letters of Neal's that show him apart from Jack's own vision. It also contains brilliant pen and ink drawings by Basil King, one of Mulch's founding editors, small figures on music graph paper that in some indescriable way reflect Cody. The main show is still Allen's and he brings to bear on this remarkable book his usual generous perception, vision and love, fortunately combined with an intimate knowledge of the actual events.

There is more to Cody than brilliant description, however, for it is also an analysis of, as Allen notes, "the loss of community in America." But Jack managed to put that sociological-historical rap into one brilliant fused image of "the redbrick wall behind the red neons," of the dirty hardness, the blankness behind the artificially cozy red glow of modern neon lighting, of, as Allen writes, "the eternal presence, the suchness of the American night's empty facade..." That is what Cody is about, the frenzied agony of Jack and Neal in a decadent country, then building towards a madly obscene war. That is what the "Imitation of the Tape," is about, a surreal exposition of American culture, symbolized by B-movies and the Civil War, a piece stylistically kindred to Burroughs (written years before Burroughs made his step), but enveloped by a brooding compassion miles away from Burrough's own harsh vision. All of it, from the brilliant re-creation of Neal's story — the epic first meeting of Neal and Tommy "Snark, hunchback genius of the poolroom," to "Joan Rawshanks in the Fog," a cosmic recreation of one hour's observation of a Joan Crawford movie in the making one day in San Francisco, is about the falseness of the culture around him. And it all builds for one of Jack's most incredible passages, a chant that presages Howl in its tears for the corruption of the American dream.

America, the word, the sound is the sound of my unhappiness, the pronunciation of my beat and stupid grief — my happiness has no such name as America, it has a more personal smaller more tittering secret name... America (TEENAGEDOPE-SEXCARRING !!) is also the red neon and the things in the cheap motel — it's where at night the staggering drunks begin to appear like cockroaches when the bars close —

More On Jack

It is where people, people, people are weeping · and chewing their lips in bars as well as lone beds and masturbating in a million ways in every hiding hole you can find in the dark... It is where Cody Pomeray learned that people aren't good, they want to be bad — where he learned that they want to cringe and beat, and snarl is the name of their lovemaking... America's a lonely crockashit.

Yes, there are things 'wrong' with Visions of Cody. It sometimes lapses into miasmic dullness. There are comments that smack of anti-semitism and racism or sexism. The long tape in the middle is often astonishly monotonous. But its all real and its all truth and it tells us about our world. Read it with Allen's commentary, and learn something about America. Or just read it to read writing that often transcends the printed page, for it is about the "unspeakable visions of the individual," and you don't hardly find that amongst the redbrick these days.

bond of peace and companionship. I was just there, taking part in the celebration of a weekend. The two other guys and the squaws from across the hall started talking. It was the magic of the weed that made their tensions disperse and their tongues run freely. I couldn't understand all the words or grasp the concepts of this society, but they surely knew what they were saying.

One girl stated surely as a fact, "It is a slowly changing belief of society from the religion of a god to a religion of science and humanity." I thought of the poor Great Spirit who won't always be around like he thinks.

After a few elaborations on this point, Jeff said "If everyone was good and nobody stole from anybody, the American society would crumble because it is based on the big rip-off."

I then lit my peace pipe and passed it around. I felt at peace with these bright, young people, and especially with myself. You see, I had found the answer that I'd been searching for and my journey was over. A school is a place where people get together and learn by sharing ideas and experiences. "Blink", I was home.

ELP is on the Way (Out?)

Welcome Back, My Friends, To the Show That Never Ends — Ladies & Gentlemen — Emerson, Lake & Palmer
Emerson, Lake & Palmer
Manticore Records Limited
Time: 108:51

by David Santos

"Come Inside! The Show: About to start. Guaranteed to blow your headapart". Exactly to the point my friends. The new EL&P live album is hot stuff and worth every bit of the $12.98 price tag.

Welcome Back, My Friends, To The Show That Never Ends is an exercise in moods, superb musicianship and unrelenting energy. The critics were right, ELP were always better live than in the studio. Their four studio albums, while excellent as far as execution, production, etc., were too sterile. Put any one of their previous lp's against this baby and I guarantee Welcome will win every time. Only Pictures At An Exhibition comes close. (Needless to say, that one was live.)

Studio ELP always came ott like some electrical monster. Despite the obvious musical brilliance, they lacked the "human" quality. On Welcome, you can feel the electricity flowing between the three band members. All of them are inspired.

Side One includes "Hoedown", "Jerusalem" and "Tocatta". "Hoedown" without a doubt, could only function as an opener. It's fast and rowdy, with Keith playing with wild abandon. "Jerusalem" is superb, with beautiful Lake vocals and majestic Emerson organ. A stunning number.

The next two numbers, "Tocatta" and "Tarkus", keep the energy flowing. Both numbers exhibit amazing changes in moods, especially "Tocatta". The contrasts between the violent and peaceful sections is awesome. Carl Palmer clinches it all with his synthesized percussion solo. His work with tympani' show that Mr. Emerson isn't the only talented one in this trio. "Tarkus" features a short Moog solo by Keith and a much improved guitar passage by Gregg.

"Take a Pebble" is up next and serves as a point where Lake and Emerson do their solos. Gregg Lake does two short acoustic numbers, of which "Lucky Man" remains the highlight. His simple songs are in direct contrast with the more complex ELP material and does nicely as such. Keith Emerson contributes his "Piano Improvisations", revolving around "Fugue" and "Little Rock Getaway". He is truly a joy to watch, especially when Gregg and Carl join in for "Getaway". (During their Providence gig, ELP did "The Stripper" theme). Of notable interest is the medley of "Jeremy Bender" and "The Sheriff". The combination of the two works well and Keith hams it up during the finish, both to ELP's and the audience delight.

If any song came to be vastly improved by live treatment, it's "Karn Evil 9". Devoid of the vast multi-layered keyboard passages of the studio version, the number reaches its full potential. Greg Lake surprises us once again with more of his excellent, and I must say — much improved guitar playing. His vocal work is great too, bringing the much needed human feeling to the song. Carl Palmer comes up towards the end of the "Ist Impression" with a drum, er-percussion solo. The solo is short by most standards, but never-the-less, it's very good. He makes maximum use of all of his incredible drum kit, starting with standard drums to tympani to bells to gongs!

Above all, Keith is at his best here, with the only possible exception being the piano set. Roaming between all thirteen keyboards, he plays with ceaseless energy. He's also added some new backing chords during Lake's guitar break, which enhances the guitar. The "2nd Impression" piano piece is extended a little bit so Keith can again stretch out on his Steinway. At the end of "Karn Evil 9", Keith speaks thru the computer to answer Lake's chilling lyrics. Oddly, the "live" computer voice is much better than the Brain Salad Surgery one. Same goes for the destruction of the computer at the end of the number.

With the band members working on solo projects and serious talk of changing the current EL&P sound, Welcome serves as a perfect summation of a fabulous career. I may sound overboard about this album, but I just happen to think it's the THE Emerson, Lake & Palmer album. I've seen them live in Providence this summer, listened to all their albums, even the bootlegs, and came to the conclusion that ELP is one of the finest things to happen to rock and Welcome proves it. Nuff said. (A+++) (E+L+P+).

A note to ELP newcomers: Take it a side at a time. There is too much energy to absorb all six sides at once. It is also wise to listen to other versions of each individual number before making a judgement of the album as a whole. The changes made on this are important and deserve to be appreciated.

Eric Clapton was God once and look where he is today.

If Bach, Beethoven, etc. were living today they might well record, as advertised, on Scott magnetic tape, but you can bet your brain-candy they wouldn't sound like this; technical wizards they (EL&P, or more specifically, E.) may be — composers they ain't.

I guess what I'm trying to do is differentiate between the words 'musician' and 'technician'. I can remember when one Alvin Lee was being billed as "the world's fastest guitarist". Now what kind of recommendation is that for a musician? For a typist, maybe. Would you buy a portrait by the world's fastest painter? No, you'd hire him to do your living room (by the hour, natch). Point being that EL&P deserve credit for adapting classical music to a contemporary medium (Anybody know how many shares of Moog, Inc., they have between them?) but that's about it — so why buy recycled music? The creative spirit that produced what these boys have been leeching off of so pleasantly Does Still Exist and Create and is still doing what hasn't been done before (that being implied by the definition of the word 'create'). And for that very reason is still not especially welcome; we humans are only comfortable with what we know. But it is out there and it's yours for the price of a few growing-pains; go flap your ears at something new. Thank you, Good bless you, and god night.

NRBQ
Aces and Eights
September 19
The Hatch, UMass

Aces and Eights were in the Hatch last Thursday night, and they were bad enough to make me wish that I wasn't. Like any true BQ fan, I sat out their set of butchering most of the country folk tunes I like. Musically and harmonically, they are only a shadow of a group, with a totally unprofessional sound. It would be a good idea, guys, to make a tape of yourselves, listen to it, and start all over again.

--Tyla L. Michelove

NRBQ has changed a lot since UMass saw them last. Steve Ferguson, guitarist, singer and Southern rocker is gone off to form his own group, and he took the drummer, Tom "Timebomb" Staley with him. Mammoth Al Anderson now shuffles back into sole lead guitar, a spot he was in a year ago, while Tom "Nervous Norvous" Ardolino from Springfield, and a former rabid fan, sits in on solid, if unimaginative, drums.

The loss of Staley doesn't really hurt as he had been getting quite stale the past few years, but Ferguson had been giving the boys a wide-open attack, with his straight-from-the-hip rockabilly touch in stuff like "White Lightnin". (Collector's Note: NRBQ cut a single a while ago for famous Select-O-Hit Records. It was Ferguson's "Rumors" and "Sourpuss" and can be yourn by shipping $1.00 to Select-O-Hit, 609 Chelsea Ave., Memphis, Tenn. 38107.)

Last Thursday night the BQ's started slow, but the fans knew that things would certainly be jumping between 12 and 1 A.M. And of course they were, with great versions of Ellington's "Rockin' In Rhythm", their own "Miss Moses" and "Ain't It All Right".

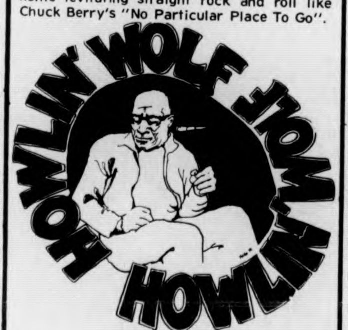
Keith Spring of Martin Mull sideman fame was excellent on sax, and brother Donn Adams was, as always, all alone when it came to 'bone.

Another Blessed eve with NRBQ.

Howlin' Wolf and His Chicago Blues Band
George Thorogood and The Destroyers
September 20
Hide-Away Lounge, Granby

The other must on last week's local music shopping list was at the Hide-Away, where Howlin' Wolf and His Chicago Blues Band played for four nights and tore it all up.

George Thorogood and The Destroyers were the opening and interim band, and settled about half-way up. It certainly is George, a street-cross of Lou Reed and Todd Rundgren, who provided all the excitement and talent in this three-man combo. Their rough edges showed when they tried to blues-boogie a la Hound Dog Taylor, thought they seem to be coming along, and they seemed much more at home levitating straight rock and roll like Chuck Berry's "No Particular Place To Go".



Even though he picked his spots (two fourty minute appearances), carried a band that could barely keept the crowd from howling for Wolf, during their solo tunes till he got on stage and even though his legendary voice is little more than a feathery growl now, Chester Burnett a.k.a. Howlin' Wolf may just be, as he was repeatedly introduced by his band, "the world's greatest blues singer".

For $3.00 you could go and sit in, despite the side show — star adulation aspects of the deal, on a legend, as Wolf sang "Spoonful", "Highway 49", "Killing Floor", "The Little Red Rooster" and "How Many More Years" (those're just the biggest) in a way no one else has ever been able. He does look like your uncle or grandfather, sitting up on stage, but he can still bring it.

If you were a blues fan, last weekend you took a trip to the Hide-Away. No two ways about it.

MORE ORPHAN THAN NOT —ORPHAN (London)

When I first played this album on my dear friend Marnie's stereo, I suggested she ask a repairman about the set. After having played it on a system whose quality I can vouch for (my own), I think I better apologize to Marnie. This album is definitely heading, at high velocity, for the bargain bins.

Orphan, Jonathan Edwards' back-up band (he also plays with them on this effort), does everything wrong that Edwards does right. Attempting such diverse sounds as Country and Western ("That's What You Said"), early Beatles ("What Goes On"), and blues ("Sometimes I Wonder About You"), the band shows that it can't really cover any of those bases adequately. Boredom, pure boredom, prevails. The only two listenable songs, "Train of Glory" and "Have Yourself a Good Time For Me", have already been done by Edwards, and would have been better off left alone. It sounds like a John Denver — B.S.&T. jam when all the instruments play together (three guitars, harmonica, drums, piano, two sax, two trumpets, organ, mellotron, and insipid female vocalists).

This album could do more damage to an unwary listener than a headache with acid indigestion. Treat it as such, (D).

SWEET LOU — LOU DONALDSON (Blue Note BN-LA259-G

The saxaphone has the reputation for producing a pleasing sound. In the hands of Lou Donaldson, this is more than true. Lou plays music typical of old black jazz musicians, but his style is what sets him above the rest. Lou incorporates in a couple of his songs ("Hip Trip, Love Eyes") some moog a la Herbie Hancock. The only displeasing thing about this album is the vocals. They do nothing but turn an easy listening song into one which is a chore. Don't get me wrong, you won't hear any great jazz riffs or any moments of saxaphone virtuosity. To quote my roommate, "This is what I'd like to hear in my dentist's office."

INTRODUCING EDDY AND THE FALCONS — ROY WOOD'S WIZZARD
United Artists UA-LA219G
Total playing time: 39:26

Roy Wood continues his dazzling career with this, his second album with seven piece back-up group. Wizzard. Wood's evolution has taken him through hard, folk, and joke-rock with the Move, through a noble but aborted "classical-rock fusion" with Electric Light Orchestra, through sheer eclecticism as a solo artist (writing, producing, and playing everything on his generally unheard classic, Boulders, and now to an Anglorific fifties 'revival' with Wizzard.

Wizzard's biggest (though rarely heard in the U.S.A.) singles, "Ball Park Incident", "See My Baby Jive", and "Angel Fingers" all had some degree of that greasy '50s feel, but never has it been as blatent as on Eddy and The Falcons where Wood wrote, produced, and arranged everything. What's possibly most amazing here is that while virtually every tune sounds like it could have been written fifteen years ago, Roy Wood shines through, defying time. "We're Gonna Rock 'N Roll Tonight" starts off with that heavy "Brontesaurus" bass, while "Brand New '88' was unmistakably written by the same person as "California Man".

There's a little Elvis, some Del Shannon, a bit of Dion, but mostly it's Roy Wood, and only Wood could pull if off and put it together this well. Vocally, lyrically, and instrumentally, it's all here with rockers like "You Got Me Runnin' " and "Everyday I Wonder" and marvelous tear-jerking ballads like "Come Back Karen". Hilarious. The production is flawless with everything sounding perfect rignt on down to the background "do do do do sha la la la ding dong's".

Though intentionally not as musically ambitious as Boulders, Eddy and The Falcons is a good shot better than last year's Wizzard's Brew, and once again affirms Roy Wood's uncanny (some call it genius) musical sense. Call it spoof, call it revival, it doesn't really matter. And you can dance to this updated teenage dream.

Allman: All Man/All Betts off

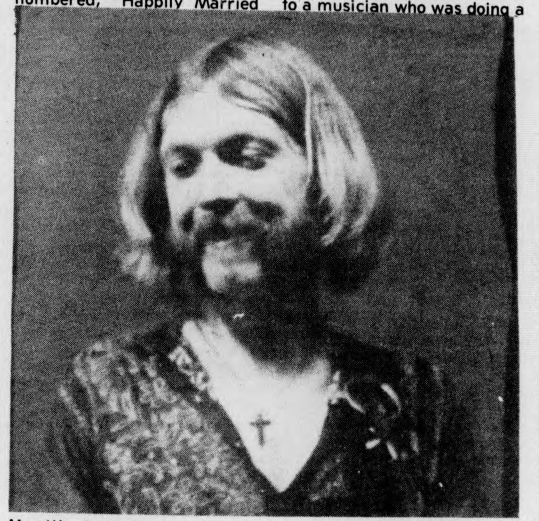
Duane Allman — An Anthology Vol. 2
Capricorn 2 CP 0139
Total playing time: 78:27

by David Sokol

In addition to his being at the center of both the Hour Glass and the Allman Brothers Band, Duane Allman spent a good portion of his professional recording career as a session guitarist, working first for Rick Hall who owned and operated the Fame Studios in Muscle Shoals, Alabama. Hall had been impressed by Duane's early Hour Glass tapes, and it was in this way that Allman became a respected and renowned sideman.

Most of Anthology Vol. 2 was recorded in Muscle Shoals and before the formation of the Allman Brothers Band. It features Duane Allman behind such Atlantic-Atco-Cotillion group artists as Aretha Franklin, Wilson Pickett, Lulu, Boz Scaggs, Delaney and Bonnie and King Curtis. Although a good deal of the material here has been available for four or five years (much of the original recordings now in the budget bins), and lacks a readily apparent essence (i.e. Lulu's "Dirty Old Man" wouldn't even have sold to Lulu fans, and one time sham, Sam Samudio's version of John Lee Hooker's "Goin' Upstairs" is shallow at best), the background guitar of Duane is sensitive, emotional, and (and this work can't be over-emphasized) tasteful. Allman's call and response with the late King Curtis on sax, during "The Weight" is beautiful and his immaculate, if laid back playing on Herbie Mann's "Push Push" saves the song from a potentially painful plight.

Anthology Vol. 2 features a number of previously unreleased tapes of Allman, two of which feature his rarely heard singing voice (Chuck Berry's "No Money Down" and his own, and Duane's compositions were very numbered, "Happily Married Man"). Side four includes unreleased takes of live versions of the Allman Brothers doing "Dimples" and "Midnight Rider".



Like the original Anthology released two years ago, this record takes the spotlight off of the original and intended center of attraction and places it, often in the background, onto Duane Allman. His session back-up guitar becomes the focal point of the music. Because many of Duane's classic performances have been overlooked or overshadowed in the past, significantly because of his sensitivity, Anthology Vol. 2, like its predecessor, is a tribute to a musician who was doing a lot more than most people realized. Although this isn't a Duane Allman album per se, it is he who makes every cut valid and valuable, demonstrating that he could make even the most mundane cut by the most lifeless artist a worthwhile listening experience. So this is a collectors item, yes, but important for guitar aficionados everywhere.

When Duane Allman died on October 29, 1971, the music world knew that it had lost one of its truly important people. It just didn't realize how important.

Highway Call
Richard Betts
(Capricon CP 0123)
Total playing time: 37:02

by Ross Nerenberg

If you're worth your salt as a music fan, you're well aware that it was Dickie Betts who wrote and sang The Allman Brothers' big hit, "Ramblin' Man." And now, from the same swampy studios located deep in the heart of Allman Country (Macon, Georgia), Mr. Betts has emerged with his very first solo album.

The opening cut, "Long Time Gone" is just what the doctor ordered to get the album off to a good start. It builds in a manner which is reminiscent of "Ramblin' Man." and it comes off well. From here on, though, it's all downhill for Betts. The remaining three tracks on side one are all dull and repetitive.

Side two is even worse. It is composed of only two cuts, both instrumentals, which, taken together have about the same general effect as Sominex, The first, "Hand Picked," drones on for over fourteen minutes, leading nowhere. The second, "Kissimmee Kid," is equally ineffective. Indeed, the only saving grace on these two cuts is the delightful piano work of Betts' sidekick in The Brothers Band, Chuck Leavell.

Taken as a whole, the main shortcoming of Highway Call is that it is too laid-back, never really breaking loose. Betts plays guitar in his usual crisp, distinct style, but that alone is not enough to make up for all of the aforementioned failures. The only thing that this album might provide is good background music to listen to while you are cramming for tomorrow's big Math exam.

At best, this is just a mediocre album, in no way measuring up to Dickie Betts' truly outstanding work with The Brothers. But it should prove to be a financial success for him, as I'm sure all you Allman freaks will hurry out to secure a copy for your very own.

SPECIAL SERVICE

Methinks Ross comes down too hard on Mr. Betts for this relaxed disc. No, it is not scintillating like the Allmans, but it certainly doesn't try to be. What Betts has played for us is thirty-seven minutes of calm, peaceful music that goes to the roots of the Allmans, the Dead, the Stones and all other southern country-blues flavored bands.

Not an instant perker, but a good old record B.

Frigat divine mushroom music

GYPSY SYMPHONY
Wendy Waldman
Warners BS2792

If Wendy Waldman's latest album had to be summed up in one word, the word would be energy. Energy (and not the electric, power-packed, blast out, blow your eardrums, Deep Purple energy) seems to permeate throughout the entire album and Wendy seems to be the source. She molds the music of up to twenty-four artists into a free, flowing, together symphony.

Wendy talks a lot about love on the album, so maybe that is where her energy is coming from. But no matter where she gets it from, she sure expends a lot in doing all the lead vocals, playing acoustic guitar and piano, in addition to all the writing and arranging. Aside from Wendy, the musician that is most prominent on the album is Barry Beckett on piano, electric piano, and organ.

The album begins with "My Love Is All I Know", a really mellow, almost spiritual, cry for understanding. "You Got To Ride" is the next song and the first real sign of the energy that is to follow. The horn and string arrangements are superb. Roger Hawkins' drum beats have made "My Name Is Love" the most popular, or at least the most heard, song on the album.

"Studio Song", starting the second side, is an excellent example of Wendy's ability to arrange an entire orchestra. "Baby Don't You Go Now" is a throaty, down to earth song featuring some above average guitar and some good harmonica. She continues into an almost country western vein (sounding a little like Poco or New Riders) Northwoods Man.

"Come On Down" is the apex of the album. Wendy has worked the entire orchestra (Is 24 musicians still a band?) into a cyclone of energy. The song captivates you from the start and moves you all the way through. It also features Maria Muldaur's back-up vocals.

After the climax of "Come On Down", Wendy does some superior vocal work on "Mad Mad Me" and "The Road Song" to complete an excellently composed, beautifully orchestrated album.

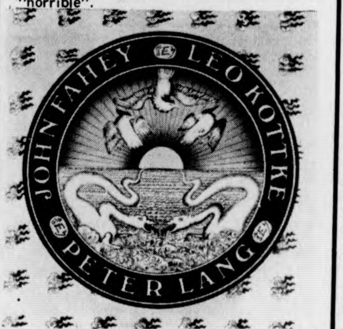
LEO KOTTKE, PETER LANG, JOHN FAHEY (Takoma C-1040)

The biggest and the best, the ultimate album from Takoma Records, the acoustic guitar players paradise? Not really.

Last spring, when Leo Kottke was playing at Amherst College, he mentioned some old rough tapes he made in 1968. He also mentioned that Takoma had old tapes of Lang and Fahey from that period and was going to release them as an album. Leo warned me the tapes were "horrible".



While he was being, as usual, overly harsh on himself, all three gentlemen have been heard in much much better form elsewhere. AND DON'T THINK ALL THREE ARE PLAYING TOGETHER. THEY'RE NOT.

A 'collector's only' C.

FOR THE LAST TIME — BOB WILLS & HIS TEXAS PLAYBOYS (UA-LA-216-J2) time 67:13

Instant history. Instant greatness. This is the chance to hear the legendary Texas Playboys on your stereo in full color, instead of those ear trumpet recordings of the 30's and 40's. Yes, this is where Dan Hicks, Asleep At The Wheel, Commander Cody et al. learned Country Swing and Sway. Bob Wills is the one who first mixed Western, blues, and all aspects of the current 1930's jazz, especially Dixieland beat, into one of the sweetest, most American musics ever.

This 'homecoming' was recorded last December, with Wills in a wheelchair, almost totally paralyzed from a heart attack. Most of the original Playboys made it back, aided by a few new bearers of the standard, such as Merle Haggard, and this is a two record package whose import and culminating impression can only be called historic. All the hits are here, from "San Antonio Rose" to "Silver Lake Blues" done up with a new lightshine.

For the last time? Wills went into a coma after the second day of the two-day reunion, and remains unconscious ever since. A tip of the white hat to one of America's great originators and intrepid souls, Bob Wills.

An 'all the way' A+

BLACK SMITH — JIMMY SMITH (Pride PD 6011)

It seems that sooner or later commercialism tends to invade the realm of jazz, in a money-motivated effort to "legitimize" this music for the mindless masses. Witness the slide of the late guitar great Wes Montgomery from the highest quality jazz to mediocre commercial-pop music. Ditto for Kenny Burrell and Howard Roberts, two fine jazz guitarists whose latest releases (disgraceful to their tradition) come complete with saccharine-sweet arrangements of pop tunes. Fortunately, it is possible for the musician to rise above the materials he's saddled with: a true artist can play garbage the way garbage should be played.

This seems to be the case with Black Smith, the latest contribution from Jimmy Smith, every organist's organist.

Although renowned as a jazz organist, Smith has tended to include a few pop things on previous releases. The apex of commercial music is contained on this recording, however, with songs like "Groovin", "I'm Gonna Love You Just A Little More Babe", "Something You Got", "Pipeline" and others.

Luckily Smith's artistry shines through on a few numbers. Believe it or not, "Pipeline" (remember The Ventures?) epitomizes the flow of ideas, the smooth transitions, the impeccable touch, the superb style of Jimmy Smith. And on the next cut, "Wildflower", Smith seduces our ears with warm, mellow tones flawlessly coaxed from the keyboard.

Of course, the anonymous context Smith works in leaves something to be desired, and not all of the songs are that successful. Unless you like an arrangement like "Groovin", where vocalists belch out the words "groovin', oh oh groovin" and also "gr-gr-gr-groovin oh" over the main body of the melody. Perhaps a little too trite to make it, as are the other two B.B. King-styled vocal numbers.

But Jimmy Smith lays down some funky things, and this is not all that bad of a time to get into him.

HALL OF THE MOUNTAIN GRILL — HAWK WIND (United Artists UA-LA 328-6)

You've heard that rock and roll is here to stay? Well it's just not true. With the advent of Hawkwind, "schlock and droll" is on the horizon.

The band seems to be making a fundamentally misguided attempt to sound spacy, other-worldly and-or occultish, but succeeding only in sounding hokey.

With instrumentation that includes synthesizers, mellotrons, a violin, sax, oboe and flute in addition to the standard nucleus of guitars, bass and drums, one would expect Hawkwind to accomplish something worthwhile. Instead, the synthesizers and mellotrons contribute only cliches to the already cliche-ridden music, and the guitars seem to function solely to pound out distorted, commonplace progessions or pointless, ho-hum bass lines. Add to this insipid lyrics and weak vocals, and the mix is complete. Hawkwind's Hall of the Mountain Grill: a formula for unadulterated garbage.

—Ken Blanchard

PERFECT ANGEL-MINNIE RIPERTON (Epic KE 32561) time: 37:26

An excellent album, Perfect Angel is the best back-to-school present you could treat yourself to. Minnie is more than a Stevie Wonder protegee, she is an artist who has amazing command of her natural talents. She has a five octave range that she uses to fantastic, and yet not extravagant effect. Soprano voices usually irritate my ears, but when she hits those high notes I come right up there with her (that's quality). Each song has a tone and a message of its own, yet the album is a cohesive whole. She weaves her voice in and out of Stevie's arrangements with ease, adding to the music, not simply singing to it.

Minnie Riperton and Richard Rudolph wrote all but two of the songs and they stand up next to the two that Stevie Wonder wrote. The songs are complete musically, lyrically and spiritually (you know she feels it and wants you to feel it too).

If you like Stevie Wonder or Syreeta Wright, the quiet, energy filled music with multi-dimentional rhythms and arrangements, then you will love this album. If you don't think you like that kind of music, borrow someone's copy of this album; you just might change your mind.

A saucerful of bootlegs

by David Santos

Pink Floyd, until their recent smash success with Dark Side of The Moon, had been primarily an underground group with a large cult following like early Jethro Tull, Soft Machine and more recently, Genesis. Of all the underground groups though, Pink Floyd perhaps enjoyed more of a reputation of being really strange.

The following is a brief summary of four of the nine exsisting Pink Floyd bootlegs. They start as early as the post- Syd Barrett days up to the Meddle studio album. I may add that these bootlegs are just as important and just as significant as any Floyd studio album. Some are all concert recordings or mixed with unreleased studio material that never made it on any Floyd album.

Omayyad is a collector's item. This is due to the fact that five out of the six cuts have never been released before. All material on this disc is pre-Atom Heart Mother. "Interstellar Overdrive" is the one that's been released before, but it justifies its place here because it is ten times better that the studio version on Floyd's A Piper At The Gates of Dawn lp and Relics. The only other live cut here is "The Embryo". You might call "The Embryo" a forerunner to a later Pink Floyd classic, "Echoes", due to the fact of the sound effects section and all around structure of the song.

The rest of the lp is made up of studio tracks that never made it on an album, not even on A Nice Pair. Again, like "The Embryo", they are the beginnings of the band's final plunge into the type of music they're doing now adays. "Oenone" is pure sound effects. "Fingal's Cave" is a short rocker is the style of "One Of These Days" from Meddle. "Crumbling Land" and "Rain In The Country" are long extended journeys into the sound effects side, though they innocently start off as straight compositions. Omayyad has to be a definite must for any serious Pink Floyd fan. (Good Sound throughout) (A)

CYMBALENE

Cymbalene is a double record set recorded around the Atom Heart Mother period. There are only four songs: "Atom Heart Mother", "Fat Old Sun", "Cymbalene", and "A Saucerful Of Secrets". On the strength of two songs, this album would easily qualify as the best collection of live Pink Floyd material to date, including the live stuff on Ummagumma. "Atom Heart Mother" takes up one whole record, while "A Saucerful Of Secrets" clocks in at twenty-one minutes. Both are excellent examples of what live Pink Floyd is capable of. The performances given here make all other PF material seem tame. Gilmour and Wright play stuff which almost defies explanation. Bassist Roger Waters and drummer Nick Mason are just as top notch as the other two. Each band member is tops in his respective field. In all, Cymbalene proves Floyd has to be one of the best bands performing today. (Good Sound) (A)

FILLMORE WEST

This bootleg is a recording of Pink Floyd's public TV concert a few years back. Material includes: "Atom Heart Mother", "Careful With That Axe, Eugene" and "Grantchester Meadows". "Careful With That Axe, Eugene" is better than the other live version on the official "live" album, Ummagumma. Same can be said of the other two cuts. Beautiful acoustic guitar picking by Gilmour and Waters during "Grantchester Meadows" and a short, but excellent, version of "Atom Heart Mother". Fillmore West would be great for any PF fan or a person who doesn't want to spend more money for Cymbalene. As can be predicted the sound is excellent, having been recorded right off the boob tube. (A)

FLOYD'S OF LONDON

Floyd's of London was taped from a BBC broadcast, so the sound quality is excellent. Two thirds of the material is from Meddle, while the remaining cut is a repeater, "Fat Old Sun". Side One is taken up by a fantastic live version of "Echoes", perhaps the band's best composition to date. Once again, Dave Gilmour's guitar work is astounding. And if Gilmour isn't enough, Rick Wright flattens you out when he takes over during the "effects" portion. On the flip side, "Fat Old Sun" and "One Of These Days" finish off the lp. "One Of These Days" is the icing on the cake. Roger Waters delivers a hell-driven bass solo about midway, with Gilmour, Wright and Mason pushing him on with sonic wonders of their own. Another definite must for the serious PF freak. (A)

FORUM 73 — JETHRO TULL (T of Q Records) — (Bootleg)

To be really honest with you, this album sent shivers up my spine. It did what I hoped it would do; that is, help me relive the concert. Captured here are the opening segments of the play: Starting with a piercing heartbeat, it eventually builds up to the resurrection of the ballerina amid celestial voices and sounds from the Moog. If you went to the concert, you'll know how effective this was with the film. With the band entering at that point, playing the rousing instrumental part of Act I, the audience goes ecstatic.

The rest of "A Passion Play" is just as good as the opening. Anderson shows off his musical prowness on his new found interest, soprano sax. Of course, he still plays a good flute! Guitarist Martin Barre is a welcome relief from the chord basher style adopted nowadays with his almost eccentric playing style. John Evan, Ian's cohort on keyboards, adds a third layer of expert musicianship with his wonderful magic at the Mellotron and Moog.

Side Three starts off with "Excerpts From Thick As A Brick", which is nothing short of being as enthralling as Passion. It's truly amazing how Anderson has arranged a complex piece like Brick into sort of "greatest hits medley". Ian does his spot on flute midway through the song and what a wonderous solo he turns in. Through the combinations of echoing and excellent musicianship, the man amazes one and all.

"Bomb In The Dressing Room" kicks off side four on a strange note. "Bomb" is one of the lost tracks from the aborted Thick As A Brick-A Passion Play double album. You can hear strains of Brick and "Hare-Spectacles" from Pink Floydish in nature. Ian plays a very gloomy flute riff which makes him sound like he's in another world. Evan seemingly brings him back, only to lose him again. When all seems like their going over the edge, Anderson and Company launch into "Aqualung". Out of nowhere, bassist Hammond-Hammond booms out the opening riffs, sounding like thunderbolts. Tull renders its usual demonic version, closing out the album nicely.

Forum '73 is by far one of the best bootlegs of all-time. Surprisingly, it is much better than the studio version of Passion, itself a great album. The audience contributes much to the music, giving one the feeling of total involvement you need to appreciate a band like Tull. This album serves as an excellent document of a concert not soon to be forgotten from a band that is nothing short of being superb. (A+).

STREET PARTY
BLACK OAK ARKANSAS
ATCO SD 36-101

This is, believe it or not, Black Oak Arkansas' sixth album and may well be the one which marks a turning point in their career. For while the Black Oak albums of the past were mainly of the loud, raunchy, make-as-much-noise-as-you-can style, Street Party is a definite indication of the group's toning down and getting into more gentle music. This is a concept which is tantamount to having Led Zeppelin suddenly switch to recording church music. In other words, it's an unexpected change.

Fontunately for the Black Oak Boys, this style change works well on some of the cuts. Unfortunately, though, on about an equal number of cuts, the group fails miserably. For while the slower, mellower music of this album is quite listenable, it is in no way memorable. There are no catchy tunes which really stick out from the others.

There are, however, a few good points worthy of being mentioned in the group's behalf. For one thing, the instrumentalization of the group is improving by leaps and bounds. "Dixie", that old Southern ballad, is done with a modern, upbeat tempo, and features some excellent Dickie Betts-style guitar work. Jim Dandy Mangrum has improved his singing to the point where he no longer sounds like a half-crocked bullfrog croaking for a mudbath. He is most effective doing the vocals on the opening track, "Dancing In The Streets", a familiar piece which serves well to open the album. "Sure Been Workin' Hard" features Mangrum sharing the vocal honors with Miss Ruby Starr (you'll remember her for her back-up singing on "Jim Dandy"). "Everybody Wants To See Heaven, Nobody Wants To Die" is a well-conceived foot-stomper high-lighted by some real fine banjo pickin' throughout.

All in all, Street Party is a fairly decent effort by the Black Oakers. Black Oak is, indeed, progressing. Only time will tell if they are doing it wisely.

OSIBIROCK — OSIBISA
Warner Bros. Records,
playing time: 36:54

Osibisa's latest effort is their best since their second lp, Woyaya. As I've mentioned in last semester's review of Happy Children, the group had been decimated by numerous personel changes and the problems that go along with it. With the release of this disc, it's really nice to see the new lineup cook like the old one.

Osibirock is an almost perfect album. There is more concentration of their instrumental capabilities and less on the vocal aspects of the band. (This is further evidence of the return to the Woyaya style.) Besides the obvious fact that there is great material on here, the "new" Osibisa have added two more members to the group, Paul Golly (Guitar) and Kiki Gyan (Keyboards). Both are excellent and finally fill out the overall sound of Osibisa, something which was noteably absent in the two post — Woyaya lps.

The best songs on Osibirock are "Why", "African Jive," "We Belong" and "Komfo (High Priest)". The latter two compositions feature some excellent flute work by Teddy Osei. Bassist Jean Dikoto Mandengue is still whipping out infectious riffs. Percissionist's Sol Amarfio (Drums) and Kofi Ayivor (Congas, etc.) are made for each other, accenting their playing well. Mac Tontoh (Trumpet) is playing much better row on this album than on Happy Children, where it was in doubt.

Osibirock should give Osibisa the recognition they deserve. They impress me as the best Third World band around today in rock. Not a bunch of glitter fakes like Earth, Wind and Fire. With an upcoming live album due out in the near future, I can see only a brighter future for the band. (A)

MIRROR IMAGE — BLOOD, SWEAT & TEARS
Columbia KC 32929
Total Playing Time: 37:26

I am hopelessly biased, I know, but I miss the old Blood, Sweat & Tears. In the core of my adolescence their second and third albums were really rather important as part of the mood of the times, and I kinda suspect that's true of a lot of you readers, too. Right? And if every group breaks up (and the Stones will, eventually, you know), some of them manage to rejuvenate themselves.

This is, I believe, the third album by the "new" BS&T — new in that only Bobby Colomby is left from the original group. And it's nice music, a pleasant album, well recorded, with some care put into it. This should be kept in mind while reading the following negative comments. Negative because, dammit, it's only a pleasant album. BS&T gave up artistic development ages ago and they've been coasting on that Big Horn Sound ever since. So in looking for positive comments to make (Which I tend to do), all one can come up with are little teensy comments. Namely — "Love Looks Good On You" would make a nice AM single because of its backing vocals; "Thinking Of You" and "Are You Satisfied" both feature somewhat eccentric keyboard instrumentation; and the title tune contains some quite interesting bowed string bass work. The rest is pleasant, as mentioned — see what the scale of values is?

Lyrically, the songs on the album celebrate the simple values, by and large; that is, when they capture your attention. Two samples from "Look Up to the Sky" may suffice: "Look down to the earth — The mother of your birth", and the refrain "There's a brighter day comin' on the other side." (Communist Propaganda?) One exception to this is "Are You Satisfied", which more or less inverts "It Was a Very Good Year" by asking if it was really.

The "Mirror Image" suite probably deserves some mention as it appears to be the focal point of the album. The suite is apparently BS&T's answer to Tubular Bells; it consists of four mainly instrumental movements of contrasting natures which run into each other, although you can see the bands on the record.

But more important than the banal material contained here is the overwhelming sense of innovations which have become trademarks. Thus "She's Corning Home" has a Modern Jazz opening, "Thinking of You" has a Big Brass instrumental, and most all of the songs have horn squiggles (or "breaks" as they are known in the industry) in between the lines of lyrics. But none are developed, none are organic to the music — it's just that, well, that's the way BS&T sounds, ya know? And finally, this album has Strings. Remember Strings? "Ya-deeEEE+ daaa..." On the sleeve it says "Strings contracted by Earl Brown". Contracted??

Now that's assembly-line rock. Pleasant, though.

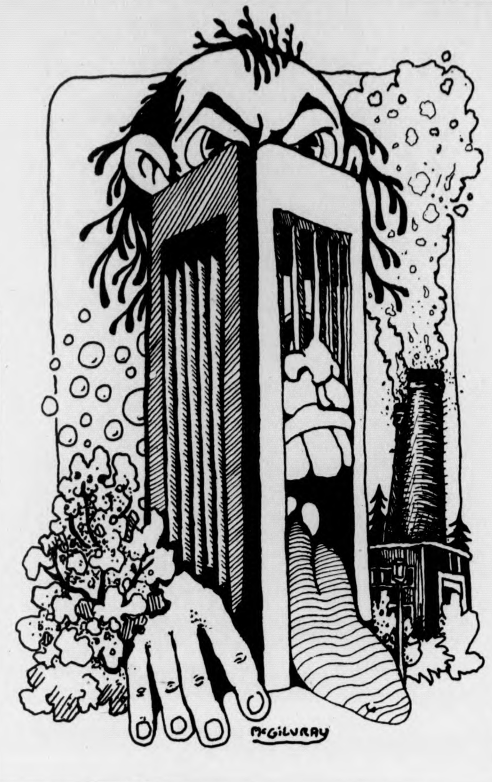
Learning to distrust words



MOLOCH

by Terminus

You are back my young ones. The words begin to swirl about your ears, to crawl hunchbacked across the pages. Soon a gas of words, an avalanche of words, to make you gag and sputter, unable to speak or sing, the senses of your springs and summers dulled.

You must learn to distrust words, my young ones, the words which pretend to be things. And you must seek out the words which reveal things by being not things but themselves.

We live where there are so many words but do we see the things which are around us? We swirl in great blots beneath huge piles of brick and concrete — have they no effect upon us? No spirit of place? Judge for yourselves. But first I Must tell you of Moloch.

You must have seen him. He lives right among us. He is the tallest thing here were the scholars swirl about, the tallest thing in the valley. He is huge and red and lives on an arid plain where cruel winds whip men about like chips of wood. Nothing grows on this plain except for the small island of stunted trees sunk deep in the lap of Moloch before the portals through which we enter his body. We can look down into this garden but few can enter it. Only those whom the cruel winds blow into the garden. Then these few, stunned, look up through the trees and bend their necks till they ache, trying to see beyond the awful, hard, red torso of Moloch, inhumanly straight, which blots out the sky and sun. They bend and bend till they see high above those seven staring, terrible eyes, deep set, cavernous, attenuated. Eyes silent and opaque.

Oh yes! The birds! Birds too are sometimes seen in the garden. Limping aimlessly about beneath the shrubs and trees. Helpless till one of Moloch's minions comes out by special leave to take the cripple in to add to the sacrifices. The birds, of course, strike the unyielding flanks of Moloch because of the strange and cruel winds which blow about them.

"Who is he?" you ask, though you pass by him each day or see him looming above your dormitories. What is Moloch to you? You will not fall in the garden you say. You are not a crippled sparrow.

But you enter within Moloch, all of you. Your mothers and fathers send you here as offerings to him. Moloch calls for you to fulfill his merciless sacrifices. But your mothers and fathers do not see the dangers because Moloch holds out the light of knowledge for them and you. The light of knowledge to end the dark years of puzzlement and ignorance. Knowledge in turn for the endless sacrifices; knowledge in turn for the gagging on words. For watching the hunchback words writhe and copulate on the pages. The price Moloch pays for the youthful bodies which feed him is knowledge, words.

He must feed us knowledge and words to fatten us for the sacrifice. So besides the youth which enter through the front portals of his belly he also takes in fodder. Fodder to fatten the sacrifices. Fodder that crawls with ant-like words. Book fodder. "Where does it all come from?" you ask. Oh, it's hidden, all hidden. It comes underground into his belly from the west.

So Moloch feeds us knowledge and words and we give him our youth. And this keeps Moloch going there on the plain. Keeps him hard and hostile, remote and inaccessible. Red and strong on the plain. Pushing the winds about and the lost, crippled sparrows. OUr new knowledge sustains Moloch and builds other Molochs and his spirit and his awe and his power spread over the earth. Power to move the earth, to fly above the earth, to destroy the earth. He gives us the power. But not the wisdom to use it well. This is not Moloch's concern. Knowledge without wisdom is Moloch's gift. Power without human purpose.

But no, you say, No! The wisdom is there. We are told it is there. There in the books that lie within Moloch's belly. This is our wisdom.

But I say, No! Eat no more of the book fodder. Do not look at the ant-like hunchback words that crawl across Moloch's parchment colored entrails. Wait. Wait until the sacrifices have ended and wisdom begins to come from the words.

Till then look beyond words to things. Look at Moloch's inhuman, red torso. Look at the seven sunken eyes, opaque and silent. Look at the trees which shrivel and die from the winds which swirl about Moloch. Look deep within the grates which lie about his flanks. Deep within, you see they are empty except for the faint reflections in the stagnant water, reflections which mock our enquiring faces.

All else is silent and unmoving about Moloch. Except for the winds, the drunken weavings of the crippled sparrows, the swirling masses of you, my young ones. But do not forget to look at the swirling steam which pours out of the east side of Moloch. This is very important. Almost the key. It swirls out and sweeps away, weaving the wind as it goes. Can you understand it? No. But it is all the wisdom of Moloch.

This is the spirit of place of Moloch. If we are to fight it and transform it, how we must struggle with that knowledge deep in the belly of Moloch! What a terrible struggle for wisdom and love!

the long cracing necksnake of humanity

THE HARD TIMES COLLECTOR — Critique

This tale certainly begins effectively enough, quickly putting the grab on our attentionias we enter the first sentences of the story. The descriptions of the characters, as well as th3 physical descriptions, are quite skillfully done, with the "redfacedilrishwoman", managing to portray not only a concrete image of a person, but a particular persona⅜, A PERSONALITY, DISTINGUISHES HER SOMEWHAT FROM THE OTHER CHARACTERS DESCRIED. The long "cracing necksnake of humanity", an almost poetic conjunction, is very effective here, especially ic context with the general theme of the work. Here, there are definite drawbacks. Weiar3 struck once again, as with many short works, with its brevity. We get theifeeling that something vore is to be said in the encyclopedia about Maurice Baur, and the author's strict adherence to the dry, historical account of the story in chronological sequence is not, qerhaps, complete. The historical style itself is not altogether consistent in itself, consideringithe very colorful and varied imagery in almost every paragraph.. and a compromise between the two stqles seems to result in actual completion of neither. Settling down to one ione of voice, (whichiappears to change about vid-way through,) that oroughly expressed, whether it is as iournalistic or narrative film . . . film . . . Death Wish eviewed by Jeff Paulin

DEATH WISH
Starring Charles Bronson, Vincent Gardenia, Hope Lange. Directed by Michael Winner.

The city resident, and the paranoia which can plague him, both real and psychological, is the topic of Michael Winner's film, Death Wish. The paranoia here is a result of the growing crime rate uplifted by a wave of muggings, robberies, and rapes. Paul Kersey (Charles Bronson), a well-established architect, returns from a vacation in Honolulu with his wife (Hope Lange) to their spiffy Riverside Drive apartment. A few days later, terror strikes in broad daylight. Mrs. Kersey and her daughter are followed home from a shopping spree by three young derelicts and violently attacked. In a scene visually reminiscent of Kubrick's A Clockwork Orange (but not as funny), Paul's wife receives a fatal concussion and his daughter is sexually assaulted, a shock from which her brain will never recover.

Paul is sent on a business trip out to Arizona by his company to hasten the recovery process, but the thing he learns out there provides him with the spark of retribution. His business associate, a native Tucson man, informs Paul that the smartest way to "deal with varmints" is to own and learn how to brandish your own gun. In a further attempt to stress this practice, Paul's friend gives him a gift-wrapped revolver as a going-away present.

The first night he is back in New York he is approached by a mugger. The confrontation ends when Paul throws a wild swing at the assailant, who takes to his heels pronto. From this incident Paul climaxes his new realization of what should be done, and the following evening he sets out on what is to be a long search-and-extermination campaign against muggers.

After the first three killings, the City Police Department undergoes an investigation, headed by a flu-bothered but witty lieutenant (Vincent Gardenia). Within the next few weeks, the mugger murders start to pile up, and soon all the national mediums are clogged with extensive coverage of the mysterious "Vigilante", as Kersey is coined.

The reality of this murder rampage is that the citizens are reacting in unanimous favor of the Vigilante's actions. The crime rate drops down considerably, and revengeful New Yorkers follow suit by arming themselves with whatever is available and going out into the streets searching for hoodlums. The police and courts are thereby unclear on the appropriate actions to take with the assassin once he is caught.

The film appears to be so real that it is like watching a documentary, but there are a few cinematic faults which prevent Death Wish from becoming a masterpiece. To begin with, Winner's portraits of the muggers suffer from stereotyping and too much artiness. They are always young males who are quick on their feet, muttering original lines like "Let's go man, yuh got the money?" and "This is it, baby, you're all through!" I was half-expecting to see them snapping their fingers in unison.

Another fault is the plugging of Charles Bronson into the lead role. The plot and theme are solid enough to support an unknown actor, and in such a case where the Vigilante is supposed to represent the average citizen, Bronson just does not jell. His feelings towards not only the killings, but even to what happens to his family, are barely perceptible. Sure, a sturdy man will more likely undertake such plans, but I believe that the casting of a common-looking businessman whose passions transform into malice as the film goes on, would have boosted Winner's idea even further and might have made the film more appealing to the audience. Many people (at least in this country) still do not like Charles Bronson.

Aside from these faults, though, the movie is very worthwhile to watch. The cinematography is frightening, carrying us up stairs and across sidewalks as if our seats were on roller skates. Herbie Hancock scores the jazz-piano music, and excluding a few scenes which would have been more effective silent, it is well-incorporated. The depiction of the mass media coverage is extremely graphic, showing us Time, Newsweek, and billboards devoted to the "rise of vigilantism", and at one point the police lieutenant appears on the cover of a People magazine.

Death Wish, although being a well-made film, leaves one problem hanging somewhere in my brain. What happens when everyone in a city takes the law into their own hands? People begin to shoot each other in haste, since too many citizens are out looking for trouble. As a result, a grating of paranoia more rusty than the original slides up between the urban dwellers, and fear, instead of being eliminated, is violently reinstated. The point can be argued for years, but a viewing of Death Wish should turn you in one of the directions.

Hold it; there's someone at my door. Should I let him in?

CAST

Porthos — Frank Finlay
Athos — Richard Chamberlain
Aramis — Oliver Reed
Richelieu — Charlton Heston

Constance — Raquel Welch
Lady Dewinter — Faye Dunaway

All for one and one for all! Once more that cry rings out in the new movie version of The Three Musketeers. But if you are anticipating a serious adaptation of the Alexandre Dumas novel, you won't find it here. British director Richard Lester has saved his comedic flair from his Beatle movie days. However, Lester manages to combine broad comedy with the serious business of telling the tale of the King of France's gallant guardsmen.

The beautiful countryside, the slums, and the palaces of 16th century France are the settings for the story of the young Gascon D'Artagnan who aspires to be a Musketeer. This chapter "The Queen's Diamonds," is the account of country-boy D'Artagnan who falls in love with Athos, Porthos, and Aramis, falls in love with the Queen's maid Constance, and falls into the palace intrigue, all in short order. Before the movie ends, D'Artagnan has fought many a duel, accomplished a dangerous mission, thwarted the sinister Cardinal Richelieu, and proved himself worthy of becoming a Musketeer.

The film's pace is fast, the action spirited, and the sword-fights realistically staged. It's easy to tell the good guys from the bad, the good wear black, the bad wear red.

Because the plot itself was most important, development of character was secondary. Most characterizations were one-dimensional. This was in spite of the well-known actors and actresses in the major roles. Of primary importance was that the leading men be handsome and dashing, the women sparkling and beautiful. The most interesting acting was done by the "character" actors in the minor roles.

This version of The Three Musketeers presented the time period as accurately as posible. As action was of great importance in this movie, what better way to maintain it then by showing the sports of the day; jousting, hawking, hunting, and duelling.

Seeing the movie the second time, I was able to notice how wonderfully Michel LeGrand's musical score contributed to the film. His stunning compositions added immensely to various scenes, particularly during the swordfights and chases.

For those who couldn't get enough of this light-hearted romp through French history, you are in luck. Since the original movie ran over four hours, it was cut in half, the latter segment made into a sequel entitled The Four Musketeer or "Milady's Revenge".

Media Massages

"Previews of Coming Attractions"
by Stuart Sojcher

So far, the year 1974 has been a good year for motion pictures. The main reason of course — money. More people are going to the movies and consequently profits are up. Movies such as The Sting, The Excorcist, American Grafitti and Papillion were all big moneymakers in the early part of the year. And surprisingly this summer was a good one for the studios as they distributed some good films and scored with Chinatown, That's Entertainment, Death Wish and Uptown Saturday Night.

Now one might ask what is in store for the fall and winter the obvious Hollywood answer would be — when you find a money-making formula stick with it. The end of 1974 and the first five months of 1975 should be titled 'the year of the sequel'. In all, between now and Easter, thirteen sequels will be released. Along with that heavy dosage of things past the Hollywood moguls will be offering two types of pictures with 'variations on a theme' — the disaster movie and the hijacking and-or kidnapping movie. One will not lack for exciting entertainment.

Add to this the continued re-release of past hits, more recently: Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid and Dr. Zhivago and soon to come, Cabaret, along with old movies such as Jeremiah Johnson undergoing a new distribution process; and one sees that this could be an even bigger year for Hollywood.

The film most people anxiously await is the sequel to The Godfather, the biggest moneymaker of all time. Once again Francis Ford Coppola will be directing Al Pacino, Robert Duvall, Diane Keaton and others including Robert De Niro who gave such a fine performance in Mean Streets.

Another huge moneymaker a few years ago, Airport, has a new chapter appropriately entitled Airport 1975 starring the omnipotent Charlton Heston and a gallery of other stars. Heston will be seen often over the next few months; he will appear in Earthquake, a disaster film concerning the destruction of Los Angeles and also in The Four Musketeers, the sequel the The Three Musketeers as the devilish Cardinal Richilieu.

Other biggies include Gene Hackman recreating his Oscar winning role in The French Connection II set in Marseilles; The Poseidon Adventure II; Roger Moore in his second 007 role, The Man With The Golden Gun; Barbara Streisand in Funny Lady (sound familiar); and The Trial of Billy Jack, slated for the largest satuartion booking of all time.

The disaster films include plenty of big stars which obviously explains Hollywood thinking. Put a star(s) in a movie with a decent story and a lot of money for spectacular effects and how can you lose? Warner Bros. and Twentieth Century Fox obviously feel that way as they have invested around ten million dollars in partnership with each other on The Towering Inferno. The stars' salaries alone are enough to finance at least one film. Steve McQueen and Paul Newman are receiving a cool one million apiece plus a percentage of the gross for their efforts. Other stars include Faye Dunaway, Richard Chamberlain, William Holden, Fred Astaire, Robert Wagner and O.J. Simpson.

Richard Lester's Juggernaut starring Richard Harris and Omar Sharif, will be opening very soon. The film concerns a storm-racked luxury liner with three tons of explosives placed aboard. Others include George C. Scott starring in The Hindenberg (the destruction of the transatlantic Zeppelin) and Swarm dealing with an insect attack.

For those with a bit more than entertainment on their minds, Ingmar Bergman's Scenes From A Marriage; Fellini's Armacord; Antonioni's The Passenger starring Jack Nicholson; Alain Resnais's Stavinsky, Bunuel's Phantom of Liberty and Malle's Lacombe Lucien will all be released soon.

On a lighter note Woody Allen will be back shortly in a film directed by Martin Ritt (Sounder). Mel Brooks will continue his zaniness in Young Frankenstein along with Peter Boyle and Madeline Kahn. And for any kung-fu fans, Bruce Lee's final film The Return of the Dragon has been released and should be around soon.

Uptown Saturday Night

UPTOWN SATURDAY NIGHT
starring Bill Cosby, Harry Belafonte and Sidney Poitier.
Directed by Sidney Poitier
reviewed by Jim Paulin

In this star-stacked gangster-comedy and partial Godfather satire, a night on the town in the swankest place around ends up leading Bill Cosby and actor-director Sidney Poitier stumbling around the local underworld in search of a stolen wallet, which unbeknownst to the thiefs, contains a winning lottery ticket.

The most outstanding gangster of the many they encounter is Gootchee Dan Buford (Harry Belafonte) who, throughout the picture, speaks as if mocking out the Godfathers nasal monotone. Dan suffers from congested sinuses and, for treatment, snorts from an inhaler every five minutes.

Cosby and Poitier move through the streets like an inept Mission Impossible team and skirmishing with the mob as if they were the three stooges having pie fights with dignitaries at a society ball.

Flip Wilson is perfectly typecast as a righteous preacher, persistently insisting that his parishioners not bring brown bags (booze) to the church picnic and inveighing against the maliciousness of gossip.

There are tinges of intergang disputes over territory as in the Godfather, but they're not flavored with pints of blood and slow motion reactions to the impact of a bullet. The only violence in the movie is a slow motion shootout in a bar, the only real casualties being whiskey bottles; and Geetchee Dan's car is set on fire when he's not in it.

This movie is rich in good, solid comedy. Poitier, with his bug-eyed reaction to threats or surprise and Cosby's constantly flowing wit maintain the fun throughout the entire length of the show.

Uptown Saturday Night is now appearing at the Mountain Farms Mall Cinema.

Dr. Strangelove Not one of Peter Sellers best, but one of Stanley Kubrick's better efforts as director. Short and sweetiy, the movie concerns a man who has trouble with his right hand — it keeps jumping up and doing the Nazi seig heil. This man, who, incidentally is played by Sellers, also has a fixation on conquering the free world. Good sick humor marred only by its datedness. At the SUB, Sun. 7 and 9. 50 cents. +++

A CLockwork Orange. Typically well-produced Kubrick. A valiant effort at following up the masterpiece, 2001, Good viewing whether you look at photography, directing, acting or production. Once again, Kubrick presents highly defined individual scenes, that, as one unit, offer just enough ambiguity to allow the viewer the opportunity to become a part of the communication process. At the SUB, Thurs. 9-26 7+9 p.m. 50 cents ++++

The Parallax View. A sign of things to come — reporter heroes instead of the typical super-soldiers, super-cops and super cowboys. The plot entails reporter Joe Freyday (yes, Joe Freyday), played by Warren Beatty, and his envolvement in investigating the assasination of a high U.S. political figure. Credit good direction technique to Pakula, especially for his feeling of effective contrasts in sound and color. At the Amherst Cinema, 7+9 p.m. +++

HAROLD AND MAUDE (1971) +++

This film has mysteriously found a cult for itself among varied audiences out West, after a virtually ignored premiere three years ago. The story concerns a rich little kid who finds temporary happiness with an 80-year-old woman, played by Ruth Gordon. The pair goes on expeditions of fun and sick pranks, driving their spectators up the wall. Director Hal Ashby's point about discovering life comes through a bit muddy, but the films still interesting viewing. At the Campus Cinemas.

THE LONG GOODBYE +++

Elliot Gould plays a gumshoe detective in this updated version of a Phillip Marlowe story. Directed by Robert Altman, who has yet to get the credit he deserves. In the Ballroom on 9-19 at 7 and 9:15.

LOVE HAPPY (1949) +++

The Marx Brothers in one of their last films. It's a musical comedy interwoven with a plot concerning jewel thieves. Not one of their best, but Harpo's unusual antics are worth the price of admission. Billed with A Night in Casablanca at the Campus Cinemas in Hadley.

MY NAME IS NOBODY (1974) +

A poor attempt on cashing in on Blazing Saddles' comedy-western success. Henry Fonda plays an aging gunfighter in this italian-made saga, who gets competition from a young sharpshooter. The satire is aimed at the recent crop of Clint Eastwood "man with no name" westerns and Sam Peckinpah blood-baths, but either the jokes are funnier in Italian or the screenwriter fell asleep because the only intense feeling I could derive from the show was rock-hard ass. At the Mountain Farms Four.

THREE MUSKETEERS (1974) ++

A disappointing counterfeit of the Alexandre Dumas' novel famous for its creation of the three gallant swordsmen who fight to protect the Queen's Diamonds. The star-studded case includes Michael York, Richard Chamberlain, Oliver Reed, Charlton Heston, Faye Dunaway, and Raquel Welch, but everybody is wasted in their respective bit parts. Topping this off with an uncalled for heist of every visual technique used in Ken Russell's film The Devils and not a not-funny-enough script, the film is forced to buckle in its own swash. At the Mountain Farms Four.

UPTOWN SATURDAY NIGHT (1974) +++

Sidney Poitier tries his hand at directing Bill Cosby, Flip Wilson, Harry Belafonte, and himself in this comedy about two friends who try to get back a winning lottery ticket stolen from them in a gambling house. Funny scenes abound, but the loose direction keeps this one out of the superfunny category. At Mountain Farms Four.

ALFREDO, ALFREDO (1973) +++

A very funny Italian comedy starring Dustin Hoffman as a henpecked-to-be husband. Dubbed in English. At the Showcase Cinemas in West Springield.

ANIMAL CRACKERS (1930) +++

Not my favorite Marx Brothers flick, but of course there has never been a bad one. Groucho is Captain Spaulding (horray!) and if you're fortunate to catch a decent print, you might be able to hear some of his best vibes with the various stuffed-shirts. Harpo is insane; running around in his underwear, goosing the guests, and sitting in on an incredibly ludicrous poker game with Chico. Zeppo is in his only funny scene, but still takes the rap from Groucho, who is dictating a letter to him. The only flaw in the film is the direction, as you feel you are watching a dress rehearsal of the Broadway play it was based on. At the Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

(1974) ++++

Richard Dreyfuss of American Graffiti fame, stars in this extremely funny story of a young Canadian Jew striving for success. A few anti-Semitic bits, but one has to be satirical when dealing with religious customs which are unfamiliar to a large segment of the audience. Exciting direction by Ted Kotcheff makes this an upcoming biggie. At the Showcase Cinema.

BUSTER AND BILLIE (1974) ++

One of the more recent rip-offs of the American Graffiti formula. Slightly different in the respect that it deals with one couple instead of twenty of them, but the story could have been deposited into the 1960's just as easily. Whatever happened to good old originality? At the Academy of Music. 7:15 + 9:15.

DEATH WISH (1974) +++

People are raving about this new Charles Bronson movie for some reason, and a viewing should explain why. It deals with a wealthy architect who takes the law into his own hands and calmly shoots muggers off the streets after his own wife and daughter are assaulted. The question is: how do you stop the growing crime rate in a big city, through the police, or through personal protection? The film favors Bronson's actions, and usually the audience follows suit. The idea is cute, but the portrayals of the muggers are too stereotyped and West Side Storyish. Still, the acting shines and the New York City photography provides a spellbinding background for the shenanigans. Michael Winner directs his first winner. At the Showcase Cinemas, West Springield.

DOCTOR ZHIVAGO (1966) ++++

Epic saga of a striving Russian medical man torn between two women during the heart of the Russian Revolution. David Lean's direction is superb taking us from Moscow to the EAstern Grasslands and smack through a blistering Siberian snowstorm. Omar Sharif stars as Zhivago, with Julie Christie, Alec Guiness, Rod Steiger, Tom Courtenay and others smoothing out the case. Excellent script, art direction, and haunting music. See this on a side screen for the fullest enjoyment. Winner of six Academy Awards. At the Showcase Cinemas.

Montague NUKE plant now slated for 1982

From Staff and Wire Reports

Citing financial troubles, Northeast Utilities yesterday announced it has been set back one year in development of twin nuclear power plants in the Montague Plains, fifteen miles north of Amherst.

The announcement means the plants will be completed in 1982 and 1984 instead of 1981 and 1983 - the original timetable. Construction was to start in the late seventies if the Atomic Energy Commission gives approval.

Northeast spokesman Charles Bragg said the decision was "totally unrelated" to the court case of Samuel H. Lovejoy, who was found innocent Wednesday of toppling a weather tower at the Montague site.

Northeast President Lelan F. Sillin, Jr. said in a Springfield press statement that the action "has been forced upon us by a serious decline in our earnings and general financial condition."

Sillin later told The Greenfield Recorder the decision was made at a utility's board of directors' meeting last Thursday evening.

However, he emphasized in the statement that Northeast remains committed to nuclear power as the cheapest long term energy source. He said the company would continue its efforts to obtain a license for the Montague project from the AEC.

The delay, apparently only included construction, not application procedures.

Rape report increase due to hot line

By ROBERTA MARTONE

A rape program that was established at UMass two years ago, is beginning to show profit, according to Diana White, special assistant at the UMass department of public safety.

The major improvement is the increased number of reported rapes, due primarily to the installation of a rape hot line, open 24 hours a day, seven days a week, said White.

"People can call anonymously, or they can call and press charges," she said.

White stressed the importance of reporting a rape or an attempted rape. The information is kept confidential, and may assist in locating the rapist. Any description of the man, place, and time is also useful.

According to White, an investigation usually discloses that the same person has committed more than one rape. Also, most rapes at UMass have been committed primarily by students.

In addition, the rape program consists of lectures given by White and others at various dorms on campus. The program also includes, (on request) six-week courses in self defense, given at Boyden and WOPE. White and several other officers conduct these demonstrations.

This fall, a pamphlet on rape compiled by the department of public safety here, with the cooperation of the Hampshire County District Attorney's office, is being distributed. The pamphlet discusses the reporting of a rape, evidence the police need to convict a rapist, and what happens to the rapist. These pamphlets will be available in the dorms and the Public Safety Department.

White said she feels a major breakthrough in the rape situation is the mandatory establishment of a rape program and a rape line at all police departments. This law will be enforced as of January 1975.

A mandatory training program will also be established, said White. Officers will be required to attend courses on what to do in case of rape.

"Before, officers just had to know how to fill out a rape form. Now, more substantial training will be required," concluded White.

Room-to-move cut back

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

Room-to-Move drop-in center has been forced to cut back on its services to the UMass community this year due to a cut in funding.

Coordinator Ron LaFrance stressed that the center will maintain its quality, but not its quantity. "There will be fewer hours, and fewer workshops," he said, "but they'll still be good ones."

Room-to-Move, presently in its sixth year of operation, has been funded by a $37,000 per year HEW grant for the past three years. This grant has now run out, leaving the state and several on-campus groups responsible for making up the deficit.

$20,000 in work/ study funds from the state was awarded to the center through Health Services, but this money can only be used to pay people in financial need, for which only two staff members qualify.

"We've been able to resolve this problem somewhat by reallocating the monies within Health Services," said Barry Averill, director of Health Services. "We're now down to $9,000 in work/ study funds."

"Last year we had 17 paid people," said LaFrance. During the summer we lost eight. We can't attract and hold the number of qualified help we need to fill these vacancies because we don't have the funds to pay them with."

LaFrance stated that the staffing problem should be resolved in a few weeks. "It will take time to train last year's volunteers along with some new ones we've taken on," he said, "in order to get us back up to the level of quality services we were providing last spring."

Being unable to staff three positions will affect the center's work with blacks, veterans and alcoholics. "This will force us to reallocate our personnel situation," LaFrance said. "We'll have to reorganize our structure."

In addition to cut-backs in staffing, Room-to-Move will not be able to fund its speakers program, or its education program which has been in existence over the last five years.

"We have presented such speakers as Ronald Lang and Yogi Bagaan, as well as sponsoring a symposium on self-personal growth," said LaFrance. "Now we will not be able to do that."

The education program refers to the training of residence hall staff for counseling positions.

Room-to-Move is a highly respected counseling facility on campus. "A student senate survey conducted by Project Pulse rated Room-to-Move as the second most important service on campus," said LaFrance.

"We were also rated as the most well known campus drop-in center by a Department of Public Health survey," he added, "and 95 per cent of those surveyed who used our services would recommend us to someone else."

HEW has reviewed the Room-to-Move programs and designated three as being successful. These are the peer counseling and residence hall training programs, and the advisory committee. The committee acts as a go-between for the professional community and the student.

LaFrance noted that the lack of funds has hurt the center's morale. "All that uncertainty about what services we'll be providing, and who will be hired has created an energy drain," he said.

Counter-summit offered tonight

In an effort to provide alternatives to the analyses and policy proposals forthcoming from President Ford's "Economic Summit" (to be held this weekend), the Union for Radical Political Economics (URPE) is sponsoring "Counter-Summit: A Teach-in on Inflation and the Economic Crisis" tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

The main speakers will be Mike Best, Jim Crotty and Rick Edwards of the Department of Economics. In addition there will be a panel of graduate students and faculty from the departments of Economics and Political Science who will answer questions during the discussion periods which will follow each presentation. Everyone is welcome, and there is no charge for admission.

Repairs require water turn off

On Saturday, all of the water in the Student Union Building will be turned off between the hours of 8 a.m. and 2 p.m. so that a necessary connection into the main water supply can be made.

The building will remain open and all areas operating with the exception of the Hatch and all the toilets which will be closed during those hours.

Student union craft shop now open six days a week

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

Due to increased staff coverage at the Crafts Shop in the Student Union instruction and workshops in craft techniques will be offered six days a week, according to Penny Worman, supervisor of the shop.

All instruction is free, she added, and students pay only for the materials they use.

The increased staff coverage makes more supervised instruction possible; workshops and demonstrations are given in ceramics, silver working, lapidary stone cutting, and photo darkroom techniques several times each week. Times are posted inside the crafts center for these workshops. Leather working instruction is available at all times, she said.

In addition to the ongoing instruction, special seminars in photo silkscreen, making sheepskin jackets, batik, and various other subjects are being planned. Watch the notices section of the Collegian for further details, Worman said.

Supervisor Worman also hopes that having more staff members in the crafts shop will help stop ripoffs, saying "Students "borrow" many small tools to complete projects at home and never return the tools." As an example Worman cited the fact that there were once 50 leather stamp tools available and now there are six left.

She called the rip-offs "a nuisance, because then students must go without." No replacements will be bought until people stop stealing the tools.

The crafts shop is financed by students, as part of the Campus Center fee. In the four years of its existence, the craft shop has never needed a budget increase. Surprisingly, material costs have not risen. The price of leather is the same as last year, and the price of silver has gone down "like the stock market". Material cost to the student is as low as possible because the crafts center is non-profit, Worman said.

Worman estimated that at least 8,000 students use the craft facilities each year. The peak use is just before Christmas, when large numbers of students converge upon the crafts shop to make presents (almost always a leather belt.) Students are encouraged to start making their presents early in the season while the center is still relatively uncrowded.

UMass land covers seven towns

By DAN LABONTE
Staff Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst is a misnomer. It actually encompasses a total fo 3,800 acres of land spread throughout Hadley, Pelham, Sunderland, So. Deerfield, Belchertown, Levert, and East Wareham.

Places as familiar as Alumni Stadium, Farley Ledge, the atheletic fields, the lower parking lots and even part of the Physical Plant aren't even in Amherst. They're in Hadley!

In the immediate vacinity UMass maintains some 1,270 acres of land which spans from North Village up past the railroad tracks by Tillson Farms all the way down beyond the Stadium right into Hadley, according to Joseph Wayne, a spokesman for the Physical Plant.

The property contains over 200 different buildings, including three apartment complexes (University Apartment., Lincoln Apartments, and North Village) owned by the University.

In neighboring towns, according to Wayne, UMass utilizes about 2,500 acres of satellite land tracs, devoted primarily to agricultural research. This includes 1,200 acres (Cadwell Forest) in Pelham, 725 acres (Mt. Toby) in Sunderland, some 364 in So. Deerfield, 220 in Belchertown, and in Levert and East Wareham 29 each.

Jazz jam planned by John Walker

BySHERWOOD THOMPSON
MDC Staff

The newly developed jazz jam session which was created by John Walker, trumpeter, and musical director of John Walker's quartet, will hold it's second session on Wed., Oct. 2 at the Blue Wall, from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

The purpose of the event, Walker said is, "to provide an opportunity for students in the UMass community to listen to and participate in an art form which is an original expression of music in our country."

When asked about the objectives and intentions of each jazz session, Walker said,"there are three areas of immediate concern - first, it is important to provide the UMass Community with a jazz jam session so that students will have a chance to improvise, with a professional group before a receptive audience; secondly, the programs will expose the surrounding areas with an art form, that is unique and native to our land; and the third major object is to propagate and educate the surroundings areas in music of a jazz tradition, from an applied approach."

The first jazz jam session which was held, sparked an involved interest in the audience. There were ten participants from the audience, including drummers, a saxist, and a bassist. Although ther were no vocalists present who participated, a very interesting and educational instrumentalist opened the minds of many as he expressed and explained his knowledge concerning his musical instrument called the "Bonbard."

For those present, the night continued to develop progressively as the same musician demonstrated the techniques used in circular breathing, and the concepts that are applied

When asked about next week's function, Walker said Professor Archie Shepp, musician-lecturer, will be a guest participant in the jazz jam session. The emphasis will be placed on Ballads and Blues of Black Music.

In conclusion, Walker said "For a person to learn to blow his ax, he needs a place to perform regularly, I am trying to provide such an environment.

Former counsel for Angela Davis to speak

Attorney Harold R. Washington, counsel for Angela Davis during her struggle in being released from solitary confinement while incarcerated in a New York City prison, will be speaking Sunday at Amherst College.

Washington, a graduate of Howard University and Harvard Law School, will be conducting a lecure on the plight of Martin Sostre, who has been serving a timely, unjust imprisonment. Attorney Washington will analyze the judicial and historical contexts of the Sostre case and how alleged and false charges can become convictable "crimes."

Washington currently holds the position of executive director of Roxbury Defenders Committee, Inc., which acts as the primary source of criminal representation for indigents in Boston's black community. A year ago, he was instrumental in the publishing of The Martin Sostre Essay, "The New Prisoner" by the North Carolina Central Law Journal. Washington has maintained a diligent involvement through the course of Martin Sostre's long imprisonment.

The community is strongly urged to come hear Washington and learn more about this black political prisoner, Martin Sostre. The film-lecture presentation will be presented Sunday at 8:00 p.m., Black Studies, Fairweather Hall, Amherst College.

FIVE COLLEGES...

Busing, meals top coordination board agenda

By E PATRICK MCQUAID
Staff Reporter

Inter-college busing was discussed at the first of several proposed meetings of the Five College Coordination Board yesterday afternoon at the Amherst College campus headquarters.

Other food for thought revolved around clarifying the meal exchange program instituted at the different colleges opened to all recognised students.

The Coordination Board announced a change in bus scheduling. A full account of all changes is due for publication this Monday and the Collegian will print a detailed copy.

One noticable improvement will be a direct Smith College-UMass Campus Center service to be initiated Wednesday. The bus will then proceed to Amherst College and will arrive five minutes before the hour so as not to conflict with class timing.

All pertinent information concerning the transportation situation will be posted on the bulletin boards located at each bus stop Students are advised to keep alert of all notices.

The problems of overloaded buses and other complications also arose at the meeting. Director North Burn said "If students could somehow convince themselves to spread out and not take the buses at the same time it would solve the major problem."

Another issue was the business of passengers carrying pets and-or bicycles on board the buses.

"Pets can not be tolerated," continued Burn, "They, and bicycles can't be accommodated with the over-crowding situation as it stands. Last semester a bus driver was forced to stop because the vehicle could not make it over a notch in the road. The bus couldn't physically make it! It's absurd when this happens."

Many students are unaware that they are capable of obtaining meals at the different campuses. Lunch may be taken at a dining hall provided the student has positive identification; however, students must first file with the various food service offices located at the different schools.

Dinner and breakfast can also be obtained provided the student has a legitimate reason for being on that campus.

Finally, the possibility of a Five College periodical or newsletter was discussed. Representatives from the Collegian, the Amherst Student, and the Smith Sophian attended and strongly favored better relations between the five newspapers. A separate journal confining itself strictly to Five College material will be discussed at further meetings.

5 college chief quit to directly meet ed problems

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

North Burn says he will resign as Five College Inc. Coordinator no later than June 30, 1975. Burn was appointed the first full-time coordinator in 1967.

He said he is resigning "to seek a position in which I have more direct and explicit authority for dealing with the problems of higher education." He also said there will be value in getting new blood into the Coordinator's position.

North Burn

Five College, Inc, is a cooperative arrangement among the five colleges in the area, (UMass, Amherst, Smith, Mount Holyoke and Hampshire Colleges). It's one of the oldest cooperatives in the country. Burn said that he has no ulterior motive in resigning. "It is a facinating job and if I was doing something else and someone offered me the job, I would want to take it."

Burn feels the operation will benefit from a new approach. He said it is for the "well-being of myself as well as the well-being of the Corporation." Burn added, "I have been in the job for almost eight years and have an urge to try something else."

According to Burn, the purpose of Five College, Inc. "is to enable each institution, with its limited resources to provide the best possible education for its students and wider intellectual opportunities for its faculty." This is accomplished through cooperative purchasing and academic planning.

The Five College Astronomy Department has developed out of this academic planning.

Cooperative purchasing has resulted in the private colleges having terminals in the University's research computer as well as joint purchases of certain periodicals and serials for the libraries.

The Five College Bus System, WFCR and the Hampshire Inter-Library System are supported by joint funds from the five colleges.

Burn said Five College, Inc. has a budget of one million dollars and committees of each facet appropriate funds within that facet.

Burn also said the cooperative exist to increase educational resources in the Valley without undermining institutional identity."

Burn sees his job as one that "tries to assist institutions individually and collectively to find ways of taking advantage of each other." He said, "Anybody who has a bright idea can suggest it and I get the appropriate people together."

Burn sees himself as "a channel of communication, "I persuade, not direct." He spends his time meeting with the presidents of the Five Colleges and with various Five College groups. He is directly responsible for the budgets of the Bus System and the Five College Astronomy budgets.

After Burn resigns, he said, "I will be looking into college presidencies where my responsibility would not be dependent on others to the same extent." Burn sees that kind of job as "a more direct way to effect change in a single institution."

New Inter-college bus schedule arrives

ByDONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

Earlier arrivals at all colleges on Bus Route 2 is the most significant change in the Five College Transportation Committee's revised bus schedule.

There will be 20,000 copies available today at the Campus Center Information Desk and posted at all the bus waiting stations, however, the schedule will not go into effect until Wednesday, Oct. 2.

The new schedule illustrates all four routes on one folded sheet. Separate sheets with single routes have been available since the beginning of the semester.

In the revised schedule, the bus on Route 2 will leave Smith College 20 minutes after the hour instead of the previous 30, which means the buses will arrive 10 minutes earlier at all colleges.

Bob Soule, transportation chairman of the Five College Student Coordinating Board (FCSCB), who devised the schedule, reminds all riders not to use the No. Pleasant St. waiting station across from Morrill Science Center.

"It is no longer a Five-College Bus Station, because the University informed us that they were going to close off Stockbridge Rd." he said.

The stations now designated as Five College Stations are at Southwest and SBA. The Campus center Station across from the parking garage is also used but only for daytime and evening runs.

Soule said the complain cards were influential in the schedule revision. He stressed the importance of the complaint card system which has already enabled the FCSCB to successfully lobby for such improvements as the half hour runs, additional weekend and evening service and direct Smith-Holyoke and Smith-Hampshire routes.

He urged the use of the cards saying it was the most effective way to bring problems to the attention of the board, which keeps in regular contact with the Transportation Committee of the Five Colleges, Inc.

At UMass they are available at the Campus Center Information Desk and should be mailed to Whitmore. Soule emphasised that every complaint will be given individual attention.

Soule added "we need students with class 2 licenses to drive new student - run busses." Interested persons should call 256-8316.

Globe editors to speak Monday

Thomas Oliphant and Robert Healy, "Boston Globe" editors, will speak Monday, Sept. 30, at Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, in the second public lecture of the series "The Presidential Crisis: View from the Press."

The talk will begin at 8 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium and will be carried live by public radio station WFCR (88.5 FM). Questions from the audience will also be broadcast following the talk.

Oliphant is an assistant metropolitan editor of "The Boston Globe's" morning paper, and Healy is executive editor and political editor.

In his six years with the "Globe," Oliphant has been a White House correspondent who concentrated on the Nixon administration's economic policy, and in 1972 was a traveling reporter with presidential candidate George McGovern.

In May 1970 he was assigned to cover the protest movement following the Cambodian invasion, and the following summer he worked on the Pentagon Papers story. Early in 1973 after accompanying a small group which parachuted supplies to Indians occupying Wounded Knee, Oliphant was indicted by a Federal grand jury on three Riot Act charges. The first reporter so treated for attempting to cover a story, he won dismissal on all charges.

Healy began covering Presidential terms with Dwight Eisenhower and continues today, commuting almost daily between Washington and Boston where he also covers political scenes. His award-winning career includes a Pulitzer Prize for his teamwork investigation into Francis X. Morrissey's qualifications for a Federal judgeship. He started with the "Globe" in 1942, was named political editor in 1963, assistant executive editor in 1965, and executive editor in 1969.

Kidnap threat received

Secret Service protected Kennedy children

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A kidnap threat against "Kennedy blood" prompted the Secret Service to provide protection for six of the late Robert F. Kennedy's children in Boston last week, it was reported yesterday.

A spokesman for the Treasury Department, of which, the Secret Service is a part, said the "temporary, limited" guarding of the children, along with their cousin, Chris Lawford, was carried out Sept. 14-20.

The spokesman said the Secret Service took the action because of a "potential kidnaping threat against the six children of Robert F. Kennedy" received through the FBI in Boston.

Ethel Kennedy, widow of Robert, has 11 children and the spokesman said he did not know the names of the ones who received protection. Six of them live in the Boston area, and it was reported there that the threat was directed at "Kennedy blood."

The move was considered unusual, since under law only the children of former presidents receive Secret Service protection.

The Treasury spokesman said the department received word of the threat on Sept. 13. But Dick Drayne, spokesman for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy who as the only surviving brother looks after the affairs of the entire family, said the senator's office was notified on Sept. 12.

Edward Kennedy announced in Boston Monday that he would not seek or accept the 1976 Democratic presidential nomination, citing family concerns. His son, Ted Jr., is undergoing treatment to prevent the spread of cancer that necessitated the amputation of a leg.

The Treasury spokesman said: "I don't know which of the children was the target of the threat. So all in the Boston area received protection."

He said there also was brief protection for Lawford, a student at Tufts University and son of actor Peter Lawford by his first wife, Patricia Kennedy.

"On Thursday, Sept. 12, this office was notified by the FBI in Boston that they had information that there was a proposed conspiracy to kidnap one of the children in the Kennedy family. The identity of the specific members of the family was not disclosed. The FBI informed us that security measures were being taken. Any further questions should be referred to the FBI in Boston."

Drayne declined to discuss the incident further "because it only leads to further threats to the children."

John F. Kennedy Jr., son of the assassinated president, still receives Secret Service protection, as did his sister Caroline until she turned 16.

Rocky criticized for actions on abortions and Attica revolt

Compiled from Wires

WASHINGTON — Nelson A. Rockefeller was criticized yesterday by Senate witnesses who claimed his wealth and his handling of such issues as abortion and the Attica prison revolt make him unfit for the vice presidency.

Members of the Senate Rules and Administration Committee, who reportedly are ready to recommend Rockefeller's confirmation, asked polite questions and gave no indication the criticism would change their positions.

Angela Davis, a co-chairperson of the National Alliance Against Racial and Political Repression, called Attica "one of the most wanton massacres in the history of the United States." She said Rockefeller is responsible for the 43 deaths and 80 injuries that occurred as a result of the uprising.

Representatives of anti-abortion groups said Rockefeller's policies as governor of New York have made him a national symbol of what they called "permissive abortion." They said his confirmation by the House and Senate would be a signal that the United States government officially condones abortion on demand.

Another witness, Sen. Jesse Helms, D-N.C., told the Senate he does not believe that Rockefeller as a public official can divorce himself from his family dynasty.

"We are in fact asking ourselves whether we want the highest political offices in the land to be identified with one of the highest concentrations of private power in the land," he said.

After hearing about a dozen public witnesses yesterday Rules Committee Chairman Howard W. Cannon, D-Nev., recessed the hearings. He said they would not be reopened unless it was necessary to question Rockefeller again after an Internal Revenue Service report on his finances is completed.

The IRS, meanwhile, informed the Rules Committee that its report on Rockefeller's taxes would not be ready until the third week in October-a development which appeared likely to put off Senate action on the confirmation until after election day.

Palestine guerrilla groups split on settlement issue

By United Press International

The extremist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, first of the Arab skyjackers, split guerrilla ranks yesterday by withdrawing from the executive committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Ahmed Yamani, spokesman for the Marxist guerrilla group, told a news conference the PLO had deviated from revolutionary policy and had become "subservient to reactionary and capitalist regimes."

He said PLO leaders had made secret contacts with the United States and were conditioning the Palestinian people to accept a settlement "that will lead to the expansion of U.S. influence in the area and concede the existence of Israel with future guarantees of its security and stability."

The PELP, most radical of the Arab guerrilla organizations, leaped to notoriety with a series of spectacular airliner hijackings starting in 1968 when it forced an Israeli El Al airliner to land in Algeria. Israeli freed 16 Palestinian prisoners in exchange for the plane and its passengers.

The most famous hijack was in 1970 when PELP guerrillas blew up an American airliner at Cairo airport and three other Western airliners in the Jordanian desert.

In recent months, under its ailing leader George Habash, the PELP has emerged as leader of the guerrilla "rejection front" - opposing any Middle East settlement that falls short of the return of all of Palestine to the Palestinians.

After the PELP announcement yesterday, the Palestine Liberation Organization executive committee met in Beirut under its chairman, Yasser Arafat. It issued a statement saying the PLO regretted the PELP decision "at a time when the PLO is fighting its biggest political and military battle against the enemies and realizing victories on both the Arab and international levels.

In Cairo, where new Egyptian Premier Abdel Aziz Higazi formed a 38-member cabinet, government sources said Egypt will agree to a six-month renewal of the mandate of U.N. peace-keeping forces stationed in Sinai but refuse to end the state of war with Israel plending a final solution of the Middle East crisis.

Egypt will do so "not to please Mr. Israeli Premier Ytzhak Rabin, but because we are still set on a peace course," one source said.

The sources said they expected Syria also to consent to renewal of the mandate of the U.N. Disengagement Observer Force on the Golan Heights which expires Nov. 30.

Shah of Iran defends right to set prices

By United Press International

The Shah of Iran said yesterday in the strongest reply yet to President Ford's attacks on skyrocketing oil prices that no country can dictate its oil policies.

The Shah, on a visit to Australia, told the National Press Club in Canberra that Iran was willing to negotiate an international treaty tying the price of oil to 20 to 30 other commodities, such as food and other basic materials.

"If the prices of these commodities go down, our oil will go down," he said.

"We are ready for serious talks on that subject."

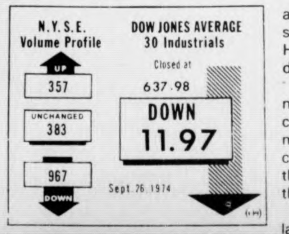
But, he said, "nobody can dictate to us, nobody can wave a finger at us, because we can wave back.

While it was "absolutely vital" for Iran to stay friendly with the United Statess because of their "arsenal of nuclear arms, " he said, Ford's remarks criticizing the upward spiral of oil prices were "not at all acceptable to Iran."

"We will be ready to provide our energy resources against the Westinghouses and General Motors and General Electrics and all the other generals they have," he said.

The Venezuelan Mines Ministry disclosed in Caracas Thursday that because the prices of its crude oil is below that of Middle East producers, taxes on foreign oil firms may be increased more than the 3.5 per cent hike decided on the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Export Countries. The decision of OPEC to boost royalties paid by the oil companies comes into effect for the last quarter of 1974.

The ministry said in a study that Middle East producing nations had been able to get as much as 50 cents a barrel more for their oil then Venezuela because of participation agreements worked out between the oil companies and producer nations.



Calley release stirs criticism in Saigon

SAIGON [UPI] - Vietnamese reaction to the U.S. court action overturning the conviction of Lt. William Calley in the massacre of dozens of civilians at My Lai was strongest yesterday in the area itself, 300 miles north of Saigon.

One old woman, who was there at the time and now lives in Saigon, said: "That man killed our people. He deserves to die, as my daughter died."

But most Vietnamese language newspapers did not even bother to carry the story, government and military spokesmen declined comment, and the average citizen thought the incident was a thing of the past.

The My Lai incident took place late in 1968, on a fertile plain linking Quang Ngai to the sea.

"Calley? No, I don't remember the name," said a mechanic in Saigon. When his memory was jogged, he added.

"I thought they (all the Americans involved) went to prison for life."

Most critical were former American servicemen in Vietnam.

One, a former Special Forces sergeant, said: "A soldier, an officer in the U.S. Army, executed or wounded indiscriminately a number of civilians. For that, he himself should be executed. But with new morality in the States, and the pardoning of Nixon, and of those who refused to fight in the Vietnam war for their country, it is not surprising that Calley got set free."

An American who served in the 173rd Airborne Division in The Quang Ngai province, said:

"Calley is just one of those people who got caught. We did similar things all the time. But if one guy - Nixon - got stroked, then Calley should get it, too."

Duong Van Kim, a farmer who is a relative of a former Vietnamese general, said:

"Yes, I remember My Lai, but it's so long ago and it has faded with time so much. Well, it's something that's finished, right?"

Nguyen Manh Hoa, a prison official, said Vietnamese people have too many other things to worry about.

NAACP director Wilkins admonishes Boston busing

BOSTON (UPI) — NAACP Executive Director Roy Wilkins said yesterday "Boston ought to be ashamed" at the way court-ordered desegregation has proceeded during the past two weeks.

"And they call this the cradle of the abolitionist movement," he said.

Education went on with only minor disruptions during "the most peaceful day" of the first two weeks of a court ordered plan to integrate Boston's public schools.

Wilkins, who arrived just before classes ended for the day, toured the predominantly black Columbia Point housing project where he held a news conference with Boston NAACP Director Thomas I. Atkins.

"The quality of enforcement by Boston police has not been adequate," Atkins said. He repeated earlier statements that federal marshals might be needed if Boston police cannot bring the situation under control."

Wilkins said he would support a call for U.S. marshals if Atkins made one.

There was only one arrest during the school day and that was for a minor incident. No fights, injuries or stone-throwing incidents were reported.

Citywide attendance at Boston's 200 public schools remained virtually unchanged, with school officials reporting a 75.4 percent attendance rate Thursday, compared with Wednesday's 75.5 percent. The figures do not include kindergarten students.

Uniformed and plainclothes police patrolled the corridors at Hyde Park. Officials said there was no recurrence of the fighting that disrupted classes last week and resulted in the closing of the school Friday.

"It was the most peaceful day of the school year," said Police Commissioner Robert diGrazia. Hyde Park Headmaster John Best, with whom diGrazia has frequently disagreed, concurred.

Buses filled with black students arrived and left without incident. Police lined the bus routes while motorcycle police provided armed escort.

"The kids will be the heroes in this if it works," Lincoln said.

Sawhill may force oil refiners refund

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Federal Energy Administrator John C. Sawhill said yesterday he hopes to make six major oil refiners refund $40 million in excess charges which consumers paid earlier this year because of a loophole in FEA regulations.

Sawhill told a House subcommittee he also has rejected an additional $292 million in claims which refiners, taking advantage of the loophole, planned to use to justify possible future petroleum product price increases.

The overcharges and claims resulted from a provision written into crude oil allocation rules early this year which in effect let some companies recover their costs twice.

Chairman John D. Dingell, D-Mich., of the House subcommittee on activities of regulatory agencies, said he is pleased by Sawhill's assurances.

Dingle said, however, that three days of hearings failed to show who was responsible for creating the loophole. He announced plans to request appearances by Henry Petersen of the Justice Department and Treasury Secretary William E. Simon in hopes of setting responsibility for it.

Dingle expressed concern that Petersen's Criminal Division had not probed vigorously enough into allegations that Robert Bowen, a Phillips Petroleum Corp. emoloyee loaned to the FEA staff for a year, had been involved in a conflict of interests while working on the regulation which contained the loophole.

But Sawhill said the FBI has given top priority to investigating the allegations.

Summit opens today

WASHINGTON [UPI] - President Ford, preparing for today's economic summit conference, was told by his economic advisers yesterday that the battle against inflation will take 18 months to three years.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen reported that prediction on the eve of the long-heralded two-day conference of top economic leaders from business, labor and government. He said Ford's advisers also expressed the opinion that the nation is no longer beset by fears of depression.

Arabs told to unify

LONDON [UPI] — The Kremlin has told the Arab nations they must cooperate with the Soviet Union to force concessions from Israel.

The call was made in Communist, the official journal of the policy-making central committee of the Soviet Communist party.

"The results of this cooperation have shown that when the Arab states consistently come out together with the Soviet Union in the struggle for their rights the Israeli aggressors have less scope for maneuver, and have to make concessions," it said.

The publication called for "precise commitments" for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from all Arab lands occupied in 1967 and said such clearcut commitments must be laid down in any document that may be adopted by the projected Geneva Middle East peace conference.

atomic security hit

WASHINGTON [UPI] Responding to fears that U.S. atomic weapons could be stolen by terrorists or unfriendly powers, the Pentagon said it is considering a vastly expanded security program that may cost $90 million.

Rep. Clarence D. Long, D-Md., earlier this week added his name to a growing list of public officials citing deficiencies in the measures used to protect thousands of atomic warheads stored in this country and abroad.

Colson asks pardon

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Former White House Special Counsel Charles W. Colson, now in prison for a Watergate-related crime, has asked President Ford for a pardon, deputy presidential press secretary John W. Hushen said yesterday.

Colson's request was sent to the Justice Department, which will study it and make a recommendation to the White House.

Northeast delays Montague NUKE completion to 1982

An Atomic Energy Commission spokesman contacted by phone by The Collegian said it was "too early to tell" if NU's announcement would have an effect on the utility's application.

"They indicated that they want to review process to continue," said M. Claire Miles, an AEC public information officer in Bethesda, Md.

She said she could not comment on whether NU's financial shape would have any effect on the application.

"One of the things submitted for our review is their financial qualifications, but we wouldn't be making any judgement on it until our review is completed," she said.

A spokesman for the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution, which has filed to intervene in eventual public AEC hearings on the Montague plants, was not surprised at the utility's announcement.

"We've known for a long time that they were in serious financial shape," said Diana P. Sidebotham of Putney, Vt., president of the Coalition.

She said "nothing is changed" as a result of the postponement, that hearings should go on schedule when an AEC review of NU's construction application is completed.

Northeast, the supplier of 30 per cent of New England's electricity, originally hoped to begin building the giant $1.5 billion twin boiling water reactors late next year.

"Until rate levels and revenues are sufficient to support our capital improvements, we have no choice but to take these actions," Sillin said. "The consequences, unfortunately, will be a deterioration in reliability and in the availability of electrical service."

Northeast is the holding company of several operating utilities in Connecticut and Massachusetts, including Western Mass. Electric Co.. WMECO serves Amherst.

In August 1973, Northeast reported 12-month earnings totaling $67 million, or $1.48 a share. This year, earnings slipped to $35 million, or an average of $.76 a share, according to Associated Press.

The change reflects a general decline in profits for utilities nationwide.

Sillin said the quadrupling of fossil fuel prices, construction costs and big interest rates were combining to make expenses outpace the revenue generated by rate increases. Additional rate hikes pending in Connecticut appeared to be inadequate, he said.

The company said it is reexamining its timetable for construction of Millstone Unit No. 3 at its Waterford, Conn. nuclear facility. Transmission line and substation construction may be cut back as well.

Company spokesman Eugene Sturgeon was not available to The Collegian for comment. But he told the AP there would be no cutbacks in the power supply this winter.

Sarge NUKE talk Saturday in Springfield

Gov. Francis W. Sargent will address the annual meeting of the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution Saturday afternoon in Springfield, his press office said yesterday.

A spokesman said the Governor would discuss nuclear safety during the public address at 3 p.m. at the Springfield Natural History Museum, 236 State St.

Diana P. Sidebotham, Coalition president, said sargent's topic would be what the state can do about nuclear safety. Sargent set up a blue-ribbon panel last spring at a speech on the UMass campus to monitor safety for the state.

He is expected to talk about the work of the panel.

Seeing is believing

By RICHARD WRIGHT

A few years ago, I heard a night club comedian challenge the audience to recollect whether any of them had ever met someone from Wyoming. He continued with the train of thought by questioning whether or not anyone had ever seen a car with a Wyoming license plate. When no one was forthcoming with a response it became a comic medium for him to elaborate on his theory that Wyoming was simply a hoax perpetrated by map makers. The humor was genuine because Wyoming has such a small population in relation to the rest of the country, that the odds that anyone in the audience would blurt out a response was remote, thus preserving the comedic timing for the entertainers routine.

The same question he raised — whether we can offer personal testimony to the actuality of an objects existence, or an incident's occurance — brings to mind other challenges for consideration. For example, do you know for a fact that the C.I.A. exists? Do you know anyone who works for the C.I.A.? Have you ever received a letter with their letterhead? What about the University's Board of Governors? Can you identify any of them by name?

It's amazing how much information we ingest daily that is of a heresay nature (and of course in a judicial proceeding, heresay is the same as non-existant), yet we give it the full force of indisputable fact. If the Collegian accuses a University official of misconduct, we have to rely on the same source for any rebuttal that might be forthcoming. If the Washington Post accuses the Executive Branch of a cover-up, we must rely on the Post to print the Administrations reply. This is not to say that I chose to impeach either the Collegian or the Post's honesty or fairness, for I sincerely believe that they, along with most reputable publications can document their impartial presentation of relevent rebuttal stories and commentaries. Rather, I point it out as an obvious problem that the reader must bear in mind as he or she absorbs the heresay comments of new reporters and journalists.

The same faith that most of us have that Wyoming is actually out there near the Rocky Mountains (if in fact they exist either) is the same that lets us believe what the papers tell us. Perhaps it is fair to say that the responsibility lies with the reader to continually challenge his new source in every way he can. Much is being said lately about the Eastern Establishment Press with its left of center biases. Despite the apparent, and quite readily admitted editorial biases, the press looked on as the conservatives moved into the White House in 1972 with its strongest popular majority of recent years. The press faced a situation where the majority of its readers were not in league with the left of center viewpoint. This points to the peculiar background that lead to the bitter crossing of swords between the press and the President. Readers must be wary of the implicit shortcomings to be expected from a press that has seen its viewpoint stifled by both the electorate and the elected. It is surprising that the tone rose to one of a whining threat that America was doomed due to its own ignorance. As is often the case in any disagreement, if you can not convince your adversary of the errors of his position, then resorting to volume and emotion becomes an almost involuntary response.

The press must endeavor to present the issues forthrightly, objectively, and completely as possible; but only the readership through its own collective response can insure that the press remains open, free, and competent.

Richard Wright is a Collegian Commentator

Letters to the editor

More support for Ms. Burns

To the Editor:

We wish to express our disapproval of your article of Sept. 18 concerning the International Programs Office and more particularly Mrs. Burn. First, we hold it for deplorable that the University student paper, responsible for upholding the standards of respect in the academic community, should deem comments so resembling a personal attack fit for print, outside the limits of the editorial page. Secondly, we wish to express the opinion that the remarks about the Office or the people who work there are based on a total lack of understanding of the role or of the kind of work done there. Having participated in the challenge of the yearlong exchange program at Freiburg University, we have appreciated the active interest and aid for our plans. Mrs. Burn's organizational competence in the matters of foreign higher education and her staff's continual energy and readiness to be of help are remarkable. Thirdly it seems to us that the complaints about room and board mentioned in the article are typical of many American students' unwillingness and lack of imagination in accepting the differences between Europe and the United States. Italy seems to be the notorious example for those Americans who would like to have their experiences spoonfed to them and have yet to realize that there are other things to feed upon in Florence beside breakfast. In a university where bureaucratic measures and technicalities are a daily frustration, the failure to recognize the dedication of those people who really care about making our education livable seems utterly misplaced.

Bank bureaucracy

To the Editor:

I was distressed to find the myth of the First National Bank of Amherst's exclusive UMass payroll-check banking arrangement perpetuated in last Tuesday's article on an on-campus bank [Collegian, Sept. 24, p.3]. My husband and I were given that "impression" when he joined the faculty in 1969 by both the University and the First National. The odor of a monopoly, together with a won't-bother-to-try attitude toward securing us the type of checkbook we required, sent us elsewhere. We found that the University could deposit a paycheck in the Hampshire National Bank of South Hadley and that this bank was willing to meet our checkbook needs. It is our understanding, and experience, that the University will deposit paychecks in a bank other than the First National, if specifically requested.

It was of interest to us also that the Hampshire National was reported to be the only bank in the Amherst area willing to handle food stamps when the use of banks here for distribution first came up. It is very possible that the UMass community might be better served in that Campus Center by the facilities and the attitudes of a bank like the Hampshire rather than the First National.

Fleet foolish

To the Editor:

Re: Eric Fleet's "Ecological Ignorance"

"The environmentalists, for the most part misguided, are being led by a highly educated core of elite activists...this group, of one political persuasion, desires to bring about the economic destruction herein described...What they could not achieve through social legislation, dissent, and violence, they are not achieving in the name of ecology."

Does the Mary Tyler Moore generation have to cop the slogans of the Ozzie & Harriet generation? Couldn't the Devil, that communist-turned-environmentalist, be exorcised with an original formula? I suspect that Mr. Fleet admires Mr. Lovejoy quite as much as do the rest of us.

Kissing Blarney good-bye

[LOU] — Edward "Teddy-Bear" Blarney, Professor of Pleasure Studies at UMie, announced his "firm, final and unconditional" withdrawal from the presidential campaign for the Society to Prevent Inflationary Beer Prices.

Blarney thus ended hopes, doubts, predictions and speculation that in 1976 he would follow the path of his cirrhossed brothers, John and Robert, by seeking the nomination.

"I reached this decision after discussion with my wife and other members of my family," he said. "I have chosen to announce the decision now in order to ease the apprehensions within my family about the possibility of my candidacy, as well to clarify the situation within my department."

Blarney's wife, Stone, sat by his side. Although she looked tanned and relaxed, Ms. Blarney is under treatment for mental stress from her job as cashier at the coffee shop in the Campus Center, hitched from Northampton to hear the announcement. Their twelve-year-old son Teddy-Bear had his larynx removed this year for voicing his anti-comparaitive neuro-phenomonolgy opinions, and is undergoing treatment for learning how to communicate telepathically amidst the cosmis vibrations from the Fine Arts Center.

Blarney did not mention Chappalipstick in this three minute opening statement, but the 1969 fatal accident of Mary Jo Godeckme, where Blarney allegedly hit her with a beer bottle after she called him a Male Chauvinist Pig, had been a factor clouding Blarney's leading position among other possible nominees and derelicts in the Blue Wall.

"My family needs me as a father image," said Blarney. "I don't want my daughter reading about the insinuations over the Chappalipstick Incident, and thinking that I am an MCP. Hell, I want her to grow up and become a normal mother and housewife."

Blarney continued, "A presidential candidacy would make me less sensitive to my son, who must live on the 22nd floor of John Adams until the Physical Plant can fix the elevator so he can get down."

As a presidential candidate, Blarney would have been continually hounded by the Chappalipstick incident. In this sense, he would have been essentially in the same boat as was Mr. Blecchson, when in the last months of his Presidency, was accused of squandering departmental funds for taking women students out to the TOC, known infamously as the Beerbridge Affairs.

This "mix of everything" drew Blarney to his decision, although he claims that the threatening phone calls concerning his future health if he does run, have nothing to do with it.

"Plus the fact," Blarney concluded, "My mother doesn't want me to."

Straight talk

The following is part of a conversation held some place around campus. Perhaps someone knows if the meeting was a hemispheric one.

Washington: Ladies and Gentleman we want to proceed with the business of this meeting. Let me see, right at this time we cannot answer any letter, but say hi to Bolivar. The most important issues to deal with now are the ones of the unity of the Hemisphere on behalf of the benefit of millions of citizens and the creation of new ideas in how to deal effectively with each country.

Munoz: I have a question? Should we allow mass media here. Your Free Press is not controlled by the administration, in order to preserve and include more people in the tradition of freedom of the press.

Washington: Companero, out of order. Don't get stuck in the action, especially when many people have not been receiving their payments. In those circumstances who should want to have press?

And now Mr. Franklin will be talking about the next point in the agenda. That it is the request of first class citizens by Francisco Ramirez.

Franklin: Well, as you know Francisco has been one of those who wants the benefits of first class citizenship. However he wasn't born here but, has stayed around for many years. The reasons we don't know, since he has not talked about it.

Pierre: Monsieur, will you as Mr. Francisco Ramirez, tell us what the challenge in life was to make him take that choice.

Francisco: Ladies and Gentleman. Mister Chairman, I appreciate your generosity and your good faith. As you know everybody makes mistakes; many times however we are able to overcome them, and achieve the original goals desired...

Franklin: Do you want a machine...

Francisco: No, I still think that the environment could be more effective.

Franklin: Well, we are not going to insist on it.

Washington: Can we go ahead in the agenda please.

Francisco: Yes, sir. As I was explaining before, I don't think that a second handicap or double citizenship could be the equivalent of a first class citizenship. Only when people have equal responsibilities and duties, but also benefits and rights, is when we can exercise and understand what is this country is supposed to represent for millions of people.

Washington: We will be talking about that very soon. And now I would like to entertain a motion or questions, if any?

Munoz: Oh, yes la pregunta. As Franklin's brother said. Seguro, man. FREEDOM FOR THE PRESS.

BNS and BMCP

In Amherst, unmistakable, the voices heard in the Pan-Africanist community are those of the Black News Service (BNS) and the Black Mass Communications Project (BMCP). These two media organizations are student-run communications training and placement projects, working collectively with various campus and community groups.

BNS's function concerns the training and placement of news reporters, layout personnel, and photographers.

BMCP's function, on the other hand, involves the training and placement of newscasters, radio DJ's, programmers, engineers, and technicians.

Each group assigns work projects to all persons interested in assisting in suitable and relevant communications programs. Such groups as the Collegian, WMUA and WFCR radio stations have been previously serviced by BNS and BMCP.

The Black News service provides an additional service, which is preparing and distributing articles, special coverages, documentaries, features, and news releases to various campus organizations.

Both media groups invite the Pan-Africanist Community to inquire about the functions and services which are provided the the Campus Community. Information can be received by calling the New Africa House Cultural Center at 545-0794.

Equal justice?

By BEZALEL DARSHAN

Amid the many agruments for and against the pardoning of former President Richard Nixon, one consideration stands out, and that is that the former President would not be able to get a fair trial in this country. In the words of President Ford, "...I am compelled to conclude that many months and perhaps more years will have to pass before Richard Nixon could obtain a fair trial by jury in any jurisdiction of the United States under governing decisions of the Supreme Court."

Now, we were all aware that Mr. Nixon, or for that matter, any former government official, could never hope to get a fair trial in Washington, D.C.; but many of us thought that there were still places in this land — perhaps the Florida Keys, or Puerto Rico — where justice could be done for these people. Unfortunately, President Ford, who has thought long and hard about the matter, reluctantly concluded that this is not the case, and we have no choice but to defer to his judgement.

The real question that now arises is not whether or not Mr. Nixon should have been pardoned, but rather: What is this country coming to when powerful government officials cannot receive a fair trial in the courts? What has become of our institutions? Our ideals? The dreams of the Founding Fathers of equal justice under law for all Americans, regardless of their background, religious affiliation, or income?

And it is not just former Presidents and White House aides who cannot receive a fair trial in this country — let us not delude ourselves — the same is true of directors of multi-national corporations, international financiers, and the most highly placed men in the Pentagon. Robert Vesco could never get a fair trial in America, and Mitchell and Stans knew that. By their actions they meant not to obstruct justice, but to do the best they could in a situation where justice was unobtainable.

The sad truth is, and the work of the so-called counter-revisionist historians is making this increasingly clear, that the wealthy and the powerful have never had a fair chance in American courts. There has long been a double standard in the administration of American justice, with one set of procedures used for radicals, political activists, and members of minority groups on the one hand, and another set of procedures for the ruling elite on the other hand.

For example, Americans can look with pride to the trial of the Rosenbergs, held at the height of the McCarthy era. These people, accused of passing atomic secrets to the Russians, were executed only after the most exhaustive and careful review of their case. Great lawyers such as Louis Nizer have gone so far as to single out the Rosenberg trial as the classic example of the American system of justice at work.

And there were many such trials of alleged subversives held during the McCarthy era — very many. And these trials have continued down to our own day, with such scrupulous concern for the rights of the accused, and with such generosity of spirit, that many times the same people have been brought back to trial again and again, just to ensure that nothing less than complete justice prevailed. What a contrast these great trials form to the shoddy and summary treatment that former Vice-President Spiro Agnew only recently received at the hands of the courts! Or to the trial-by-press and the unfavorable publicity that the I.T.T. and the milk producers were subjected to.

Many people will say, "Well, all this may be true, but after all, I am not a member of the government or a corporate vice-president — why should I be concerned?" Yet history teaches us that where there is not justice for government leaders and corporate vice-presidents, soon there will be no justice for local officials and middle-level management; and so it will go until finally we will arrive at a day when not even an avowed Communist can expect to get a fair trial in this country. Who then will be left to say, "I told you so"?

Jail: Inside looking out

By PATRICK COFFEY

I'm doing 90 days in the Berkshire County House of Correction, and getting full academic credit for it. 90 days is a common sentence here, although some men are doing two years and more, but the difference between most of them and me is that I'm innocent. I volunteered to come here. My first night behind bars I wondered just why I volunteered, but I'm here of my own free will, and can walk out today if the joint starts to close in on me.

The UMass School of Education offers what is probably the most unpopular, undersubscribed, course on campus. It is a 15 credit practicum that basically consists of a 90 day period of incarceration within a county jail. The purpose of the course is to examine first-hand the process of incarceration and the problems of correnctions, and to serve as an educational catalyst on the cellblock. Fringe benefits include free room and board and lots of study time. Three of us signed up for the course.

Patrick Coffey, former Poor Richard's Editor, is doing 90 days in Berkshire County House of Correction for a 15 credit practicum offered by the School of Education. This is the first of several columns from inside the jail.

It is an unusual way to spend a semester and each of us had our personal reasons. Patty O'Neil wants to be a social worker and she feels it will be a valuable experience in her work. Rick Wallace brought his theology books and plans to study and to meet the inmates. Me, I'm here to write about it.

The building is old — 102 years old — and it hasn't aged well. Formed in the shape of a capital 'T' it is built of red brick and steel, four stories high. The crossbar of the 'T' is the administration section and houses the guard room, infirmary, classrooms, kitchen, offices, and the women's section. The outer walls of the building are two feet in most places, thicker in some others. The foundation is of granite blocks, the gabled roof is covered in slate shingles. The windows are surprisingly large and some stretch 12' high. The bars, spaced four inches apart, also stretch 12' high.

The body of the building, the stem of the 'T', is the cellblock. A two foot thick shell, it houses four tiers of cells. Stacked one atop the other the tiers stretch from floor to ceiling. A tier consists of two banks of a dozen cells, back to back, 96 cells in all. Six cells are taken up by the shower, barber shop, storage and a telephone.

Of the 90 available cells, a varying number, near 70, are occupied. Each cell is like the one next to it, varying only in which magazine the pin-ups came from. The cells are single occupancy and have to be. They measure 6' wide, 8' long, and 8'4" high. The cells walls are 16" of red brick. The floor is thick one foot squares of slate on a bed of concrete. Doors are of top to bottom steel bars nearly one inch thick. It is all forbiddingly massive, discouragingly solid. Their general condition is depressing. A century of paint in peeling layers clings to the brick walls, livened only by nameless stains and crude felt-tip graffitti.

The official furnishings of these cells are harshly Spartan: a toilet, a sink, a bed, a metal shelf, and a naked electric light bulb comprise the list. Most of the toilets work.

Decrepit and dingy, this jail would be a dungeon, a medieval carry-over, were it not for its modern attitude. There exists here an espririt. Perhaps some of it is the rapport of shared suffering, but it seems to run deeper. It seems to me the bond of a small community.

I walked into the cellblock wary and apprehensive. We all know the stories; the fights and rapes, brutal guards, bad food and rats. The food is bad, but since I walked in I've never seen a fist thrown in anger. The men share their last cigarettes and there is a buoyancy in their laughter. It shomehow rises above this place and space.

Much of the credit for the spirit and liveliness of this jail must go to the Model Education program and to County Sherif, John Courtney, who allowed it in over a year ago, and who actively supports it.

The Model Education Program began, in its conception, at UMass, and now in its growing stages here brings together inmates, guards and academics. It brings them together for a mutually beneficial purpose — to ease inmates back into society in a way they can cope with. It involves in-residence classes, work release, and for some, a chance to attend classes at UMass and nearby Berkshire Community College. Four of my next door neighbors on the cellblock — Bobby, Don, Jim and Robin — attend classes with you every Tuesday and Thursday.

It is the Education program and the stake inmates are given in their future, the common goal of getting the hell out of here and staying out that keeps this particular joint on an even keel. It is not all sweetness and light. There are still bars and bricks, guards and a guard dog. But the men are being encouraged to think beyond the walls. The effort shows and it is a worthwhile beginning.

I'll expect I'll have lot of time to write. Time is allowed here and most of us have more than we want. I managed to 'smuggle' my portable typewriter in and have it set up on a cardboard Marlboro case. Until a few days ago I was sitting on the toilet to type, but found the bunk was a little easier on my attitude. I will be writing regularly from cell no. 69, tier three, Berkshire County House of Correction.

A large portion of students living on campus, and virtually all of the students living off campus, are not on the meal plan.

To help students survive those times of hunger, the RECIPE EXCHANGE will bring simple, but delicious recipes geared for the student.

If you have any recipes that are low in cost, and made for the person with limited time and equipment, send them to the Life-Style Editor, c-o the Collegian.

The weekend's here again and you've got to find a few cheap, easy meals that are filling and satisfying. You've tried Chuck's Egg Omelette, but you want something with a little more bulk. You would prefer a high protein, low budget, easy to make meal for Saturday night.

Here's a recipe for a Tuna Noodle Casserole you'll enjoy. A simple easy procedure which takes only 1 hour total in preparation and baking time.

For this recipe you'll need noodles. People's Market carries a 16 oz. Dutch Maid egg noodle for only 53 cents. (They can be used for macaroni & cheese on Sunday night.)

You'll need tuna. Best price is again the People's Market with a 6½ oz. can of Geisha tuna for 54 cents.

Also, you'll need a 10 3-4 can of mushroom soup, which you can get at the Market or at Munchies for 22 cents.

Equipment: casserole dish or comparable size dish of Pyrex hot plate, bowl, and oven (available in any dorm basement or in the lounge floors of the towers).

Procedure: Boil noodles in water and let cool for 2 to 3 minutes. Mix ingredients (tuna, soup, 3-4 cup of milk & noodles). Bake for 45 minutes at 450 degrees.

You might like to crush a small bag of potato chips and sprinkle on top before baking. Or add slices of American cheese on top before baking.

Take out of oven and let cool for about 10 minutes. This will feed 4 average people, or 3 famished persons.

UMass moon man

By LISA SAMMET
Staff Reporter

He hasn't walked on the moon but he has become intimately familiar with the minerals there. He isn't even an astronaut, although he corresponds with them.

UMass Prof. Stephen G. Haggerty is one of a handful of geologists nationwide who has had the chance to touch, smell, look at and maybe even taste rocks taken from the moon during successful Apollo missions.

The assistant professor of geology is UMass' moon man.

He is one of 80 specialists in moon rock research trying to discover the chemistry, origin, history, structure and geological processes of the moon.

In fact the National Aeronauthics and Space Administration (NASA) even asked him to name some of the new mineral rocks brought back from the moon.

"I had to write a letter to Michael Collins, one of the astrounauts, to see if he approved of my names," Haggarty said.

Haggerty, has been doing moon-rock research with NASA (the National Aeronautics and Space Administration). He is one of 80 such specialists in the world.

A geo-chemist, he is trying to discover the chemistry of geological processes, the origin, history, constitution and structure, including the operation of physical forces affecting the development and appearance of rocks, and the substances taking part in the process of rock formation. Through geo-chemical research, clues about the origin of the earth, moon and universe are discovered.

On earth they have synthetically reproduced the minerals found on the moon, by using high temperatures to form the minerals, and also to find at what temperature they decompose. With this knowledge of the conditions of heat and pressure that produce and destroy the minerals, or aggregates of minerals - Breccia, - theories of the formulation of the moon's crust can be developed.

Of the rock samples brought back from the moon, some are of volcanic origin, others generated from meteoritic impact, or are composite rocks, welded together, plus some soil samples. Mr. Haggerty's main interest now is with orange glass soil.

Considered to be a very significant discovery, the existence of orange glass soil is an indication of either volcanic activity on the moon or from meteoritic impact; either condition would heat up the minerals to high temperatures. Similarly puzzling is the shape of the soil, tiny, perfectly spherical beads of orange to black color (depending on age),

The color is caused by titanium. The first time the orange soil was observed was in Apollo 11, then with the Apollo 17 mission. A large area, of soil estimated at 10-15 kilometers around the landing site, was found.

The orange soil raises questions: why such a large area of orange soil? And, why are the beads so perfectly spherical?

Ultimately Mr. Haggerty's research will help in forming a workable theory of the moon's origin and history. Until the Apollo missions, many people believed the moon was born from the Pacific Ocean. Geo-chemical evidence now discounts that theory.

Now, the moon is believed to have either been captured by the earth or formed at about the same time and was drawn into our gravitational field. Before the space missions scientists could only speculate at the age of the moon. They were surprised when they found rock samples which were 4.2 billion years old. The oldest geological history of the earth goes back to 3 billion years ago, whereas the moon's history has lain dormant since 3.8 billion years ago.

This leaves the period from 3.8 to 3.0 billlion years ago unrecorded in the earth's geological history, as it is felt that the earth and the moon both originated approximately 4.5 billion years ago.

With the first Apollo moon mission, scientists had to begin to reformulate their ideas. The missions came quickly, relative to the task of sorting, identifying, compiling data, and learning about moon rocks. With the first samples preconceived theories had to be changed, they even found a new mineral.

The second set of rocks could be viewed in comparison to the first, until with more samples a clearer picture of the moon's make up could be drawn. Now with their research, evidence adding to evidence, they can begin to infer from their findings.

Haggerty is a member of the Lunar Sample Advising Team which gives direction toward planning for

geological-moon research. With the continued addition of information of moon geology, space missions can be planned more specifically to test out theories.

Haggerty has been given two grants of $75,000 for a very important machine for his research. He will receive in 2-3 weeks an Electronmicroprobe. This machine will enable him to do chemical analysis by non-destructive means of very tiny samples, as small as 10 cubic microns, with a high amount of accuracy.

He is one of 20 American scientists who were chosen to analyze soil gotten through unmanned Russian moon flights, gathered by a core sampler, and exchange through the Soviet Academy of Science and the National Academy of science. This non-destructive means is important considering the cost of getting rocks from the moon; they are priceless.

Car-fixin' up, enrollment ditto

By DAVID KOWAL
Staff Correspondent

As the cost of car repairs has risen, so has the enrollment of Ernest Johnson's Introduction to Engines class.

Mr. Johnson credits the rise in enrollment, which is up to 80 students, to "an increase in student demands for practical courses."

The course which is in the Food and Agricultural Engineering Dept., teaches the students the details about use and minor repairs of engines, and includes two one hour lectures and a two hour lab every week.

Flu vaccine is available

The University Health Services has been advised by the Department of Public Health that a moderate outbreak of influenza is expected to occur in Massachusetts during the coming winter. A limited supply of the bivalent vaccine is available at the University Health Center for students who require immunization.

The U.S. Public Health Service has not recommended immunization against influenza for individuals under the age of 60 who are in good general health. For students who have chronic heart disease, chronic lung disease, chronic kidney disease, or diabetes, immunization against influenza can be obtained at the University Health Center.

We suggest that students with the above-mentioned conditions consult with Mrs. Adair (599-3671) in the Immunization Clinic early in the fall. Because the supply of vaccine is limited, the clinic will not be able to provide influenza immunization for those students who are in good general health.

Future meets

There will be a meeting of the Amherst Chapter of the World Future Society tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Mitchell Lounge of Skinner Hall.

Discussions on dwindling resources, changing social patterns, technological impacts, education for the future, and global thinking will highlight the evening. Everyone is welcome.

Food Stamps last chance

Today is the last day that Food Stamp applications will be available in the Campus Center. If you still do not have an application, stop by. For those students who have already completed their applications, the Commuter Affairs office will contact you in the near future to arrange for an interview. After today, applications can be picked up in the Commuter Affairs Office or at the Student Organizing Project. Completed applications can be left at the Commuter Affairs Office.

Please be sure to bring copies of documentation with you when you come to your interview.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Be of help to those less fortunate than yourself — but take care not to give the impression that you are building up reserves of debts owed you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — If you are wise, you will at least give the impression that the ear you lend another is sympathetic. Don't think only of gains.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Those matters that are of special concern to you personally should be taken care of first thing this morning. Take a tip from a stranger.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Plan for a social evening. Don't let it get around, however, that you will be entertaining — not unless you wish a houseful of gate-crashers.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You should have little trouble showing what you're made of today. However, what you're made of may not be the best thing to meet the day with!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) —If you're lazy today, another will surely get ahead of you. Make an effort to move forward with projects that are new to you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Leadership is essential to the maintenance of your position on the home front. Matters of employment may appear more hazardous than they really are.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — It is the Taurus with initiative who will best meet the challenge of this day. Don't be alarmed should the opposition make things difficult in the afternoon.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Don't allow another to move ahead of you early in the day. Keep your wits about you as the competition multiplies and the opposition grows.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — If you can demonstrate mastery of your profession, you can get the jump on the competition. Gains are to be made quickly in the afternoon and evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Avoid any hesitation when asked to take an additional responsibility. This is an excellent day for demonstrating your adaptability.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You can secure excellent results if you are careful not to bite off more than you can chew. Make every effort to appear calm in the face of confusion.

Stickers optimistic

By LINDA MACKLER

If experience and ambition are the prerequisites for success, UMass will be boasting two championship field hockey teams in the fall of 1974. While the varsity staff is coddling fourteen returning members, the junior varsity team has drafted sixteen talented and agressive freshman.

Coach Carol Albert's hopes are very high for a winning season.

"We look good and I am very encouraged," she said. "I am anticipating an exceptional year."

This optimism has been bred despite the nagging injuries of two skillful players, Sheila Higgins and Lori Nazar, and because of the depth Coach Albert can draw from. The weakest offense will be the front line where two players from last year are absent. But the center forward is very strong and the main strength lies with an extremely capable defensive line.

Although the players are still fighting for positions in the starting line-up, the teams are fairly well established. Veterans Jean Kentfield, Joanne Lorrey, Barb Martell, Trish McCarthy, Kathy O'Neil, Elaine Senosk, Joanne Smith, Kate Stanns, and Karen Zimmerman are set to play. Judy Kennedy and possibly Debbie Picciuto from the junior varsity team will temporarily replace the injured players. Because the team is so equally balanced in seniority and experience, captains will be chosen on a rotating weekly basis.

Tomorrow will firmly determine the starting line-ups, when UMass hosts a Sportsday featuring the best University and College teams in New England. This is an annually featured event which starts the season's hockey campaign. Each team plays three 25-minute games wcth the competition starting at 9:30 a.m. and ending at 2:25 p.m.

A new coach and a new rule book are positively affecting UMass hockey. Four experimental rules have inspired offensive and defensive changes by Coach Albert. She feels these experiments will make the games more interesting. They are: 1. substituting a push-in for a roll-in when a ball goes over the sideline. 2. substituting a penalty stroke for a penalty bully. 3. imposing offsides when there are fewer than two, rather than three people between the team and its goal line. 4. forcing defensive backs to the 50 yard line rather than the 25-yard line on a corner.

"The game should be faster-paced," claimed the new coach. "The rules will allow for more scoring."

Coach Albert is a first year instructor and coach at UMass, but comes from three years experience at Enrico Fermi High School in Enfield, Connecticut, where she taught and coached hockey, basketball, and softball. She also did graduate work in exercise science at UMass in the 1970-71 season. She believes in hard work and is impressed by the team's willingness to follow-up.

The first game at Keene State should be a fairly easy victory for UMass and the excitement for the home game audience begins at 3:30 on Friday, October 4th, at the field behind the Northeast Physical Education Building.

Sugarloaf AC race tomorrow

By MDC Staff

Three open cross-country races will begin Saturday at 2:30 behind the Northeast Physical Education Building sponsored by the Sugarloaf Mt. A.C. of Amherst. The first will be a two-mile cross-country race for girls under 14, followed by a three-mile women's race, then a six-mile open men's race. Over 100 runners are expected.

These races are open to any students or non-students in each category. Post entries will be accepted.

Charlotte Lettis of Sugarloaf and UMass won the event last year and holds the women's course record of 18:03. This year she expects good competition from any number of entries. The Liberty A.C. is expected to bring a strong team from Boston as is the Electric City A.C. from Albany. The Falmouth Mass. Track Club is also very strong and observers give the team championship an even chance between the three.

The men's cross-country race is even more uncertain because it is the first race of the season for the team which is competing in its first cross-country season. The team is composed of faculty, grad-students and normal people, most of whom have run cross-country in college. The math department is represented by two former Dartmouth runners, Ed Sandifer and Mark Elmer, while the Geology department has former UMass. runner Dave Eiben and another Dartmouth man, Steve Shirey. John Brodhead is a botanist and Lars Hallen of Norway is in Linguistics. Charlie Moran and Bob French speak good English while Tom Derderian works in the Yellow Sun Co-op in Amherst and Tony Wilcox, UMass philosophy graduate, is a milk man.

The team won the informal Amherst 3-man 12-mile relay last Saturday in their only team competition of the year.

Merman barrage sinks Trinity, 4-1

ByDEB HOXSIE
Sports Staff

Pinpoint passing, aggressive defense, and a barrage of goals spelled victory for the UMass men's water polo team on Wednesday night. Their 24-20 win over Trinity College boosts the team record to 4 wins and 1 loss.

In Trinity's cold four lane pool Henry McLean led the scoring with a resounding total of 11 goals. Duncan Lomas scored 5 despite foul trouble which kept him out of the pool for parts of the second half. Kevin McGinn lasted a whole quarter, before fouling out, and fired in 4 goals. Two goals each were scored by Ron Boucher and Bill Bridgeman.

Tom Nordby did a fine job on defense muscling Trinity attackers away from Tom Rhodes who filled in for absent goalie Mark Gordan.

Carl Zulick, Spencer Sullivan, and player-coach Bill McCafferty saw action especially in the last quarter while U.Mass. was protecting its lead and a couple of players in foul trouble.

Trinity staged a comeback in the second half outscoring Umass. 10 to 6; however, it wasn't enough to negate the Minutemen's barrage in the opening minutes of the game.

UMass men and women play rival Boston College today at 4:00 in Boyden Pool. The team looks its best ever this fall, and judging from the intense competition with B.C. last year, today's game should be a thriller.

Ranked number one in NE; Thinclads face BC Eagles

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

Practice is the best of all instructors. The old maxim probably holds true for all sports, but it can be said that this saying is the essence of cross country. Cross country running requires a rigorous training schedule that will enable the individual to perform beyond the stages of exhaustion.

Running anywhere from 75-100 miles a week is no easy task, to be sure. Combine this with the fact that running is lonely — there is no one to blame but yourself — and you have college cross country.

The hard work hasn't stopped for the UMass Cross Country team since last season. The team members continued to run in the so-called "off season", competing in indoor and outdoor track, then running over the summer to prepare for the 1974 cross country season.

The long road to national prominence begins tomorrow with a home meet against Boston College. Mostly a miler-dominated team, the Eagles are led by track standout Keith Francis. Francis has run the mile in 4:00 and is expected to be even tougher this season, having an added year of experience. A super half-miler for BC's track team, Francis will be dangerous if he's still close after four and a half miles. A strong finishing kick can be expected from BC's top harrier. Steve Liquori, Marty's younger brother, Walter Swanbon, Steve Lowell and Dave Ezerski round out the top five for BC. Swanbon is principally a miler, Lowell was a high school standout in the mile at Brockton and Ezerski, a freshman, has plenty of potential.

The Eagles are 1-1, having split a tri-meet with Providence and Boston University. The Friars topped BC 18-38, so Francis and teammates will have one meet's experience.

The Minutemen runners hope to put to use the home course advantage, looking to get a large group of runners up front early in the race. Doing this would put pressure on BC before the hilly orchard, which should take its toll on the Eagles' mile-oriented squad.

The UMass squad, which was a unanimous choice of the cross country coaches of New England as New England's number one team in a pre-season poll, will remain much the same. John Maguire and Devin Croft will not be running, but sophomores Robb Leary, Jim Hunt and Andy Levy and junior Phil Broughton are capable of filling the holes.

The rest of the team consists primarily of veteran runners, led by co-captains Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin. Tom Maguire, Chris Farmer, Frank Noto and Tom Wilson round out the varsity squad.

Coach Ken O'Brien remarked that everyone has been running well in practices, and that Leary, Hunt, Levy and Broughton have improved greatly over the summer. Race time is 1 o'clock at the Women's Phys Ed Building.

Collegian

The Collegian caravan of football fearfuls leaves Hasbrouck promptly at 8:00 tomorrow for Dartmouth. The team is advised to be there by 7:45. Holdouts are advised to play out their option--G.M. Dave Eibel vows not to budge from original offer.

College preview

(UPI) — Ohio State and Notre Dame, rated no. 1 and no. 2 among the nation's college football teams, put their respective rankings on the line Saturday.

The men who decide the point margins have Woody Hayes' troops a 39-point pick over Southern Methodist and Ara Parseghian's forces 35 over Purdue. Failure to win impressively will be frowned upon.

While Ohio State should have little to fear from SMU, Notre Dame is always wary of Purdue. The Boilermakers, particularly in the 1960s, made it almost a habit to embarrass the Irish.

But Alex Agase's team was dropped 28-14 in its opener against Wisconsin and was tied by Miami of Ohio last week, hardly a portent for another Purdue miracle at South Bend.

For those who like to hunt for straws of hope, however, it might be pointed out that the Boilermakers' tie with Miami ended the Ohio school's winning streak at 13, then the longest major college string of victories. The Irish now hold that distinction and their winning streak also stands at 13.

Wisconsin's Badgers, the surprise team of the Big Ten, has been walking on air since its triumph over Purdue and then last week's stunning victory over powerhouse Nebraska. And the Badgers will be playing in rarified air Saturday, when they take on Colorado at Boulder. Coach John Jardine has been advised not to work his club in that altitude on Friday, but to just have his charges loosen up.

It's a heady wine the Badgers are drinking. They lost to Purdue and Nebraska a year ago in their first two games, and dropped the third to Colorado. They'd like to complete the reversal of those three defeats.

Pats on TV

FOXBORO, Mass. (UPI) — The New England Patriots announced Wednesday that Sunday's game with the Los Angeles Rams was a sellout and would be televised locally.

The federal anti-blackout law requires local coverage if all tickets are sold 72 hours before kickoff.

Scott Hayes

Gridiron goodies

After an experimental record of nine correct and four wrong choices a week ago, I decided to publicize my prophetic findings and watch them fall apart before everyone's eyes. So here they are, Hayes' gridiron goodies for the upcoming weekend:

LOS ANGELES 27; NEW ENGLAND 14

John Hadl's passing and last year's best defensive team should be enough to drop the Pats from the undefeated ranks, regardless of the friendly Schaefer Stadium surroundings.

BUFFALO 28; NEW YORK JETS 24

It's going to be close, especially if Joe "Willie" can continue his pin-point passing, but the Buffalo running game is overdue. Look for "Juice" Simpson to supply the "Electric Company" with enough power.

ATLANTA 17; NEW ORLEANS 7

The Falcons should continue to frustrate Archie Manning, and the Atlanta offense will be in high gear after a poor showing last week.

PHILADELPHIA 20; BALTIMORE 13

Roman Gabriel should be able to pick apart the Colt secondary, and Baltimore's offense won't be a factor, whether Marty Domres or Bert Jones is at the helm.

DALLAS 35; NEW YORK GIANTS 10

The Giants will have to wait another week to pick up their first win of 1974. Dallas has enjoyed domination of the New Yorkers in recent years, and this Sunday will be no different. Last year, Dallas outscored opponents 382-203; this week will help get the Cowboys on their way to surpassing that 1973 statistic.

GREEN BAY 16; DETROIT 9

This one shapes up as a placekicking contest, so look for Chester Marcol to outboot Errol Mann, as both defensive units limit opposing offensive displays.

KANSAS CITY 17; HOUSTON 13

Even if Len Dawson and Ed Podolak aren't recovered from injuries sustained in loss to Raiders, Chiefs' secondary should have a field day against Oiler QB Lynn Dickey.

MINNESOTA 28; CHICAGO 10

The Bears are in for another long afternoon, as the stiff Viking defense, which allowed just 162 total yards against Detroit, Fran Tarkenton and Chuck Foreman keep Minnesota's record unblemished.

ST. LOUIS 14; CLEVELAND 10

The Browns won't get any handouts in St. Louis, as Cards continue to ride strong defense to victory.

OAKLAND 30; PITTSBURGH 28

Offense should rule supreme in this confrontation, but Ken Stabler, the AFC's number one passer in 1973, should outdo Joe Gilliam and the rest of the Steelers.

MIAMI 31; SAN DIEGO 14

Bob Griese, Mercury Morris and the Dolphin defense will send Charger QB Dan Fouts back to oblivion, after the San Diego signal-caller led his team to upset of Cincinnati last Sunday.

UMASS FACES BIG GREEN

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

In what looms as the biggest test yet for the UMass football product, the Minutemen face the Big Green of Dartmouth at Hanover, New Hampshire tomorrow, (WMUA, 1:20) in the game that will answer the question: how good are the Minutemen?

A week ago at Orono, UMass rolled and ran over the helpless Maine Black Bears, piling up over 300 rushing yards, but except for the first game against Villanova the Minutemen have not really been forced to play at their best. Tomorrow, however, the Minutemen will face a Dartmouth team which has won the Ivy League championship five years in a row.

Unfortunately, Dartmouth is an unknown quantity since they've refused to allow UMass scouts into their two preseason scrimmages against Bowdoin and Williams. Any scouting reports have to be based on scanty information.

However, it is known that the Indians have a winning coach in Jake Crouthamel, and a collection of superb athletes, so one thing that's certain is that Dartmouth will be well-prepared for UMass. They're also one up on UMass in the scouting department since their coaching staff has observed both UMass encounters this year.

Two of the best Dartmouth athletes are Tom Snickenberger, a 6'5" quarterback with a penchant for running the option and Tom Fleming, a 6'2" defensive back who many touted as one of the best in the east last year, but who will probably play in the offensive backfield tomorrow.

In capsule, the Dartmouth offense is explosive and big. With Fleming in the game, the Big Green will have the capacity to score at anytime from anywhere on the field. Couple that with an offensive line, from left to right, of 6'7", 6'4", 6'2", 6'3", 6'4", and 6'2" and you can see that offensively Dartmouth will pose problems for the UMass defense. Defensively, Dartmouth relies on speed and experience utilizing a 4-4-3 alignment.

UMass, however, will make Dartmouth's opening day a difficult one — that's for sure. The defense, using a variation of Miami's "53" defense, gave fits all day to UMaine, and playing an Ivy power should make them as hungry as they could ever be.

UMass quarterback Mark Tripucka is shown above behind his offensive linemen. Tripucka and the rest of the Minutemen will travel to Hanover, N.H. tomorrow to face the Big Green of Dartmouth in a 1:30 contest. A week ago, the Minutemen pounded Maine 42-0, but things should be tighter in Hanover.

Booters meet Maine in 1st YanCon match

By BEN CASWELL
Sports Staff

The Minuteman soccer squad travels to the University of Maine in Orono tomorrow to take on the Black Bears in their first Yankee Conference game of the season.

Last year Maine beat UMass in a fine defensive battle, 1-0, and went on to finish second in the conference for their best showing ever in the league.

The Minutemen are coming off of a decisive 4-0 shutout of Boston College last Tuesday night. In that game the team took a little time to warm up to the field, the weather. and the situations presented to them. Boston College did not have much of an offense and the Minutemen should have been able to control the play. It was not until the second half that they were able to do so.

Tomorrow against Maine, UMass will have to be "on the ball" quickly and quite often. Taking time to warm up, or as much time as they needed against Boston College could prove disastrous.

Coach Al Rufe was pleased with the play of the team in the second half and commented, "we were playing our game in the second half, using our wings a lot better than the first half and that is what made the difference." About Maine Rufe said, "Last year they were very tough and everybody on the team knows that." "If we can win this one," he went on, "we will be in pretty good shape in the Yankee Conference."

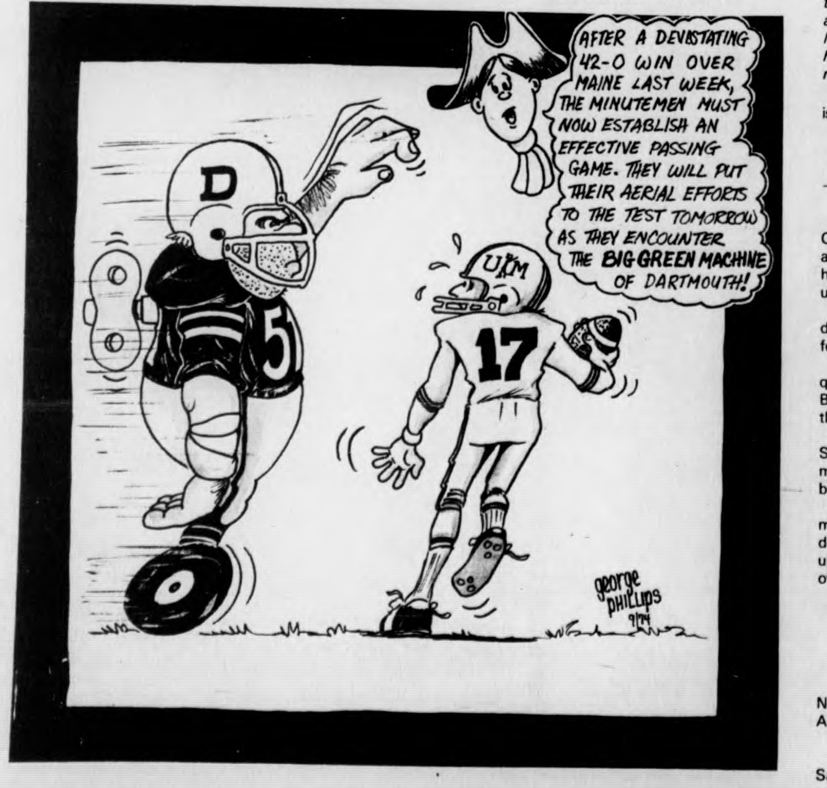
QUICK SHOTS--The Minutemen played most of the game against Boston College without the services of high-scoring forwards Tom Coburn and Tony King. Both have minor injuries that are on their way to healing and both ae expected to see some action versus Maine although not in starting roles. Goaltender Carl Vercollonne is still expected to be sitting out with a shoulder and a thigh injury. Next game is against Keene State here Wednesday at 3:00 p.m.



AFTER A DEVISTATING 42-0 WIN OVER MAINE LAST WEEK, THE MINUTEMEN MUST NOW ESTABLISH AN EFFECTIVE PASSING GAME. THEY WILL PUT THEIR AERIAL EFFORTS TO THE TEST TOMORROW AS THEY ENCOUNTER THE BIG GREEN MACHINE OF DARTMOUTH!

That dirty "Crout"

News Item: Dartmouth football coach Jake Crouthamel has prevented any UMass scouts from attending his team's scrimmages. In addition, he has refused Minuteman head coach Dick MacPherson access to any Big Green game films.

MacPherson's reply when asked about the situation was: "I still don't feel any remorse. Jake Crouthamel is doing a fine job up there, and he's doing what he thinks is right for his team".

— — — —

What gives? Has the main mentor of the University of Massachusetts football team, Richard MacPherson, gone bozo? Is he a nutburger?

The Minutemen could be making an horrendous mistake going into tomorrow's game against Dartmouth sight unseen. They may be going up against the greatest fighting machine since Hitler's Third Reich. Or maybe the team is entirely composed of by monkeys. Or Martians. UMass doesn't know.

Or do they? I have come across tapes and documents that may prove the M-Men are not going into the game cold turkey...

— — — —

Here's a transcript of the tape I found in my dining commons mashed potatos...

Good afternoon, Mr. Phelps. The man in this photo is Dartmouth coach Jake Crouthamel. He is a man shaded in secrecy. His team is an unknown quantity. The mysterious disappearance of several rival scouts is attributed to him. No human has set eyes on his squad this year and lived to tell about it.

This other photo of goalposts was taken at the Dartmouth practice field. The scouts hanging from the crossbars are dead.

Your mission, Jim, and you'd better accept it, is to infiltrate the Hanover training site and find out just how good the Big Green are. Should you or any of your IMF scouting team be caught or hung from the goalposts, Dick MacPherson will disavow any knowledge of the mission [but you can bet he'll be mad as the dickens]. Please destroy this recording in the usual manner. Lotsa luck, Jim...

And here's a document I came across as litter outside of Boyden Gym. It is reprinted in its entirety...

TOP SECRET INFORMATION
CLASSIFIED KNOWLEDGE AND ALL THAT JAZZ

Scouting report for coach Richard MacPherson on Dartmouth football — Wednesday, September 25, 1974.

ATTENTION: IF NOT CLEARED BY COACH, READ NOT FURTHER!!

GENERAL INFO — Our scout-agents have learned that Jake Crouthamel has amassed the greatest wealth of college football talent ever assembled on a single team. It is clear that he has kept this fact a secret so his team can beat UMass by at least 300 points and in one fell swoop move up to No. 1 in the national rankings...

...Crouthamel has been secretly preparing his superstars for the destruction of UMass while announcing to the press that an entirely different group of far-less talented people are going to be his starters...

...for instance, he announced Tom Snickenberger as the starting quarterback. Like fun. He's really going to use a phenom by the name of Bull Itt. He throws the ball so hard that one of his passes hit a receiver on the numbers, killing him instantly. Our agents can verify that...

It's not just the starters that are incredible. The special teams are deadly. Scouts observed that after the kickoff team ran a play against the reserves, many of the subs didn't get up. They also reported a makeshift cemetary beyond the end-zone.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFO — Scouts, who were all disguised as sideline markers, except for one who was incognito as a bottle of Gatorade, were detected on the second day of this week's practices. They were executed upon discovery. Each took a football from Bull Itt through the heart, except of course, the bottle of Gatorade, who was served as refreshments...

DEFENSIVE RECOMMENDATION — Keep the stretchers ready.
OFFENSIVE RECOMMENDATION — Punt on first down.
OVERALL RECOMMENDATION — Don't show up.

Senate head claims CC fee is interest

By DEBBIE D. MASSIMO
Staff Reporter

Eighty-two percent of the fee students pay on their semester bill for the Campus Center pays interest on construction costs of the facility rather than services it provides, a student senate committee head charged yesterday.

Fifty-three dollars and forty cents of the $64 Campus Center fee currently paid by UMass students is allocated to pay the interest on the according to John Marciniec, Chairman of the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee.

Only $2.65 is available per student to pay for renovations which would make the building more accessible to student special interest groups and to the student body at large. "Students bear the brunt of the financial burden that the Campus Center has proved to be," said Marciniec.

The fee is broken down into four main categories. $53.40 is immediately payable to the Debt Service which is handling the financing of the building, $4.80 has been budgeted toward a possible operating deficit, $3.15 is the necessary expense for transfers and office and staff expenses for the CC Board of Governors, and the remaining $2.64 can be spent on capital expenditures.

John Corker, Director of the Campus Center explained to the Collegian that when the building of the Campus Center was proposed, it was to serve primarily as a conference center, with students utilizing only the first two floors. State funding was to share the costs of the building and operation of the Center with the students. When it was discovered that this type of split funding was illegal, the total financial responsibility was shuffled to the students. Student groups began to utilize some part of each floor in the building. The University pays only for utilities.

When Corker took over the job as Director last year, there was an operating deficit of $466,379. In one year, he and the Campus Center Board of Governors, a body of students which oversees all operations and approves all expenditures, succeeded in reducing the deficit to an estimated $224,500.

QUALITY OR QUANTITY?

Cronin cites declining birth rate

By MIKE KNEELAND
Staff Reporter

The state's secretary of education said Friday the time has now come for this campus to think in terms of quality improvements rather than in quantity gains.

Joseph M. Cronin made his remarks at a private interview before addressing an Everywoman's Center Conference. (See text page three.)

Citing a 35 per cent birth decline since 1965, the former associate dean of the Harvard School of Education said there are going to be fewer students in the future. "We should now add more quality improvements rather than quantity improvements."

Other key points the secretary made are:

—the honeymoon some professors are enjoying will soon come to an end

—the UMass medical school in Worcester will be accepting more students next year but won't be getting all the money it has requested

—the administration and state legislature are "very proud" of UMass though "that doesn't always come through clearly"

—the state may be soon giving money to private institutions

—inflation is a problem here.

Cronin said a report will be released soon noting how much time state professors spend either teaching, researching, or working with community programs. He said some educators are not spending much time in either of those areas but added that does not appear to be the case with UMass professors.

"The UMass faculty has nothing to fear from the report coming out," he said.

Cronin believes the recently enacted legislation requiring faculty to spend "contact" hours with students is not unreasonable and is "not as assertive" as some other states' legislation.

Directing his comments to the UMass medical school in Worcester which graduated its first class this year, Cronin said he will not approve the administrators' requests for what he termed "fancy equipment."

Cronin said the state is going to have a "first class' medical school but the main concern of the school should be to turn out doctors to work in ghettos, preventive medicine, and other such areas.

He said the school doesn't have to get involved with heart surgery, and luxury cosmetic surgery. Cronin added the school will be accepting about 100 students next year.

VICTORY! UMass Coach Dick MacPherson lifts exuberant defensive back John Van Buren into the air after the Minutemen shut out Dartmouth 14-0 Saturday at Hanover, New Hampshire. Van Buren picked off two Dartmouth passes, one at the end of the third quarter and one at the end of the fourth to snuff out Big Green drives and preserve the shutout. It was the first win for UMass over the defending Ivy League champion in 22 tries dating back to 1902.

Anrig threatens truancy to Boston school boycotters

BOSTON [AP] - State Education Commissioner Gregory Anrig said yesterday parents who have kept their children out of Boston's public schools in protest of the court-ordered integration plan "have made their point" and should allow their children to return to class.

In an interview broadcast yesterday on WBZ-TV, Anrig said the Board of education's order of last week to the Boston school Committee to enforce truancy laws in the face of a white student boycott is not punitive.

"What we are trying to do is to say, all right, the past is behind us, it is now time for the students to get into school, and time for the school year to get under way," Anrig said.

The television broadcast came shortly before a demonstration in favor of a continuing boycott, held in the mostly white, Irish south Boston section of the city, where boycott activity has been centered.

About 200 people, mostly women and children, attended the rally, according to

Woods asks enrollment freeze in '76

UMass President Robert C. Wood says he will ask for a freeze on student enrollment at all three campuses because of resistance to budget increases that expansion would require. But campus Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said yesterday the freeze was requested voluntarily by the Amherst administration and does not reflect a major change in policy. He said the freeze means enrollment at Amherst will be held down by only a few hundred students next year.

"We thought what we would do is freeze and get some sort of idea of what are personnel needs are going to be," Bromery said. He said expansion at this time might have jeopardized the present 15 to 1 student-faculty ratio.

Bromery also said inflation alone will add to the budget and additional enrollment would push the budget too high. "With everything staying the same our budget is going to be up 11 to 15 percent over last year," he said.

The freeze means that UMass-Amherst will remain at the present 23,000 enrollment through 1976, then gradually increase to a ceiling of 25,000.

The no-increase on the Amherst campus was recommended to Wood by the administration here, according to Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern. Gluckstern and Faculty Senate secretary Prof. David A. Booth yesterday explained and seconded Wood's call.

The UMass President first made the statement before the opening weekly meeting of the UMass-Amherst faculty senate on Thursday, Sept. 19. The Collegian reporter who covers the Senate was accidentally not present and so the one-year policy announcement was not initially reported, by managing editor Bill Densmore.

Wood told the faculty he will ask the trustees to approve a "maintenance" budget request of $118 million, an increase of 16.6 percent over previously anticipated expenditures in 1975.

He said the university cannot ask for a larger budget to support its previous growth rate because of a "broadening public disenchantment" with higher education. He said 90 percent of the 1976 budget will go towards meeting inflation and fixed costs.

Wood's statements at the meeting were published yesterday in The Boston Globe, one and one half weeks after they were first spoken. No other media reported his statements.

Pass/fail: A help or hindrance?

By LINDA BROWER
Staff Reporter

ANALYSIS

About nine years ago, an alternative grading system called Pass-Fail spread across the U.S. and eventually, hit UMass.

The original purpose of its installation here was than a student "could be usefully venturesome in an incompetent area." For example, a Liberal Arts student might be willing to attempt an engineering course without fear of it possibly affecting his cumulative average.

The only stipulation was that a student was allowed to opt only one course each semester on a P-F basis.

"We have a corrupted classic grading system" and P-F has become a "cumulative grade point manipulation," says Registrar Ralph D. Jones.

Pass-Fail has a long history behind it, and its presence today is different from that of old. As the records of Dean of Students William F. Field show, the P-F option first appeared at a Faculty Senate meeting on April 7, 1966. The motion was: "That every undergraduate student not in his first semester in the university be allowed to choose one course each semester in which the grade is to either be pass-fail...the choice of course to be restricted by the student's major department (or his school if no department exists in his division of the university.)"

Corollaries to the original document were that students could not save up P-F courses from semester to semester, and the option of P-F had to be decided on the day of registration. The student could change to a grading system within 10 academic days but not switch from grading to P-F.

Great concern was expressed in the Spring semester of 1969 by the Faculty Senate as to the students' usage of P-F. Students finding themselves doing were opting out of P-F to grades and those doing poorly were electing P-F. Dean Dwight Allen of the School of Education said, "We don't want to encourage our students to play these kinds of educational games."

Furthermore, many faculty members were beginning to believe that those students taking P-F were not being "usefully venturesome" but in some way delinquent students looking for an easy way out.

They also felt those students electing P-F in order to be "venturesome" were looked down upon by the professors as 'second class' students.

The next change in P-F came shortly afterwards: "That the PF authorization cards be turned in directly to the Registrar's Office: that the Registrar's Office send out the same course grading cards for all students so that all instructors would record an appropriate grade; and that the Registrar be empowered to translate letter grades to P-F for students who so elect." Now, the professors would never know who had elected their courses P-F unless the student chose to tell him.

Additional amendments include an allowance period of 4 weeks into the semester before a student must inform the Registrar's Office of intentions to take a course P-F and some courses are only given on a P-F grading system.

More urgent, though, is the trouble in the system that is eroding its effectuality; the system is deviating from its original purpose.

The essential problem, it seems, is just what Dean Allen warned against: the games students are employing to manipulate the system.

The original philosophy of a P-F course being "usefully venturesome" has slipped by the wayside. Some administrators say students exercise the P-F option as a means to protect their cumulative average.

Essentially, the original purpose of the P-F option has slipped the students minds or the student never knew the purpose to begin with. For example, a student decides not to elect P-F. At the semester's end he finds he is getting a 'D' in a course and would prefer an ambiguous 'p' to a blaring 'D'. He then simply accuses the Registrar's Office of having lost his P-F authorization card and gets the 'p'.

The other case is that of a student electing P-F. He finds an unexpected stronghold in the subject and would like the excelling 'A' instead of the bland 'P'. He seeks the Registrar and pleads his case of "I didn't know I'd do so well.", and gets the grade.

One senior woman, Janice DiPietro, expressed this feeling: "It's not fair. Why should you have to decide 4 weeks into the semester whether you want the class P-F or for a grade?

In some areas, students are being hurt by the P-F system. Those students who apply for graduate schools try endlessly to recover the grade they received in a sophomore class they opted P-F. Also, transfer students to other institutions find that, in some cases, their 'P' grades are not awarded credit.

Problems begin in the Registrar's Office at this level. They cannot maintain a dual storage of the P-F grades and the letter grades. In addition, except for a rev'ew of the P-F system when it was 3 years old, there has been no continuous committee to follow its progress and iron out its problems. Instead, the Faculty Senate takes up the problem when it arises.

For example, there is now a new proposal within that body concerning P-F. If a student has elected the P-F option but gets a letter grade that would raise his cum they propose that the letter grade should count and the P-F option he originally elected should be nullified.

Cronin cites falling current birth rate

The legislature, he said, is committed to the University and the future is "going to be great." That, the democrat said, is not always clearly shown.

Cronin noted that a referendum will be on November's ballot to help support some private institutions. He emphasized, however, that this is "short of a guarantee for the survival of private colleges."

He said in order to get assistance from the state, these private schools must offer an area of study not available at a nearby public college.

The main problem now afflicting the University, the secretary said, is inflation. He said Chancellor Randolph Bromery told him energy costs here have tripled in the last 18 months.

Cronin has been the secretary of education for 36 months. He boasts the percentage of the state's budget allocation for public education has increased from 25 percent to 32 percent during Governor Francis Sargent's administration.

Wood puts on freeze

Wood told the faculty senate the enrollment freeze would affect all but the UMass medical school at Worcester, and two programs representing about 400 students at UMass-Boston. However, he said the present student-faculty ratio would be maintained.

Gluckstern described the proposal for the fiscal 1976 budget as essentially opting for quality rather than quantity in the coming year at UMass-Amherst. He said a "modest amount" will be included in the fiscal '76 budget to go before the trustees Wednesday for program expansion.

Faculty Senate secretary Booth, who is also a professor of political science, said there has not yet been discussion of the no-growth budget proposal in the Senate. He said 18,000 copies of the senate minutes, including Wood's remarks, would be distributed to faculty members this week.

"It seems, as I recall the speech, that he (Wood) referred to the 25,000 that we had agreed to on the campus," Booth said, adding, "basically that's compatible with the campus goals of some years ago."

Booth said he did not know why Wood had decided to recommend the enrollment freeze, saying, "its wrong for me to ascribe motives to the President."

Gluckstern said in a phone interview yesterday that Wood's remarks to the faculty were to "explain the backround for the University's budget request."

He said he did not think the freeze represented long-range policy beyond the fiscal year. "The budget includes support for students and faculty which are here already — support which has been eroded by inflation," Gluckstern said.

Wood's budget, said Gluckstern, "is an argument for improving the quality which has been under severe pressure during the growth era of the campus and by inflation."

Student Government Assoc. president Richard Savini could not be reached yesterday afternoon to comment on the proposed enrollment freeze.

URPE sees possible severe U.S. recession

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

"Inflation is not the problem," said assistant economic professor Mike Best at Friday night's economic teach-in sponsored by The Union for Radical Political Economics (URPE). "Inflation is the consequence of other problems."

Best said these problems were "Massive misallocation of resources, deteriorating work-life conditions and the role of the United States in world economy."

As counter-inflationary measures, Best recommended a "decentralizing of power and a socializing of production decisions." The alternative to this he said would probably be "a massive recession."

The teach-in was termed the first of many and was held in response to President Ford's weekend "Economic Summit". The speakers were Jim Crotty, Mike Best and Rick Edwards from the economics department, and William Connolly, Associate Political Science Professor.

"A domestic characteristic of the system," said Jim Crotty, "is that it incapable of stable, balanced economic growth.

"The international development of corporate empires has given us burdens to bear and rising costs as well," he added.

"The market doesn't provide internal balance. It can only be straightened out by a recession." Crotty said a recession occurs inevitably due to the stresses and strains of the system and usually works itself out.

Crotty said that a recession was needed in 1970-71 but that the government stopped it. "Unemployment was up from 3½ percent in 1969 to 6 percent in 1971 and this was bad for the 1972 election," Crotty explained. "Also business was screaming and the corporations were losing the ability to pay their bills."

"What the government did was to invent the New Economic Policy which did three things:

—Controlled wages and prices a little —Gave tax reductions for corporations to improve cash flow

—Devalued the dollar

The government though it could heat up expansion without a recession," Crotty said.

"Now we have a choice," Crotty concluded. "Either we have a severe recession or the economy must have real planning. The government will have to go down into the market industry level and tell the corporations what to do."

Rick Edwards stated that there are "tendencies towards inflation caused by the domination of the economy by huge firms.

"35-45 percent of all economic activity is conducted by huge corporations. The largest 200 corporations own two-thirds of all manufacturing assets in the United States."

Edwards said that the corporations often raise prices, or hold prices constant, but never reduce prices. "The effect of no down-falling prices is inflation," he said.

Edwards said that since the turn of the century, corporations have increased their capital. "As this continues, the problems growing out of this concentration will grow," he said.

Edwards stated that an anti-trust policy of breaking up corporations would not be easy. "Large corporations are American capitalism, not an unfortunate aspect," he said.

William Connolly stressed the need for a "radical reduction of the foreign military and the nationalization of energy industries."

After citing specific proposals to serve as a "rallying cry", Connolly said, "We don't expect dominate elites to accept policies which challenge corporate degeneracy."

The teach-in ended with members of the audience attempting to organize themselves into a socialist action group.

Watch those tow zones

By B. J. ROCHE
Staff Reporter

Parking. In high school it's okay, but at UMass, the word takes on a whole new meaning. Beginning today, it can mean anything from a basic convenience to an extreme frustration for car owners on or off campus. Today is the day set for enforcement of parking regulations on campus.

Though the official rules and regulations booklet has not yet been released, regulations remain much the same as last year.

According to last year's rules, one can be ticketed and fined under three different groupings, with fines being set at $10, $5, and $2. The rules range from parking on a sidewalk to overtime parking.

A car may be towed for a variety of reasons. If it is parked in a bus stop, a loading or service zone, blocking an entrance or exit of a building, in an access way, or in any area designated for a certain individual, such as a Head of Residence, a car is eligible to be towed. These areas are usually marked (logically enough) "Tow Zone."

In addition to those areas, cars without proper decals will be towed from parking lots. This rule is not, however, in effect after 6 p.m. on Friday through 8:00 Monday morning.

Three requirements must be met before a car may be towed. The first is that the car must be illegally parked. Secondly there must be an officer supervising the operation. Last year, the officer in charge was to have been a sergeant or higher, but the ruling was changed this year, allowing security guards and lower ranked police officers to supervise towing. The third rule is that the tow truck must be specifically called to the scene.

Since Sept. 1, more than 165 cars have been towed, and over 1500 tickets issued. Captain Robert Joyce of the UMass police force said that the reasons varied, but, "nine out of ten times we get complaints from people." Enforcement of the parking laws comes out of the force's annual budget.

Capt. Joyce could give no estimate as to how many police hours per week are spent in enforcement of parking regulations. At present there are 11 security guards working a five day week, 37 police officers; and the force is in the process of hiring two more officers.

A controversy arose last year when security guards from certain areas were taken out of the dorms and put on outside duty. Joyce's response was that there was not that much of a crime problem in those areas, and that the police were still close by if there had been a problem.

"We checked into the reported cases, and it turned out that the reports were heresay. The people coming to us really had no problem." A survey was done of the high crime areas, and more police were assigned to those areas. Joyce's opinion was that the action was not detrimental to the safety of students.

Under the present system, police enforcement and protection is provided in three ways: roving patrol cars, police on walking beats, and roving security guards. This results in a continuous flow of personnel at night.

The parking system itself, is not infallible. Persons who feel they have been unjustly ticketed or towed may file an appeal. This may be done at the Dept. of Public Safety, in Dickinson Hall. All appeals must be submitted within seven days of the date of the violation and the ticket must accompany the appeal form.

If the tow fee reimbursement is sought, it must be stated so on the form. A copy of the receipt must be attached to the appeal form. One form must be filled out for each ticket. For further information, contact the office at 545-2121.

Visitors to the campus who do not wish to park in the Campus Center garage are advised to go to the parking office at Hampshire House for a temporary parking permit. The number for that office is 545-0065.

How did such a system come into effect here at UMass; what can be done about it? The answer to these and other baffling questions tomorrow!

Two years ago a publication, "Who Rules Massachusetts Women," revealed the extent to which men hold almost all of the decision-making positions in Massachusetts government.

One Legislator out of 25 is a woman, one judge out of 5, one Cabinet member of ten, one board member out of eight, one school committee member out of 5. No public college presidents, only one vice-president and a dozen deans, the last of the woman superintendents retired last year, and the number of female principals has been dropping for a decade.

This will change. Forty women are running for the Legislature this year. Governor Sargent has in the last three years tripled the number of women serving on major education boards and councils — thirty additional women including the President of Garland Junior College, the Vice-President of Tufts, as well as a former welfare recipient and an American Indian. Several women board appointments to higher education boards did not hold college degrees — a major shift; — four were black, and some of the newer appointees are from low income or working-class neighborhoods. Women engineers, doctors, publishers and college professors now serve on our boards. The tide begins to turn.

More must change, especially our curriculum, our counseling practices, our hiring policies — this University now has hired at least three husband-and-wife teams. How do we do it? Briefly, here are some tools:

1. The State has established five women's opportunity centers so far — furnishing workshops, courses, and special information to women of all ages.
2. Governor Sargent and his budget advisors have agreed to the increased recruitment of part-time students for work on degrees, a major break-through for women.
3. The Congress has enacted Title IX of the Education Amendments — we need your comments on proposed regulations to be sent to HEW by October 15th.
4. Marge Schiller of the Senate President's Office and I are urging the Mass. Advisory Council on Education to conduct a study specifically on sex discrimination in Massachusetts — we need your support and letters.

The climate in this State is right — political leaders have begun to grasp the issue — this is the time to debate the priorities and move into action.

2 alarms reported false

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

The Amherst Fire Department was kept busy last night responding to two false alarms reported within four minutes of each other.

At 6:58 they received a call reporting a small fire in the basement of McNamara, and at 7:02 they received a call from Hills North reporting a fire on the second floor of Hills South.

Both were false alarms.

Both a member of the Campus Police and the Assistant Area Director of Sylvan called the false alarms dangerous. "It takes a total of about three trucks, several firemen, and policemen who have to reset the alarm, when an alarm is sounded," said Tom Bernaski of the Campus Police.

Under Massachusetts General Laws "Whoever without reasonable cause... causes a fire alarm to be pulled... is guilty of a misdemeanor."

Don't forget to register

On Wednesday, October 2, between 10 a.m and 5 p.m. in the Campus Center Concourse the Amherst Town Clerk's office will have a table set up for the purpose or registering UMass students to vote in the November 5th election. On Thursday a similar table will be set up in Hampshire Dining Commons. The hours will be the same, 10 to 5.

All that is needed to register is a UMass I.D. and proof of age (drivers license, birth certificate(.

Over the weekend, a registration drive was held by the student registration committee in hopes of informing every student on campus that they were eligible to register in Amherst. Helping in the drive were about 25 students, Professor Jerome Milleur of the Political Science department, Amherst town Democratic committee chairperson Dee Sutton, and State representative Jim Collins.

Collins said "If this registration drive is a success, then UMass students will ultimately have a louder voice in state political decisions that affect them, the university, and the rest of the state."

Senators wait to meet Castro

Pell, Javits discuss relations with Castro

HAVANA (UPI) — Two leading American senators were dining last night in Havana with Cuban Premier Fidel Castro to discuss whether Cuban-American relations can be improved 24 hours after Castro made his most blistering attack in months against the United States.

Sens. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., and Clairborne Pell, D-R.I., watched on television Saturday night as Castro lambasted President Ford for his defense of American intervention in Latin America.

As Castro spoke, thousands of Cubans in the vast square below him shouted "Give it to them, Fidel! Give it to them!"

Both Javits and Pell discounted the words Sunday morning as Castro's usual anti-American speech but said it would not deflect their purpose in coming here to study whether relations between the two countries, broken since 1961, can begin to be improved.

Aides said the Cuban leader had invited them to dinner last night on the last day of their three-day visit here before they leave for home Monday morning.

Javits said Castro's speech did not surprise him, adding: "It was a traditional anti-American speech he makes on every important occasion.

"I am entirely in disagreement with him. We could argue for hours but that would get us no place. The fact is that he feels that way.

"I am here to see if something can be done to improve relations, and I stress the word 'if'".

Pell's comment was similar.

"He said that last year and the year before and may say it next year again," Pell said. "I don't see any significance that he made the same speech when we were here. We came to see what would be done and will carry out our intentions."

The two senators spent the morning being shown around Havana fishing port and then were driven 25 miles into the country to lunch with Castro's older brother, Ramon, who dresses in the same green guerilla fatigues and cap and bears a striking resemblance to the Cuban leader except for the white beginning to creep into his beard.

Spinola may lose more power as military supports leftist

LISBON (UPI) — Portugal's military junta pointedly reaffirmed support for left-of-center Premier Vasco Goncalves yesterday in a confrontation that may have stripped right-of-center President Antonio de Spinola of his remaining power.

The junta claimed total control of Portugal following a weekend of unrest. And in a statement issued after a three-hour meeting of junta representatives with Spinola, the junta affirmed its "unity" with Goncalves and his cabinet.

The statement did not even mention Spinola's name. Political sources said the statement appeared to seal Spinola's defeat in a power struggle with Goncalves, but said this did not necessarily mean Spinola would lose his post.

Sources close to the government said the politically moderate Spinola was fighting to retain his grip on a country torn by dissent and stirred by reports that "reactionaries" had plotted to assassinate some of its leaders.

A Communist leaflet hinted the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency was behind the alleged plot.

The junta announced the arrest of 238 alleged rightists before dawn Saturday, hours before Spinola bowed to left-wing pressure and banned a right-wing rally in support of himself by a self-styled "silent majority."

Spinola met at the Belem presidential palace yesterday with representatives of the Armed Forces Movement (AFM), the formal name for the officers' junta that overthrew the right-wing regime of Premier Marcelo Caetano five months ago and installed Spinola as provisional president.

An AFM statement before the meeting with Spinola said, "We are trying to extract the logical political consequences created by the real situation."

The AFM issued another statement after the meeting. It did not mention Spinola. It said the meeting had "reaffirmed the unity between the movement of the Armed Forces and the provisional government presided over by Vasco Goncalves."

Premier Goncalves, who as an army colonel masterminded the April 25 coup, is considered left-leaning. His provisional government included Socialists, Communists and the middle-of-the-road Democratic Popular Party.

Dominican police ease watch on guerrillas

SANTO DOMINGO (UPI) — Dominican police relaxed their blockade of the occupied Venezuelan consulate yesterday and allowed Archbishop Hugo Eduardo Polanco Brito to deliver 12 sandwiches and a dozen soft drinks to leftist guerillas and their six hostages.

The archbishop said one of the persons inside was reportedly wounded, but he could not identify him.

A government spokesman said the pro-Castro commandos, holding American diplomat Barbara Hutchison, two Venezuelan diplomats, and three others since Friday, had delivered a third death threat deadline to meet the ransom demands, but he declined to reveal the hour.

The guerrillas have demanded a ransom payment of $1 million, the release of 37 political prisoners, and safe conducts for the prisoners and the guerrillas to Cuba or Mexico, according to Cuba or Mexico, according to police and government sources. They let two deadlines pass Saturday without shooting the hostages.

The archbishop said guerrilla chieftain Radames Mendez Vargas had requested water and medicines for an unidentified wounded person in the building.

Lights and water to the police surrounded consulate building remained cut. The fact that the police allowed the sandwiches and drinks into the building reflected their conviction that there were only six guerrillas and not 23 as the commandos claimed.

The Dominican government has kept an icy silence on the guerrilla demands.

Polanco Brito said the guerrillas threw him a note for President Joaquin Balaguer and told him it was very important. He gave it to the authorities.

He said he saw two of the hostages from a distance, the 47-year-old Hutchison and the Venezuelan Consul, but he could not talk with them. He said both appeared to be in good health.

Gas to increase 10¢?

Fuel taxes to be subject of economic talks

[Compiled From Wires]

WASHINGTON — Proposals to tax gasoline 10 cents a gallon and to place a heavy tax on the excessive use of other fuels such as natural gas and oil will be discussed this week by President Ford's economic advisors, a White House source said yesterday.

A White House source said one of the proposals would be the addition of a special tax of 10 cents per gallon on top of present gasoline taxes.

The source stressed, however, that this was only one of several measures proposed to achieve the twin goal of diverting consumers' inflationary income from the economy and of controling the use of energy.

Economic advisers will begin discussing concrete proposals to deal with the economy today and meetings could continue all week, the source said.

The gasoline increase plan met with immediate opposition from the American Automobile Association, which said that if Ford's advisers "think the American public can be made to believe that a substantial price increase in so basic a consumer product is anti-inflationary, then it is an insult to our intelligence."

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said in a television interview Sunday that such a tax probably would not be approved by Congress.

Two Democrats, Sens. Walter Mondale of Minnesota and Edmund Muskie of Maine, said they would vote against such a tax.

Sources told UPI that discussion of another tax on energy, which was first considered nearly a year ago, is being revived. It would place a heavy tax on the excess use of energy.

The plan would work this way:

Consumers and industry would be permitted to use the same amount of energy — natural gas, oil and electricity — that they used during some set previous period, such as December of 1972, at the going rate. Any additional energy use would be heavily taxed at a rate yet to be decided.

Income derived from these taxes would finance jobs for the unemployed by the federal government.

the economy

At the summit conference, Ford announced three steps he has taken:

-Consolidation of the government's domestic and foreign economy efforts under an Economic Policy Board, to be headed by Simon.

-Establishment of a White House labor-management committee to advise him on major economic policy.

-Appointment of Princeton economist Albert Rees to head the Council on Wage and Price Stability recently authorized by Congress.

Ford urged all Americans "to join me in a great effort — and to become inflation-fighters and energy-savers."

A number of speakers at the summit called for a new program of energy conservation, to reduce the nation's reliance on costly foreign oil, and a higher tax would be aimed at reducing consumption.

There could be even higher gasoline prices in the future, if the government decides to release the rest of the domestic oil industry from price controls.

About 60 percent of the nation's domestic production — referred to as "old" oil — is held to a top price of about $5.25 a barrel, while the rest of production sells for near the world market price of about $10 a barrel.

Simon wants price controls removed from all domestic oil, and some Treasury sources who question the move believe it could result in an additional five cents per gallon cost for both gasoline and home heating oil.

Ford will send recommendations to Congress within ten days

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democratic Congress is under increasing pressure to work the rest of the year on ways to fight what speakers at the economy conference called "stagflation" — a combination of inflation and economic slowdown.

President Ford told the conference just before it adjourned Saturday that he will have economic recommendations before Congress within 10 days.

Congressional leaders plan a recess beginning Oct. 11 until after the November election so members can go home and campaign. They are not likely to abandon the recess, though they may start it later.

Ford gave no indication what his legislative package will contain, saying he wants to digest the enormous amount of testimony and discussion accumulated at the summit conference and a series of preliminary meetings.

It would appear likely, however, that one proposal would be for tax revision giving some relief to middle and low income families and perhaps picking up offsetting revenues by tightening special provisions that hold down the tax bills of some wealthy individuals and businesses, notably the petroleum industry that has prospered with the steep rise in prices.

For practically all of its two-year life the present Congress and specifically the House Ways and Means Committee has been working fitfully on a tax bill.

The committee actually reported out, early this year, a special windfall profits tax that among other things would have phased out the oil industry's depletion allowance.

The bill never was scheduled for a vote, and the committee said its provisions would be incorporated into the broader tax measure on which it resumed work.

That bill is now nearly complete and it had been generally assumed that, while the House might pass some version of it in the closing weeks of the session, it would have no chance of Senate enactment this year.

But a recommendation from Ford, with the momentum of the publicized economy conference behind it, could make a difference.

Kuwait favors oil compromise; Sadat defends economic stance

By United Press International

The Kuwaiti government said yesterday it was in favor of a compromise solution to the world oil problem that would satisfy both oil-producing and oil-consuming states and establish links between the prices of foodstuffs and petroleum.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said Saturday night the Arab world has no intention of using its oil riches to destroy the international economic system but only wants its rights restored.

"A wide-scale campaign is underway, provoked by Zionist organizations in the world, trying to picture the issue of Arab money as the cause of all the political, economic and social problems faced by the world," Sadat said in a televised speech, "Of course, this is not true."

In an apparent reference to recent warnings by President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger of disastrous consequences if oil prices are not lowered, Sadat said, "The Arabs do not seek to destroy the foundations of economic stability in the world as the powers are claiming. The Arabs only want their rights and they realize their duty toward the world

Sadat has repeatedly insisted there can be no peace between the Israelis and the Arabs until the difficult problem of the Palestinians is resolved.

Venezuela to increase tax on foreign oil companies

CARACAS(UPI) — Venezuela will raise taxes paid by U.S. and other foreign oil companies this week by at least 3.5 percent and probably more, government sources said yesterday, and that will increase prices to U.S. consumers.

The South American oil giant, which ranks third among world oil exporters and ships about 1.8 million barrels of oil to the United States daily, now collects an effective 58 percent income tax from oil companies.

Government sources told UPI that the new tax hikes, which are expected to be announced Oct. 1, will be at least 3.5 percent because that was the increase called for by the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting countries at their recent meeting in Vienna.

The tax increase will be reflected in higher prices for oil consumers. Oil companies have built-in clauses in their supply contracts calling for price hikes in the event of higher taxes in producing countries.

"You have to be willing to take risks"

Draft dodger to confront Ford's amnesty plan

NEW YORK (AP) — A young draft dodger says he will confront President Ford's clemency officials today in Washington and refuse alternative service in an effort to win "total, unconditional and universal amnesty" for all Vietnam-era draft resisters and deserters.

Bill Meis, 29, of Decatur, Ill., who returned to the United States last week from Canada with help from the Safe Return Amnesty Committee, based here, said yesterday he was worried that the confrontation might result in his arrest.

"But if you commit yourself to action," Meis said, "you have to be willing to take risks."

Meis, under indictment charging violation of the Selective Service law, is one of about 4,000 draft evaders the government considers fugitives — 3,000 of whom are in Canada. The government says more than 12,000 Vietnam-era deserters are currently at large.

President Ford has offered clemency to draft dodgers and deserters who return and work at public service jobs "promoting national health, safety or interest" for up to 24 months.

The work would be considered acknowledgement of the draft evaders' allegiance to the United States. Deserters are required to reaffirm allegiance with an oath.

"I have never been disloyal," Meis said. "The President demands that I perform involuntary servitude, even though the Constitution clearly forbids such treatment. I cannot accept these proposals."

Meis and Mike Uhl, national coordinator of Safe Return, refused to say how or exactly where the Washington confrontation would take place but Uhl said Meis would announce his intentions to refuse alternative service to "officials directly responsible for civilian and military review and overseeing and implementing Ford's earned re-entry program."

Meis said, "I urge President Ford, the Congress of the United States and above all the American people to support and declare a total, unconditional and universal amnesty. I urge that this be done not only for myself but for my wife and children, for my brothers in exile at home and abroad, and for those men and women whose resistence from within the armed forces earned them less than honorable discharges."

From Washington, Meis said he would go to Springfield, Ill., and surrender to a U.S. attorney.

New techniques to replace radical breast surgery

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Dramatic new findings by a breast cancer task force indicate the traditional type of radical surgery undergone by First Lady Betty Ford offers no advantage over a less mutilating technique, the head of the National Cancer Institute said yesterday.

Dr. Frank Rauscher said the task force findings also contain evidence of at least equal importance that chemical therapy can "drastically" reduce the recurrence of breast cancer and that radiation therapy after surgery, with its bad side effects, is unnecessary.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Ford's condition "continued stable and her progress from the operation is satisfactory," said White House spokesman Bill Roberts, relaying word from her doctors at Bethesda Naval Medical Center late Sunday afternoon.

The major "Report to the Profession," resulting from studies conducted by the task force at 37 hospitals around the nation since 1971, will be presented for the first time Monday in a day-long National Cancer Institute conference. The conference has been scheduled for many months.

Breast cancer is the leading cancer killer of women. But surgical treatment of the disease has changed little in the past 100 years, and scant progress has been made in preventing a recurrence of breast cancer or improving chances of survival.

Cancer Institute officials believe the new discoveries could result in an important reduction in surgical disfigurement and increase the chances for successful treatment of the 90,000 American women each year who develop breast cancer.

Cover-up trial begins tomorrow

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Watergate cover-up trial begins tomorrow with the full role to be played by former President Richard M. Nixon still unknown.

Continued optimistic reports about Nixon's recovery from a phlebitis condition make it more likely that he will eventually testify as a witness in the trial.

Nixon's California doctors have indicated he is likely to leave the hospital within 10 days.

The former president has been subpoenaed — for widely differing reasons — as a witness by the Watergate special prosecutor's office and cover-up defendant John D. Ehrlichman.

State official urges end to Boston school boycott

police.

About 20,000 of the 92,000 Boston school children have stayed away from class in recent days. School officials say 5,000 pupil absences would be a normal daily figure.

Schools opened 2½ weeks ago under a court-ordered desegregation plan.

Anrig said most of Boston's pupils "are going to school and doing so in safety" despite outbreaks of racial fighting in the past two weeks at Hyde Park High School and of stonings of school buses around the city.

And he said, "There is not in any way, in my judgment, the need for Federal marshals" to guard the children.

"In the situations in the South and the other parts of the country, federal marshals have been used only in those cases where state and local officials refused to act. Clearly, that is not the case in Boston."

One girl cheerleader was cut Saturday as a crowd of Chelsea fans threw stones at a bus carrying the East Boston High School football team, coaches and cheerleaders after East beat Chelsea 16-8. The stoning occurred outside Chelsea stadium.

The injured girl suffered a knee cut from flying glass but was not hospitalized.

Ford may declare Maine coast disaster

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — President Ford is expected to decide this week whether to declare Maine's coast a disaster area because of the creeping infestation of red tide.

Timothy Wilson, the state'a director of civil emergency preparedness, said his office and the Federal Disaster Assistance Agency sent a report to Ford last week seeking consideration for disaster relief.

Hundreds of clamdiggers and processors have been out of work because of the ban on shellfishing along Maine's coast. The clamdiggers are not eligible for unemployment benefits because they are self employed.

The bans have been increasingly imposed along the coast since May 31.

State officials have repeatedly emphasized the red tide, a toxic marine organism affects only clams, mussels and quahogs, the crustaceans which get their food by siphoning water through their bodies. It does not affect lobsters, crabs or finfish.

But when the entire Maine coast was closed in 1972 because of the tide, these non-affected industries also felt the economic impact because of people's fears.

Minerals scarce

INDIANAPOLIS [AP] - The United States is heading into a minerals and materials crisis that will make the fuel crisis look like a Sunday school picnic, a Ford administration official says.

John Kyl, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, said, "We'll have a crisis in materials within five years. If you list the basic minerals we use regularly, a number of them we have to import 100 per cent. Not only minerals, but also forest and agricultural products."

Kyl said America's mining industry has not developed necessary technology and added the nation also needs to make some basic decisions on conservation matters.

Thieu denounced

SAIGON [UPI] - A thousand demonstrators, including Budhist and Catholic priests, legislators, and newspaper editors, denounced the government yesterday for corruption and repression of the press.

Police clashed briefly with the marchers in front of Saigon's central market, but there were no reports of arrests or of serious injuries.

One banner called on President Nguyen Van Thieu to resign. Reporters on the scene said the brief struggle took place between police and the demonstrators' own self-styled "security force" in the hour-long assembly.

A similar demonstration at the port city of Nha Trang, 188 miles to the northeast, was held without incident, field reports said.

A government spokesman said Saturday that demonstrations would be permitted as long as they "do not disturb the public order."

Cypriots demonstrate

NICOSIA, Cyprus [UPI] - Tens of thousands of Greek Cypriots held a rally yesterday in the southern Cyprus port of Limassol to demand the withdrawal of Turkish invasion troops and the immediate return of Archbishop Makarios.

Makarios was overthrown as the island's president July 15 by advocates of uniting Cyprus with Greece. Turkey invaded July 20 to block any such union.

Between 60,000 and 70,000 Greek Cypriots attended the rally in the port's main square. They carried pictures of Makarios and banners with slogans such as "Makarios back to Cyprus," "We want a demilitarized Cyprus" and "Turkish troops must be withdrawn."

Among the demonstrators were many refugees currently living on the nearby british base area of episkopi.

DST to be cut

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Congress hopes this week to put the nation back on standard time during the "dark" months of November through February, bringing an early end to controversial year-round day-light savings time it ordered during the energy crisis.

The Senate came within one amendment last Thursday of accepting a House-passed standard time bill. Senate leaders planned to resume work on the measure Tuesday in an effort to get it to the White House before the end of October.

The measure would return the counnry to standard time from Oct. 27, 1974 to feb. 23, 1975, repealing a section of last January's "emergency" measure which ordered year'around daylight time lasting until April 27, 1975.

Confrontation: Arabs vs. the Fourth World

By MIKE FEDEROW

The Arabs are afloat on a sea of money — and enjoying every bit of the ride. But the strains they have been putting on the international economy are just beginning to be felt.

If you are supposed to get between $17 billion and $30 billion (estimates vary) every three months, your debtor is going to have one hell of a time trying to continually finance that sort of money. These amounts are larger than the GNP's of all but a handful of countries. In the first year of high oil prices, the European lending market has been sucked dry. Although most of the bill for September has been paid, many countries are going to be really sweating in December. And there is no relief in sight.

A second part of the problem is that the Arabs don't know what to do with their money. Their domestic economies, with a few exceptions, weren't equipped to handle the cash flow that's come in already — threatening serious inflation. And they are running out of foreign investment opportunities.

So in a couple of years, the Arabs will wind up sitting on their money. And every quarter, billions of dollars will be taken out of the world economy.

Already the effects of this kind of wealth transfer are hurting entire nations. The poorest economies of Europe have been the southern countries — Portugal, Spain, Italy, and Greece. In all four recently there has been massive political instability:

Portugal's upper classes have decided that maintaining repression at home while trying to fight colonial wars is too expensive a luxury. At first, of course, they tried to hang on to their colonies anyway. (Though it is interesting that the one colony Portugal hasn't freed yet — Angola — is also the one that has potential oil fields.)

Spain won't be able to resolve her problems until Franco dies, but already there are several serious splits developing between labor, the church, businessmen, the army, and various separatist movements, of which the Basques are only the best-known.

Italy is bankrupt. The recent $2 billion German loan gives Italy some time, but that's all. Only a coalition between two longtime enemies, the Christian Democratic Party (Catholic) and the Communist Party, could possibly give a government the support it needs. And that is at this time unlikely.

Greece's economy isn't in much better shape. Greece is trying to get back into the Common Market (it was kicked out of associate status after the 1967 coup), but that may not come in time.

And so it goes. The "Fourth World," those countries neither industrialized nor possessing much natural resources, are so broke that there is no point in talking about it. Only Norway and West Germany in Europe are really doing well.

At some level this is only poetic justice. The nonindustrialized countries have for decades been forced to meet constantly rising prices for industrial goods, while the prices of their raw materials have at best been unstable. Over the long run raw material prices haven't even stayed at the same relative level vis-a-vis industrial prices, but somehow the industrial countries didn't find this so terrible at all. But oh! how the shoe hurts when it's on the other foot!

This situation cannot last forever. The Arabs aren't stupid — they've been buying arms like crazy, it's difficult to believe that they are doing it just for the sake of a few hundred thousand Palestinians. After all, the Arabs were content to let them rot in refugee camps for twenty-five years.

And although there are at least two other areas (northern Iraq and southern Arabia) where wars may break out at any time, it is from another direction that they expect war to come.

The West has the most sophisticated weaponry in the world, highly-regarded armies, and physical proximity to the Middle East. And it is not exactly the case that the West has never intervened in other countries' affairs for its own benefit.

Probably intervention would take the form of "restoring the peace" after a major war has stirred up. Then it could be more easily sold to the public.

While this is a bit much right now, wait another year or two of rising prices, due to oil needs; rising interest rates, due to the flow of capital to the Middle East; and as a result falling wages, collapsing banks, and toppling governments.

Letters to the editor

Lovejoy a hero

To the Editor:

Mr. Lovejoy's noble self-sacrifice demands our utmost attention and certainly deserves our spirited support. His act was desperate, but it was borne out of a commitment to promote sanity in a world fascinated with expedience and resigned to the almightiness of technological pursuits no matter how perverted and grotesque. If Lovejoy was reckless, it was a Hero's recklessness. It was an action necessary to waken humanity. Lovejoy is symbolic of one man's conscience and sensitivity battling, in the finest tradition of the heroic, [a tradition which is immortal], an unaccountable, irresponsible, despotic Force, which pays heed not to the value of life but to the value of profit. The question we face is whether that immortal tradition of heroism will be killed off by the immediate threat of radiation poisoning. It has been said that 'This is a country not of men, but of laws.' We must forever keep in mind, however, that men make the laws.

As for those dull-witted enough to argue that if it's all right for Lovejoy, then it's all right for Erlichman to have behaved as he did if he too believed it was moral, I can only say, by way of brief reply, that Ehrlichman was a rather secretive criminal involved in an obstruction of justice. Lovejoy, it will be remembered, turned himself in to plea for justice. And I ask you, what name could be more fitting? To act as he did one must love and respect human worth and know the joys of simply living. How can anyone not admire Lovejoy. He has the dignity of a Don Quixote and the determination of a Sam Lovejoy. No one can say Lovejoy's act was anything but purely unselfish, except perhaps a marbleheaded psychologist who, in any case, should stick with rats and leave the mission of being human beings to human beings.

Now I realize fully that enthusiasm is in our daily as unwelcome as it is uncommon; unless, of course, that enthusiasm is selfish. Yes, we're all enthusiastic and fervid when it comes to personal vanity and self-assurance. If only this energy could be channeled in a direction similar to Lovejoy's. Who of us could live in such a world? For example, you can be sure Joyce Kosofsky actually believes [enthusiastically] in the intelligence and wit of her columns. But, while we may laugh at such a thought, we can not condemn her. Each one of us, no doubt, is laboring under some equally absurd delusion when it comes to OUR OWN worth. Because U Masses suffer a general inferiority complex, and anonymity is felt by each of us, we tend to 'compensate' by feeling superior to our surrounding. Thus everyone else is viewed as the typical Umie, while we see ourselves as a sort of T. S. Eliot in a perfect waste land. We are selfish in this way because we are a product of the Capitalist Ethic [as much a product of it as are Northeast Utilities, Ehrlichman, or Twinkies]. We must forsake the Capitalist 'I' for the Communist 'we' never forgetting that Christ [not Lenin, Mao or Trotsky] who preached love, was the first and purest Communist. Well, this is perhaps better left for another letter.

Nevertheless, instead of crying about the apathy we are surrounded with, I humbly submit that decency begins with you. Yes friends, I wholeheartedly advocate the toppling of any and all towers of Corporate Power [interpret this figuratively or literally, as you like]. This is a Power which assimilates all but one or two Thoreau's. Lovejoy is genuine, the rest of us are but pompous dreamers whose encounter with reality is limited to stand in line waiting to be branded with a number.

Defending the environment

To the Editor:

Eric Fleets's article 'Ecological Ignorance' should be noted by those that oppose the preliferation of nuclear energy as an example of the kind of misinterpretation to which we have made ourselves susceptible. [I use 'we' to identify my sympathies not to imply that I deserve any kind of respect for my activity.]

Opposition is for me a two-pronged argument: first, the inability and unwillingness of American, corporately-vested technology to create a system-from fuel production to disposal which is at all safe [neutralizing the argument that a coal plant produces more radiation than a nuclear one], and second, the blindness of American corp.-vested etc. technology to solutions to the world's energy problems which are cleaner and safer, more permanent and stable yet more flexible and in general which show more respect for the community and the future. These kinds of solutions are practical and within reach. Unfortunately because the imagination of American tecchnological institutions has not matured from the days of Edison and the Wright Brothers in anything like the way its business expertise has, the money and power is not available to implement these solutions. [The momentum of atomic war research has put blinders on a lot of people that falsely hoped for a Bomb, although today more likely the agent is bureaucratic momentum and self-preservation.]

The first argument by itself only stalls the issue because it is not optimistic and is thus open to attacks like Eric Fleet's which rightly point to the folly of our present course. People are wary of simple scare stories which without direction can seem only carping. After all for a Montague resident who envisions all that cash in the town till or an economist a balanced balance of payments - and there are I'm sure better arguments in favor of a successful nuclear energy program - the hope can easily persist that if the mythical safe fuel, power and disposal system existed we'd be on easy street for the next 50-100 yrs.

The case against nuclear power will be infinitely more constructive and convincing when the public fully realizes not only the dangers of nuclear energy but also that money and research have been diverted from valid alternatives due to what is nothing less than pigheadedness. This second argument must not only be emphasized in proportion to the first but articulated in specifics. By not doing so we are ourselves subject to the charge of stifling imagination which should correctly be levied at the energy industry and its running dog, the A.E.C.

Fleet misleading

To the Editor:

Eric Fleet's editorial "Ecological Ignorance" which appeared in the COLLEGIAN on 9-26-74, is inaccurate, incomplete, and full of generalizations.

Mr. Fleet states that us "environmentalists" are "for the most part misguided, being led by a highly educated core of elite activists." As ecologists, my colleagues and I form our opinion about issues such as nuclear power after we have studied all the PROS AND CONS and are not lead by anyone!

Fleet also states that the presently operating plants are successful. For example, the Vermont Yankee atomic plant in Vernon, Vermont has been shut down more than it has been operating.

The Emergency Core Cooling system has never proved to be able to work. If this system is not activated within one minute after loss of the normal coolant the entire reactor core begins to melt down. At this point there is no technology adequate to stop the uncontrollable meltdown.

In handling nuclear power there is no room for human error, which in all probability can happen anytime and could result in widescale death and injury.

The media, which is called "the great American propaganda machine" is not stirring people into panic as Fleet indicates. It is just making people aware of the problems and dangers of nuclear power despite opposition from industry.

Furthermore, Mr. Fleet does not consider any alternative sources of energy such as wind, solar, current, hydrogen, geothermal, and nuclear fusion to avoid dependence on the OPEC countries for petroleum.

Obviously Mr. Fleet has not looked at all the facts of nuclear fission power plants and is just taking up space in the COLLEGIAN that could be put to better use.

Curing the economy

'Will all the delegates please come to order and be seated. The First Annual Presidential Economic Summit will begin. You up there, in the bleachers, stop throwing quarters! and you in the box seats, stop passing that hat around!......Thank you.' As you know most of us are gathered here to battle against America's Public Enemy 1 -- no not Frank Sinatra, but Inflation. I know some of you are here for no other reason than to catch the Mets-Phillies game which will start in about half an hour, but most of you are interested as I am, in curbing your inflated currency. Thats why we are here. As President, I hope to take your suggestions and file them in the prpoper receptacles. The first speaker will be R. Forbush Smythe, Chairman of the World Bank.'

'Thank you Mr. President. We are facing a national disaster. There are too many of us and we all want the same things. Well some of you can't have them. I have a modest proposal. Lets double the interest rates. This will have the effect of tightening money which will mean no housing, little investment, and massive unemployment. We should institute wage controls and then jack up prices. All of this will have the effect of getting people fed up with America. Then they'll all leave the country and the rest of us who stay behind will have a great time!'

'Thank you Mr. Smythe for that suggestion. I see Mr. George Meanjeans raising his hand. Yes George?'

'Mr. President. Dat was an absoid zugestion. I know how t'lick dis problem. If everbody joined de AFL-CIO, den dis here inflation would be all ivah!'

'Hows dat George?'

'Den ever'body would have t'pay UNION DUES!! An if ever'body did dat, we would jes go on strike till de Inflation would give in. Its so simple dat I'm soiprised dem hotshot brains ovah at Harverd did't dink of it foist!'

'Thank you George. We'll think about it. I'll now recognize the rotund gentleman in the first row, Mr. W. Slick Dude of the Petroleum Instutute.'

'Thank you Gerry, What we need is so simple and easy that its simplicity is staring us in the face. What should be done is simply raising the prices of oil and gas. This will have the effect of increasing substantially the profits of our big oil companies. And because practically everyone has bought shares lately in all of our big oil conglomerates, more oil profits will mean more dividends to millions of Americans. Thus inflation will undoubtedly subside. Or I even if it doesn't, who'll care because of the nature of our economic system - the consumers are the stockholders!'

'Thank you Bill, we'll take that one under serious consideration. I'll now call on the Arab genteman with the oil derrick on his lapel, Abdul ben Big Bucks.'

'Thank you sir. My solution is also simple. My countrymen and I will simply raise the prices of our crude oil. This will bring to us more American dollars, with which we'll invest in your country. We'll buy up your country till we own everything and then your inflation will be our inflation.'

'Thank you Abdul. I see the hand of Wilson B. Profitt of General Motors flowing in the breeze. What do you say Willie?'

'Gerry, we are facing a terrible dilemma today. How do we get rid of inflation and get rich at the same time. I propose to get rich and the Hell with inflation!.. Thats why we at G.M. are raisiong the prices of all of our cars and trucks. You know, you Fords aren't the only ones with a better ides!'

'Thank you Willie ......Okay, I recognize that young lady in the back dressed up like the University Library.'

'Thank you Mr. President. My name is Josherina Tough-cookie and I represent the Society For the Preservation of Oral Fixation And Bad Taste!'

'Wait! How did you get in here?'

'I snuck in through the back hole, I mean door!'

Look out below

Rufus was jealous. Here he was, in the UMass infirmary, and not one reporter was on hand to divulge his condition to the masses. 'What does Richard Nixon got that I don't got?' he asked himself outloud. To which his roommate replied: 'Phlebitis'.

'And what does Betty Ford got that I don't got'?' he continued. To which his roommate just smiled.

Yes, poor Rufus was confined to bed in the infirmary after he had the misfortune of standing under an Orchard Hill balcony as a fifty-gallon garbage can full of water was dropped on his foot. crushing nineteen crucial bones. The doctor said he'd be on crutches for at least three months.

Rufus was philosophical about the whole thing. After all, he reasoned, if he had taken one step to the left, the can would have landed on his head, and he wasn't sure he had nineteen critical bones there worth braking. Rufus assumed the whole thing was an accident, the result of Saturday night dorm rowdiness. He figured it was just some inordinate jock trying to douse him with water for laughs, and the can was heavier than the poor jock could handle.

Little did he hnow that it was a carefully conceived plot to kill him.

As it turned out, the attempted assasination was a result of a conversation between two young UMies who both agreed that the Collegian's coverage of Rufus McWhirter, the famous American Triplet, was uncalled for and, to quote them, 'a waste of space.' To prevent any more wasted space, they reasoned, they should knock off Rufus McWhirter himself. Literally.

They followed Rufus, back to his dorm for several days, so as to become familiar with his strolling patterns. They discovered, in doing so, that on every Saturday night, at exactly 10:27 p.m., Rufus left his room on the seventh floor of Dickinson, walked across The Bowl, and headed for the seventh floor of Webster because, as he later explained to the Campus Police, 'the toilets are cleaner up there.'

Accounting for elevator time, the assassins calculated that Rufus would be located under their fifth floor balcony at precisely 11:03 p.m. They were off by a mere fraction of a second.

When the assassins discovered that they merely maimed their victim, they were pissed. When they discovered they had the wrong person, they were outraged.

Lo and behold, Rufus McWhirter, the American Triplet, was safe and sound that night, roaring drunk at a party in Southwest, still unaware of Rufus' existence. Rufus' accident and just everything.

Yes Rufus this story is about you and what you've been doing since you got here.

He picked up the Collegian the following morning, read of the assassination attempt, and saw the picture of Rufus lying in his infirmary bed. Funny, he thought, that kid looks like me. If it wasn't for the cast on his foot, I'd swear it was me.

McWhirter thought for sure that the Collegian photo staff must have mixed up their negatives again. In any case, he thought, I'm glad I'm not him. Where was I last night anyway??

When Rufus read of his own accident in the Collegian, it made him feel important. On page seven was an anonymous letter to the editor, apologizing to Rufus for dropping the can on his foot, explaining that they had meant to drop it on Rufus McWhirter and how could they help it if they looked alike and had the same first name?

Underneath that letter was a short letter, signed by a the president of the UMass Students Unsympathetic towards Campus Klutzes (USUCK), a leftist RSO group which receives a quarter of a million dollars annually from the Student Senate.

Here's what that letter said: 'Rufus, be glad it wasn't your head.'

TAKING THE CONSUMER FOR A RIDE

Arabs without oil: A big sandbox

The Arab world's control of modern-day life is oil. With that commodity in one hand, and a cash box in the other, these opportunists traipse from country to country, endeavoring to pocket quadrillions of dollars, marcs, and yen in return for a pint or two of the black stuff.

Thus, as his first vaguely retaliatory act, President Ford has warned the oil-producers that artificial rigging of oil prices could bring "disastrous consequences," and that no country could gain from another's loss "except for the very short term and at very great risk." So with wedding gifts barely opened, the new President has entered the ring to do battle with possessors of one of the greatest trump cards in world history.

Upon hearing the Arabs' reaction to the warning, it wasn't difficult to realize the formidibility of the foe. They promptly replied that the president had declared "economic war" on them; that they were "shocked" by the statement; and that the oil producers would "fight back." Such a reaction certainly does not indicate an overwhelming intention on the part of the Arabs to move toward an equitable agreement on the matter. To be sure, the oil-producers remain quite stubborn in their demands to the rest of the world.

It must be understood, however, that without this vital bargaining point, the Arab nations have little more to offer the world than a box of sand. Just like any other nation, they want to grow and enrich themselves. We Americans, for instance, instead of leaving the Indians with at least a large portion of their land, opted to treat them like just so much excrement in a cesspool. Likewise, the Arabs know that a little too much kindness with their oil now, could definitely mean winding up with very little power and influence at a much later date.

With this thought in mind then, and also with the Israelis breathing down their necks, it is going to be very difficult for Mr. Ford, Henry Kissinger, or any of the world's leaders, to influence the Arabs into reaching an agreement which would help out the other nations of the world.

The opinions in this space represent those of a majority of the Board of Editors.

"I have a horror of what happens to retired people. They just go to seed."

The man who said this is a 73 year old retired clergyman who isn't going to seed. His name is Henry Bartlett and he is a full-time UMass special student.

Hank, as he prefers to be called, says his new life at UMass is an "exciting experience."

"I know nothing about some things, like folklore, while I used to know elementary psychology, and now have a lot of catching up to do."

Hank is a tall, lean white-haired man who walks quickly and dresses in a distinguished manner. He has blue eyes and a smile that flashes out suddenly like a revolving lighthouse beam at night.

Hank was born in Poughkeepsie, New York and studied engineering for two years at Rutgers before transferring to Hartford Theological Seminary.

"I reacted early in life to people's despair," he said of his decision to go into the ministry. "I felt compelled to do something about it."

Another influence on his decision was Dr. Clifford Case who was the minister in Poughkeepsie. "He was a friend of my father's and not at all the pompous, clerical type. My father went back to church as a result of their friendship."

Hank was ordained a minister of the United Church of Christ. His first parish was Kent, Connecticut, where he stayed for 13 years.

It was there that he met his wife who has just recently graduated Magna Cum Laude from UMass in 1973, at the age of 65. She majored in Sociology and is now working with the Greenfield Council on the Aged.

After three years in Stockbridge, Mass., Hank enlisted as a chaplain in the army. "There were 18 men from my parish in the service," he said. "One got killed. I couldn't stay out any longer. I had to go where they were."

Hank was abroad for two years. "I felt privileged to be with such men. They were so young and they had to do what they did.

"Although the only danger I was in was the aerial bombardments, the war was real for me. I had to conduct funerals for the men who were killed, and I spent a lot of time with the men who were im combat."

When he got out of the army, he worked briefly in New York City and then enlisted again in the Korean War. In 1958 he got out of the army and took up civilian life in Freeport, Louisiana.

For seven years he owned and operated the Golden Rule Employment Service. "I named it myself," he said with a touch of pride in his voice.

In January of 1965, he started work as a minister in Charlemont, Mass. "It turned out to be what I wanted," Hank explained. "It was mainly counseling and befriending people. I feel that my mission in life is trying to untangle the webs that people get caught in.

"I sympathize with people who are not pure and good, because I'm not either," he said with a smile.

A change in Hank's life came when a house in the restored colonial village of Old Deerfield was left for the use of a retired minister.

"I felt I should take the house, even though it meant retiring from the ministry in Charlemont," Hank said a little sadly. "It was a delightful community, and I didn't want to retire."

He started taking continuing education courses at night last year, and this year became a full-time English student, financing his education on the G.I. Bill.

"Everyone is so courteous and helpful. They didn't make me stand in line to get my I.D. card or arrange my courses.

"My impression of UMass is very euphoric. If there are any faults, I'm not aware of them.

"My classmates thought I was a professor at first," Hank said explaining the UMie reaction to his presence. "Then they were a little suspicious. But now I feel accepted.

Hank is not working towards a degree, but plans to study English with an emphasis in writing for two years. He has ambitions to be a free-lance writer.

"I'm 73 now, so I don't have much time left. I've got to pack it all in," he said, flashing a quick smile.

Intramurals: Something for all

By SUSAN LUNTER
Staff Writer

The UMass intramural program "has grown in leaps and bounds" according to Peter Graham, assistant director of the program.

From its beginnings in the late 1800's, the program has grown into the largest student-run program on campus.

When I entered the main office located at 215 Boyden, I was given a warm reception. The place bustled with people trying to get programs organized and offering advice to interested students.

I'm an avid track fan and Sue Chapmen, Assistant Intramural Director answered my early questions on the subject. She informed me that the deadline for track applications was being extended because not enough women had replied.

About this time I was ushered into a small office and seated in a chair. I talked with Peter Graham. As I was interested mainly in the track program, my questions were aimed mostly at this sport. I was curious as to why discus wasn't being offered for women as an event and was quickly informed that there are few women on campus who know how to throw a discus as compared to men. Softball throwing is offered as an alternative to the women with the strong arms.

Last year marked the first year a track meet was held at this university. Ken O'Brien, the varsity track coach, had his team help the intramural students run the show. Rules were set up limiting participants to one field event and one track event. Also, one can't join a relay team unless he has organized his own team of four competent people.

Intramurals also are very useful. Students participating in events, do so voluntarily. However, students are also employed as Office Supervisors, Equipment Supervisors, Field/ Gym Supervisors, Sport Officials, Lifeguards, and Computer Operators. 60-65 per cent of the funds collected in intramurals goes back in the form of salaries to pay these people.

Peter Graham feels the intramural program has "grown in quality and quantity." There is good facilities indoors, and alot more fields for participation outdoors. He also foresees the day when intramurals will be broken down into two categories - one for the "medalist," and one for the "novelist." This can only come about through the students own future interests.

Before 1968, participation in intramurals was limited to males only. Intramurals in effect, has been co-ed for only six years. 1971-72 saw the introduction of a formal Summer Program and the specialization of a womens' program.

The fact that intramurals is now co-ed, has helped the sports alot. There are eight new activities that didn't exist before, plus football participation increased by 20 per cent this year alone. About the only sport women can't participate in is wrestling - for obvious reasons.

Intramurals depends on entrants if it is to survive. Football and softball (two big team sports), still draw more participants than track which is more individualized.

Graham states this is due to the fact that team sports contain "people to cover up for others." He believes once there's "more quality, there's less quantity." Certain people, who would normally try for a sport, become frightened when they learn someone is outstanding at that sport and tend to shy away.

However, existing rules prohibit members of varsity of junior varsity teams from competing in that intramural sport for a year. Student professionals, or anyone who has been awarded varsity letters in a sport at a four year college, are immediately disqualified from participation.

Sniff! Sniff! That familiar old cold is back again. What can you do? Aspirin commercials say doctors recommend plenty of fluids, lots of rest and take aspirin. However, your grandmother would tell them where to go. She knows the only cure for the common cold brews in her steaming pots of home-made chicken noodle soup.

This savory soup is not an appetizer, but rather a sufficient main dish, that can be served with rye bread on the side.

Sally's Chicken Noodle Soup

Ingredients:
1 whole chicken
2 sticks celery
1 onion
2 carrots parsley
salt and pepper
1-16 ox. box vermicelli noodles bay leaves

Equipment:
2 large pots, sharp knife, cutting board, and ladle.

Dissect chicken into 6 parts: 2 wings, 2 legs, and 2 breasts. Boil it for 1 hour in water enough to cover.

Meanwhile, boil the noodles in the other pot. Dice the celery, parsley and onion. Add this mixture with spices to soup. Boil ½ hour more.

Tips: Keep leaves on celery for added flavor. Debone the chicken after the first night. Save money by buying pieced chicken. (legs, wings, breast(

Approximate cost: $3.50 for 10 to 12 persons.

This remedy is guaranteed to cure the a-a-a-choos or your money back.

Asian studies certificate

The Asian Studies Committee of UMass administers an 'Asian Studies Certificate' Program for interested graduate, undergraduate and special students.

Unlike the B.A. program in Chinese and Japanese offered by the Asian Studies Program of UMass, the Certificate program does not constitute a major and is designed to supplement the student's principal academic pursuit on the campus. Students who fulfil program requirements are awarded the certificate in Asian Studies attesting to their achievement.

For more detailed information, contact the Asian Studies Office, 804 Thompsom, 545-0886.

Agricultural publications now more widely available

UMass has signed an important agreement with the National Agricultural Library (NAL) to make state agricultural publications more available to more people.

The agreement calls for the cooperative microfilming of publications from the beginning of the agricultural experiment stations, extension services, and colleges of agriculture through 1969. The program in the New England region, to be carried out cooperatively by the land-grant universities, the New England Board of Higher Education, and NAL, is expected to serve as a pilot project for procedures in other states and regions.

An important objective of the project is to obtain an archival quality film copy of all state agricultural publications before the paper copies deteriorate. Film copies, available through purchase as well as through library services, will provide participating libraries with the opportunity to reduce the amount of physical space needed to house these publications in paper form.

Richard Talbot, director of the UMass Library, and archivist Katherine Emerson, the Massachusetts liaison with the other New England land-grant libraries, stated that the UMass Library plans to retain its paper copies of the publications but will benefit from easy access to complete files of agricultural publications.

Dr. John Naegele, associate dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources, stated that the college welcomes the microfilm project as an opportunity to improve the transfer of information.

C.C. fee is mostly interest

Between 1972-73 and 1973-74, the interest rates on the financing of the building jumped from 3.3 percent to 5.95 percent. According to Corker, this resulted in the unavoidable $12 dollar increase in the student fee.

While Corker has budgeted a $4.80 cost per student to cover this year's operating deficit, he said that he "will do everything in my power to break even this year." If this proves possible despite inflation, the $110,500 he has tentatively allocated to pay the deficit will be transferred to the capital expenditure fund which directly provides for major renovations and physical improvements.

Extensive remodeling is planned for the Blue Wall to improve its atmosphere and service efficiency. Changes will include remodeling of the bar, a larger dance floor, portable stages, a raised lounge area and a tunnelled entrance, according to Corker.

In addition, the pinball area will be partitioned off to cut down on noise and the entire facility will be carpeted. Corker says that "the badly-needed face-lifting will give the Blue Wall a more appealing atmosphere."

Renovations of the Hatch serving area have already resulted in an increase in the number of people served there. The line flow was altered and two cash registers were added. Corker feels that the increased business will pay for the cost of renovations.

Face-lifting is also scheduled for lounge facilities in the Student Union. The Commuter Lounge will be carpeted and painted, and new furniture will be provided, he added.

Comstu reps nominated

By DAVE OSTRANDER
Staff Reporter

A meeting was held of all Communication Studies undergraduates Thursday afternoon in Memorial Hall for the purpose of nominating a prospective representative to the departments Personnel Committee.

From the 35 people present, out of a possible 280 majors, three persons were nominated: Jack Harper, a senior, who is also station manager of WMUA, Scott Halon, and John Adams, who are both sophomores.

Some of the important matters stressed by the nominees were the direction of the department, and clarification and distribution of relevant information.

Since this is the first time an undergraduate has ever been allowed to participate on the Personnel Committee, which makes many important decisions concerning the ComStu department, all undergraduate majors are urged to vote for one of the three nominees.

However, little time is left to vote. In order to cast a ballot, voters must go to the main office of the department on the third floor in Bartlett Hall. The final chance to vote is today from 9 a.m. - 2 p.m.

Beware of sticky fingers and those bouncing checks

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND
Special Correspondent

Howland is a private attorney in Amherst and a former lawyer for students at UMass-Amherst. His column of legal advice for students has run in The Daily Collegian weekly for two years. It will run regularly on Mondays. Atty. Howland's column is public advice. Students seeking, formal, individualized legal assistance should contact the UMass Legal Services office on the ninth floor of the Campus Center.

In the past few weeks the annual wave of consumer related problems of students has risen predictably. The two most frequent criminal-type problems that students encounter are shoplifting and bad checks.

The first problem, shoplifting, is most easily avoided by a few simple precautions. Obviously if you do not intend to steal the merchandise it is a real drag to be hauled into court for a misunderstanding. So, assume that you don't want to steal the item and that you don't want to be accused of it. Then:

1. NEVER CONCEAL MERCHANDISE IN A POCKET, BAG OR PURSE. You may be legally charged and convicted for shoplifting if you put unpurchased merchandise out of sight anywhere in a store even if you make no attempt to leave with it or to go through a checkout counter.

2. USE A SHOPPING CART OF BASKET WHENEVER PROVIDED. This avoids the problem of picking up too much to carry and then sticking something in your pocket or bag for convenience.

3. Understand that shoplifting is a serious criminal (larceny) offense which really screws up the average future.

The second common problem starts with being short on funds or a poor bookkeeper. It's one kind of problem to be poor and without money to pay debts. It is probably a felony to go further and not pay debts by the device of writing bad checks.

the law & you

If you ever receive a notice that you have two days in which to redeem a badcheck, take immediate action to correct the problem with the holder of the check. The next move that he will make is to charge you with a serious crime and he has all the proof he needs. The best solution, if possible, is to pay the holder the amount of the check in cash and recover the check from him. (You may have to pay his bounce charge from his bank too.) In any case, go and get the matter straightened out in a hurry as best you can and stop writing checks until you clear things at the bank.

—Reply to Question — Last week I noted the provision of Massachusetts Motor Vehicle Law, which defines "Student", every person enrolled full time in a school, college, or university, but not including... any person enrolled in a school, college or, university for the purpose of pursuing advanced or postgraduate studies or on-the-job training under any fellowship program, grant, or other program which provides such person with any salary or compensation beyond the actual tuition costs of such schooling. In doubtful cases the registrar may determine whether or not this definition applies." (M.G.L. Chapter 90, section 3).

The question arises of a person from another state who is pursuing a UMass graduate degree while being employed by the out-of-state employer, who returns weekly to his home state and who received no "in-state" benefits. Because the law seems to turn on whether the "student" receives some program assistance in excess of tuition (as the vast majority of graduate students do), it is my opinion that the registrar would not require the unassisted out-of-state resident to register his car in Massachusetts. Of course, any "student" with an unclear situation may go to the Registry of Motor Vehicles on Center Street in Northampton for help in complying with the law. (It is observed that people in doubt should take the bus and walk rather than drive a doubtful case to the Registry.)

If a person must register a car in Massachusetts because of the Motor Vehicle Law, it does not follow that the person would therefore be entitled to "in-state" treatment for tuition purposes. The laws and rules are not dependent on one another.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Monday, September 30

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — An extravagant expenditure today could cause considerable trouble tomorrow, especially where personal relationships are concerned.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — The place to start cleaning house is at home. Let another advise a friend on his personal affairs; you would do well to keep out of it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Good planning results in good actions and, ultimately, in benefits. Be sure you are laying the groundwork intelligently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — The wise Capricorn will refuse to trust to Lady Luck. Do what you can to help things along the road to success. Study the situation carefully.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Make every effort to gain all the facts of whatever "case" you are faced with today. Don't expect to make a decision both blindly and well.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Whatever opportunity that presents itself this morning can be accepted at face value. Don't expect friends to do all the groundwork for you however.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Slight errors will not count against you on the employment scene today. A major mistake, however, could prove disastrous. Seek out little-known facts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The more diplomatic your handling of others at this time, the more you can count on success in the near future. Build an influential following.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — If travel is in your immediate future, make plans with the greatest of care. This is no time to take chances with moving vehicles.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Unless you can count on at least partial results, you would do well not to put too much of yourself into the present project. Conserve your energy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Make sure you have all the facts of the matter on hand before you attempt to make any decisions that would institue a change in life-styles.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — These are not especially good times for the Virgo who insists on change as the best policy. If the status quo appeals to you, today is an excellent one.

Sarge stresses NUKE safety standards

SPRINGFIELD — Gov. Francis W. Sargent Saturday told the annual meeting of the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution (NECNP) that he will not allow nuclear power plants in the state 'unless they meet rigorous environmental, economic, and stafety standards.'

Sargent, on the November campaign trail around Massachusetts over the weekend, said the cost of building nuclear power plants has escalated to the point where their cost is no longer cheaper than convention power to the consumer.

'The cost of constructing nuclear power plants is increasing faster than that of any facility on the face of this planet,' Sargent said, adding, 'the public has begun to realize that nuclear power will not result in lower utility bills.'

The Coalition is one of the public intervenors in eventaul AEC hearings on the construction of twin $1.52 billion nuclear plants in Montague, fifteen miles north of Amherst.

Sargent made the same statements last spring at UMass during another meetion of the Coalition. At that time he set up a panel to monitor safety of nuclear power in Massachusetts. About 50 Coalition members and public were on hand Saturday at the Springfield Natural History Museum to hear him.

Besides suggesting that the state should get involved in financing construction of power plants, Sargent said the Mass. Dept. of Public Utilities would begin hearings in two weeks on the electric rate structure.

He said the present structure 'encourages compsumption' and 'must be challenged.'

Today, as I speak, 42 per cent of the nuclear capacity in this country is scheduled to be shut down this fall because of failures in the cooling systems,' Sargent said.

The AEC last week asked 17 out of 47 U.S. nuclear plants to shut down because they may have cooling system leaks.

'If our experience with nuclear power has taught us anything, it is that we ourselves must take the lead,' he concluded. 'We cannot rely upon the experts.'

Golfers are New England Champs

By RICH SEVIERI
Sports Staff

The trophy case in Boyden's lobby has a new addition this morning. The Oakley Cup, emblematic of New England intercollegiate golf supremacy, is the property of the UMass golf team for the 1974-75 season.

Forty-two teams comprised of 210 golfers teed off at New Seabury Country Club on Thursday in search of the New England golf championship. When dusk settled on nearby Nantucket Sound on Friday, UMass had an unbelievable 22 stroke victory over the rest of the field in the 36 hole event.

In the individual tournament, Rick Olson became the first Minuteman to win the New England golf championship since William Young in 1957.

The Minutemen jumped to a 16 stroke lead after the first 18 holes. Olson had a tournament low par 72, while John Lasek, Joe Artman, and Tom Toski, all had 77's for a combined team total of 303. Nearest competitor was Central Conn. at 319. For all practical purposes the tournament was over.

"We were really surprised with that first day lead," said Joe Artman. "With all of our talent, and a 16 stroke lead there was no way we could get beat."

On Friday the Minutemen coasted to the title with Olson posting a 78; Lasek an 81; Artman an 85; and a 73, low round of the day, by Howard Terban.

Terban, whose home course is New Seabury and coming off a sensational summer of amateur golf (he had 3 eagles in the opening round of the Mass. Amateur) had a disastrous opening round of 86. Since only the four best of five team member scores are used, his was thrown out. He was disappointed.

"Howard could have put his head in the tank after that first round," said coach Fan Gaudette. "He showed a lot of class coming back with that 73."

Terban missed having a sensational 69 in the 2nd round by taking a 2 stroke penalty for playing the wrong ball and four putting the 18th.

UMass's 37 total for the second day gave them a 620 total for the tournament, and a 22 stroke victory over second place Salem St. at 642. Salem St. had a fine 300 total for the second day, but a 39 stroke deficit from the opening round was too much to overcome.

Central Conn. and Rhode Island tied for third at 643. Boston College was a distant fourth at 653.

"Hell of a win," said coach Fan Gaudette. "It was a long time overdue. We finally put the potential that this team has together."

"We're number one now," said new team member Tom Toski, a transfer from Florida St. "The NCAA selection Committee for the NCAA championships next Spring will have to take notice now."

In the individual play Olson grabbed a 3 stroke lead over Doug Bettencourt of BC, who had a 75, after the first round. Olson's second round 78 gave him a 150 total, and a 4 shot victory over Peter Malley of Lowell Tech for the New England title.

Olson went four over par after four holes in his opening round on Thursday. The front nine at New Seabury in Mashpee curves along Nantucket Sound and coastal breezes gave all the players fits. Olson battled back, toured the rest of the holes in four under for a par 72. A double bogey at 18 marred his second round 78.

The UMass golfers head to Hartford on Wednesday to defend the ECAC Regional title they won last Fall. The top five finishers at Hartford will qualify for the ECAC championships next month in New Jersey.

Harriers win

Staples and Matty Mangan were timed in 20:13 over the hilly 3.75 mile course. In their first taste of college running, the freshmen placed twelve runners, before the Eagles' first man.

CROSS COUNTRY CORNER — Keith Francis didn't compete because of an injury, but it made little difference. The harriers collected all 22 first place votes in the New England Pre-season Cross Country Poll while Providence was voted second. Harvard was ranked third, in a reversal of the final 1973 poll, setting the stage for Tuesday's tri-meet, which will be featuring the top three teams in New England. Dartmouth and Northeastern round out the top five.

Look for the names Neil, Carrol, Meyer, Staples and Mangan in the future, as the best of the freshmen attempt to make the varsity squad.

The Boston Red Sox were mathematically eliminated from the American League Eastern Division pennant race yesterday by the Detroit Tigers, 7-4. Veteran Al Kaline, who earlier in the week obtained his 3000th hit, highlighted the Detroit victory with a run-scoring single in the sixth inning.

In the only other close divisional race the New York Mets downed the Pittsburgh Pirates, 7-2, while the St. Louis Cardinals vaulted into a firstplace tie by beating the Cubs, 7-3.

Pats ram Rams 20-14

FOXBORO, Mass. [AP] — Jim Plunkett fired a pair of touchdown passes, John Smith booted two field goals and the New England defense turned in a mighty effort Sunday, sparking the upstart Patriots to a 20-14 victory over the Los Angeles Rams. The Patriots spotted the heavily favored Rams an early touchdown and then charged back for their third consecutive National Football League triumph.

The Rams, who had allowed only 10 points in winning their first two games, drove to the New England 25 with 1:58 to play, but were stopped by the Patriots' rejuvenated defense.

John Hadl of the Rams missed on two passes, was sacked for a six yard loss and then had an aerial intercepted by defensive back Prentice McCray.

The Rams got one more shot in the closing seconds, but Hadl was unable to hit on two long bombs before the final gun.

Los Angeles struck for a touchdown the second time it had the ball, going 54 yards in nine ground plays. Tony Baker capped the surge with a one-yard burst.

However, the Patriots came right back to tie the score, going 68 yards in 11 plays on a series started after the Rams touchdown. On the second play of the second period, Plunkett passed to Darryl Stingley in the end zone for 20 yards and six points.

Helped by a 38-yard punt return by Mark Herron, the Patriots moved in front to stay on a 39-yard field goal by Smith early in the second half.

Smith made it 13-7 with a 23-yard field goal late in the third quarter and Plunkett featured a 75-yard march for what proved to be the decisive touchdown at the outset of the fourth quarter.

Plunkett, on third down and nine yards to go for a first down, hit former Stanford teammate Randy Vataha on a 21-yard scoring pass play. Vataha made a leaping catch at the 5 and raced untouched for the score.

Hadl had a pass intercepted by Ron Bolton at the New England 13 a few minutes later and the two teams then exchanged fumbles. Hadl tried to rally the Rams in the closing minutes. He fired a 36-yard touchdown pass to Lance Rentzel at 10:46 and then came his vain efforts as the New England defense proved too touch.

The Patriots forced four Los Angeles fumbles, recovering three, and intercepted Hadl twice.

However, penalties hurt New England in key situations. The Patriots were called for eight penalties and 95 yards. Los Angeles drew only two penalties for 10 yards.

Plunkett completed 14 of 25 passes for 189 yards in a brilliant display. He was sacked four times for a total loss of 27 yards. The Rams have piled up 15 sacks in three games.

The Patriots threw up a hard pass rush but managed to get Hadl just twice. However, the big one came at an opportune time, late in the game, with the score 20-14.

Hadl completed only 13 of 32 passes, but grossed 209 yards. Neither team could move steadily on the ground, except for the Ram's first touchdown march. The Patriots netted only 98 yards rushing, the Rams 109.

Lawrence McCutcheon led Los Angeles with 51 yards in 14 carries, but was held in check after the first period. Herron, a five-foot-five halfback took individual honors with 62 yards in 16 carries.

All 61,279 tickets were sold, but there were 1,567 "no-shows." The Patriot's first sellout of the year at Schaefer Stadium enabled the game to be televised throughout New England.

Giants axe Cowboys in upset, 14-6

DALLAS [AP] — New York struck for two touchdowns within a 64-second span in the second quarter on the running of rookie Doug Kotar and the passing of Norm Snead Sunday to upend the Dallas Cowboys 14-6 and give the new Giants' Coach Bill Arnsparger his first National Football League victory.

The inspired Giants put a fierce rush on Dallas quarterback Roger Staubach, sacking him six times and intercepting three passes.

After a scoreless first quarter, Snead struck suddenly on a 50-yard pass play to Bob Grim to put the Giants in business at the Dallas eight-yard line.

Kotar bolted across from two yards out after a holding penalty on Dallas had put New York in scoring position.

On the ensuing kickoff, rookie Dennis Morgan recovered the ball at the Cowboys' 22.

On third down, Snead found Joe Dawkins alone behind Cornell Green and Dawkins made a juggling catch for the touchdown on the 14-yard pass.

Schnellenberger out as Colts' mentor

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Howard Schnelienberger was dismissed as head coach of the Baltimore Colts by owner Robert Irsay Sunday after the team's 30-10 loss to the Philadelphia Eagles.

Irsay announced to the team in the locker room after the game that he is turning over the coaching duties to General Manager Joe Thomas in an effort to turn around the Colts' fortunes after three straight losses.

Schnellenberger, who was not told of the decision until after the team had learned of it, said he intended to fulfill his contract, which is in the second of three years.

"I was hired as Head Coach," said the man who came to the Colts after a stint as assistant coach with the Miami Dolphins. "I expect to fulfill my contract. It was my life ambition to become a head coach. I worked too hard to get this far, and I don't expect to go out this easy."

Schnellenberger said he was surprised and shaken by the move. He said he will meet Monday with Thomas to discuss the decision.

Thomas, a former Colts' assistant coach, has been general manager of the club for two years.

His selection as head coach was not greeted with enthusiasm by the Colts' field General, quarterback Marty Domres.

"There is no way that Joe Thomas can turn this team around," Domres said.

Domres said Schnellenberger was a "good coach".

"We're in a rebuilding stage and the players have to get to know each other before we can win," Domres said.

After Thomas became General Manager he traded away 23 players from the Colts' 1970 Super Bowl Championship team.

Irsay bought the Colts in July, 1972, from Carroll Rosenbloom, who moved to the Los Angeles Rams. Irsay was an original partner in the Montreal Expos baseball team.

In Schnellenberger's first year as Head Coach, the Colts won four games and lost 10 in the National League's American Conference.

Purdue drops Irish in upset

By BILL MADDEN
UPI Sports Writer

Chalk up a couple for "The Dwarfs."

For a good many years, college football buffs have scoffed at Notre Dame's scheduling of big ten "dwarfs" such as Iowa and Northwestern (and more recently even Purdue), while the Southwest Conference has long been kidded as "Texas and the Seven Dwarfs."

Well folks, a couple of those so-called "Dwarfs" did some fast growing on Saturday and when the top 20 ratings come out this week, Notre Dame and Texas will be quite a bit lower than their accustomed positions — each with an unexpected loss tacked on to their records.

At South Bend, Ind., the second-rated Fighting Irish saw their nation's longest (13) winning streak come to an end at the hands of Purdue, 31-20, while fifth-ranked Texas, expecting to cakewalk to a sixth straight Southwest Conference title, got stung 26-3 by Texas Tech. it was the Longhorns first Conference loss since 1971.

Elsewhere, sixth-ranked Arizona State, No. 8 Oklahoma State and 10th-rated Wisconsin also tasted defeat for the first time. The Sun Devils fell 9-0 to Missouri, the Cowboys were upset 31-14 by Baylor and the Badgers dropped a 24-21 decision to Colorado.

But the rest of the nation's elite managed to escape unscathed. No. 1 Ohio State got by stubborn SMU 28-9; No. 3 Alabama struggled past Vanderbilt 23-10; No. 4 Michigan torpedoed Navy 52-0; No. 7 Texas A&M outlasted Washington 28-15; No. 9 Nebraska routed Northwestern 49-7; and Oklahoma buried Utah State 72-3.

"We played one too many bad first halves and it cost us the ballgame," said Notre Dame Coach Ara Parseghian of his team's shocking defeat. "I felt we were still in the ballgame until they got 31 points."

Big D dumps Dartmouth

By DAVE EIBEL

A year ago Dartmouth football coach Jake Crouthamel almost murdered his assistants after the Big Green lost their opener to the country cousins of the University of New Hampshire. One year later Crouthamel can only blame the UMass Minutemen for Saturday's 14-0 UMass win over the defending Ivy champions.

Although Dartmouth rolled up 23 first downs to ten for the Minutemen and outgained UMass two-to-one (390 yards to 195) the Big Green were thwarted time and again by a pugnacious, inspired defense which refused to be scored upon for the second game in a row. After two games in which the offense did its job superbly, it was significant that when the offense sputtered, the defense proved equal to the task. In fact it was the defense which enabled the offense to put two touchdowns on the board by forcing key turnovers and then kept the shutout safe by coming up with the big play when it had to.

Dartmouth took the opening kickoff and marched from their own 36 to the UMass 23. On first and ten Dartmouth fullback Frank Wilson carried to the UMass 17, but on the next two plays defensive tackle Marty Trymbulak and corner back John Van Buren made key tackles to set up a fourth and five from the UMass 18. Instead of going for a field goal which if successful could have changed the complexion of the game, the Big Green tried a fake and failed when holder John Souba fell trying to run around the end for the first down.

The Minutemen took over at their 28 and marched downfield for what proved to be the winning touchdown. A pass from Mark Tripucka to Walt Parker and four carries by fullback Keith Lang moved the ball to the UMass 47. Then on third and six Lang took a pitchout from Tripucka and went twenty-three yards to the Dartmouth thirty. On second and eleven Tripucka hit flanker Lee Harriman with a pinpoint pass to the Dartmouth one and then Lang bucked over for the score.

A turnover forced by the tenacious UMass defense set up the second UMass touchdown later in the first period. After a 54 yard John Romboli punt had set Dartmouth deep in their territory, Dennis Kiernan recovered a Wilson fumble on the Dartmouth eleven on the first play after the punt.

Tragedy almost struck on the first UMass play when halfback Rich Jessamy fumbled a Tripucka pitchout but fortunately for the Minutemen he recovered it himself on the Dartmouth 26. Two running plays and an infraction later, Walt Parker peeled off a block and with at least twenty-five yards between him and any green uniforms, grabbed a Tripucka pass to give UMass a 14-0 kick.

The Big Green came out storming in the second half and picked up 15 first downs to only three for the Minutemen, who threw the ball only once and didn't run a single option play, as they stuck to a safe but unexciting brand of offense.

After UMass was stymied following the second half kickoff Dartmouth moved from their own 13 to the UMass 4 but while the crowd of 9,500 had visions of a comeback the Minutemen had ideas of their own. On what might have been the killing play for the Big Green's chances, halfback John Souba fumbled on a dive play and resurrected lineman Paul St. Onge plopped on the ball, and thereby making his move from fullback to defensive line pay on one big play.

From then on the pattern of the game was simple. Dartmouth kept the Minutemen hemmed in and just when they seemed ready to score had drives snuffed out by clutch UMass defensive plays. On their last three drives of the game the Ivies moved down to the UMass 14, 24, 44, and 18 and came away with one big zero.

John Van Buren who has established himself as UMass' leading candidate for the "maker of the big play" award snuffed out two drives himself with interceptions. John Toner picked off one pass also, while another drive was stopped when Paul St. Onge dropped quarterback Tom Snickenberger for a loss on a fourth and three from the UMays .4.

To be honest, Dartmouth won the battle of the scouts. The Big Green moved the ball almost at will behind the options of quarterback Tom Snickenberger and some timely passes to 6'5" end Walt Kandabrow, but inside the twenty the UMass defense was king. That's something the Dartmouth scouts and players weren't prepared for, and that's what made the difference.

UMass fullback Jim Torrance stopped by a bevy of Dartmouth tacklers during Saturday's 14-0 UMass whitewashing of the defending Ivy champions. The UMass offense only managed 195 yards during the game including 54 in a second half which saw the Minutemen stick to an ultra-conservative offensive attack.

Dennis Kiernan (right foreground) recovers a Frank Wilson fumble on the Dartmouth eleven yard line. The Minutemen then scored to make it 14-0 four plays later on a Walt Parker td reception. The game was played in a driving downpour during the entire second half and marked the first victory by UMass over Dartmouth in a 22-game series dating back to 1902.

Minutemen booters shut out Maine 3-0 20

By BEN CASWELL

The Maine Soccer jinx is over, and it was ended in fine fashion as the Minutemen shut-out the University of Maine Black Bears 3-0 Saturday.

After being shut-out the last two times against Maine it is an understatement to say that the Minutemen were ready for a change. This game was the second shut-out win of the season for UMass.

Forward Bob McChesney started off the scoring about mid-way through the first half. Halfback Jim Vollinger took a shot that hit someone out in front. McChesney very opportunly moved in on the rebound and popped the ball into the net to the left of a bewildered Maine goaltender.

About ten minutes later Tom Coburn got what was the first of two scores by him in the game. Again some strange bounces were involved in the play as a Maine fullback tried to bring the ball back to the goalie to start a play. The netminder lost the ball momentarily and Coburn quickly put it past him to make the score 2-0 and that was the score at halftime.

The only scoring in the second halk came when Tom Coburn scored on a penalty shot. He was on his way in almost alone on the net when he was dumped by a Maine defender. A penalty shot was called for and Coburn moved in easily on the netminder and fired it past him into the far corner. This goal and Coburn's earlier score both were unassisted.

The Minutemen virtually controlled all of the game. Their ball-handling and passing had them in possession of the ball a good 60-70 per cent of the time. On defense specifically, UMass looked strong again. Fullback Dean Lungu played, in the words of Coach Al Rufe, "An excellent game." "The entire defense did well," said Rufe, "we played our game, as we did in the second half versus Boston College, and that was what did it for us."

Against Boston College last week gaolie Marc Hanks was not tested that many times, but against Maine he really had to earn his whitewash. Even though Maine did not have the ball that much they still were able to put in a few good testing shots on Hanks. "A beautiful game in goal" is what Coach Rufe called the game that Marc played against Maine.

QUICK SHOTS — Maine is now 1-1 in the YanCon and UMass is 1-0. Carl Vercollone re-injured his shoulder in practice on Friday and could be out of action for quite awhile. Next game is this Wednesday at 3:00 p.m. right here at the fields across from Boyden. It should be a fine game versus highly-rated Keene State. Make a note and be there at 3:00 p.m. on Wednesday for the first Soccer home game of this season.

Runners romp over BC 20

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

Pack running was the name of the game, Saturday afternoon, as the UMass Cross Country team shutout Boston College 15-50. John McGrail, Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin and Tom Wilson finished in a four-way tie for first, completing the five-mile course in 26:18. The harriers captured the top eight spots in the season's first taste of competition.

The weather was favorable, and although a bit humid, a periodic drizzle kept things cool. The times weren't great, but good enough to be 10-15 seconds off the best times last year. It was a somewhat "relaxed" effort by the harriers, who needed to get the feel of race competition before this week's testing schedule.

Thomas and Gillin were running together at the three-mile mark, with Wilson and McGrail right behind. John Scheer was fifth, as the squad ran the first half of the race fairly hard, then eased off.

Scheer captured fifth in 26:33, while Chris Farmer, Phil Broughton and Frank Noto garnered the number six through eight positions. Ed Becker was the first BC runner to finish, taking ninth place. The Harriers joined the football and soccer teams in blanking their opponents (15-50 is a perfect score in cross country).

Robb Leary placed tenth with a time of 27:13 to round out the top ten finishers.

The Minutemen runners travel to Franklin Park on Tuesday in an attempt to break a 21-year losing streak against Harvard and remain atop the New England Cross Country Poll by staving off a tough Providence team.

The freshmen harriers also dominated BC, scoring a 15-50 shutout as five runners tied for individual honors. Bob Neil, Frank Carroll, Rolf Meyer, Cliff

"Why do you think they call it dope, man?"

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Chairman James O. Eastland of the Senate Internal Security subcommittee said yesterday if the current rate of marijuana use continues, Americans may find themselves "saddled with a large population of semizombies."

Eastland, in an introduction to a report of subcommittee hearings on marijuana, blamed the news media, in part for the increase.

The Mississippi Democrat said he opposed decriminlization of marijuana but favored more harmony between states and the federal government on penalties for its use.

Eastland said information supplied to his panel suggest the validity of estimates that 35 million Americans have used marijuana at some time, with more than 10 million regular users.

"If the cannabis epidemic continues to spread at the rate of the post-Berkeley period since 1965, we may find ourselves saddled with a large population of semi-zombies - of young people acutely afflicted by the amotivational syndrome," he said.

East land said it could bring a society "largely taken over by a 'marijuana culture' - a culture motivated by a desire to escape from reality and by a consuming lust for self-gratification, and lacking any higher moral guidance."

"The spread of the epidemic has been facilitated by the fact that most of our media and most of the academicians who have been articulate on the subject have been disposed to look upon marijuana as a relatively innocuous drug," Eastland said.

He said a "myth of harmlessness" has been stimulated by writings that take a benign attitude toward marijuana.

"A major role was also played by the generous attention which the media bestowed on militant drug enthusiasts like Timothy Leary and Jerry Rubin," Eastland said. "The damage was further compounded by the virtual blackout imposed by much of our media -at least until recently- on adverse scientific evidence about the effects of marijuana."

Eastland said one of the purposes of the Senate hearings was to correct the imbalance. "We make no apology therfore, for the one-sided nature of our hears - they were deliberately planned this way."

Ford to testify before Subcommittee

WASHINGTON [AP] - President Ford told a House subcommittee he will personally appear to testify on why he gave former President Richard M. Nixon a pardon.

The President told Chairman William L. Hungate, D-Mo., of the House Judiciary subcommittee in a brief letter Monday that he would personally respond to the 14 questions raised by two resolutions before the subcommittee.

Ford said he would like to arrange the personal testimony within the next 10 days, Hungate said.

Hungate said it would be the first personal testimony by a sitting president before Congress since that of Abraham Lincoln.

The chairman said White House research shows that only Presidents Lincoln and Washington testified before Congress while they were in office and that Theodore Roosevelt testified before Congress after he left the White House.

The questions Ford agreed to answer are on details of whether White House Chief of Staff Alexander M. Haig Jr. suggested the pardon for Nixon, what agreements were made in connection with the pardon and whether Ford's granting of it was based on any knowledge of Nixon's mental or physical health.

Before the subcommittee are so-called resolutions of inquiry introduced by Reps. Bella S. Abzug, D-N.Y., and John Conyers Jr., D-Mich., which, if approved by the House would demand the answers within 10 days.

In a "Dear Bill" letter, delivered to Hungate's office shortly before 8 p.m. EDT, the President said:

"This is to advise you that I expect to appear personally to respond to the questions raised in House resolutions 1367 and 1370.

"It would be my desire to arrange this hearing before your subcommittee at a mutually convenient time withint the next 10 days."

Rep. Abzug asked for details on when and who first mentioned the pardon to Ford, whether it was Haig during the week Nixon resigned as President and what promises or conditions were set for Nixon's pardon.

Her resolution also asks whether Ford consulted with Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe, Special Watergate Prosecutor Leon Jaworski, Vice President-designate Nelson A. Rockefeller or any other attorneys or law professors before deciding to grant the pardon, and if so, what legal authority they cited.

Her resolution asks whether Ford or his aides asked Nixon to give a confession or statement of criminal guilt and whether the statement Nixon did make when he received the pardon was cleared in advance with Ford's White House.

Finally it asks, "did you receive any report from a psychiatrist or any other physician stating that Richard Nixon was in any other than good health. If so, then please provide such reports."

Conyers' resolution asks what representations, if any, were made on behalf of Nixon and any information presented to Ford "with respect to the mental or physical health of Richard M. Nixon."

It also asks for any information in Ford's possession at the time he granted the pardon on whether offenses had been alleged.

Earlier Monday, the head of another House subcommittee urged congressional action to overturn Nixon's agreement for destruction of his White House tapes by 1984.

Thousands of students this week in the upper classes are required to turn in their old blue I.D. cards for new white ones. The new UMass library circulation system requires the white ones.

The library's book checkout is becoming entirely computerized to eliminate paperwork.

Other benefits of this system will be an automatic spillout of overdue books, and data will be compiled at the end of a time termination which will scope the students use of the library, library officials said.

To obtain a new I.D. card, surrender the old blue card to the I.D. office, 109 Hampshire House. If you're old card is lost go to the Bursar's Office in Whitmore before appearing at Hampshire 109 Monday through Friday.

There will be no charge for the transaction. The old cards will become invalid later in the semester.

BG head hits aid programs

By ROBERT F. SULLIVAN
Staff Reporter

Reports that some students with genuine financial need have been passed by because of sloppy work-study award policies have brought the Financial Aid Office under fire.

Mike Curran, Chairperson of the Board of Governors, criticized what he considers the inefficiency of Financial Aid in dealing with hardship cases. He charged that the current policy benefits non-students and students not receiving financial aid, since employers, like the Campus Center, must look toward these people in the absence of financial aid candidates.

"The amount of money going to non-student payrolls is fantastic," Curran said. He recommended that the Financial Aid Office develop a more accurate and accessible listing of needy students, so that those who really need the work can get it.

Financial Aid Director Richard Dent contends that student hassles with his office are minimal, and that most applicants are satisfied. Each year, 7500-8000 students apply for work-study programs. "The majority with high need are getting jobs immediately," Dent said.

Problems arise, according to Dent, when students file late for aid or fail to include the necessary Parents confidential Statement in their application.

In a related move, the Student Senate is expected to act soon on a request for a referendum on student wage scales. The referendum would bring student wages in line with those of other university workers. "Statewide, students are recognized as different from other employees," Student Government Association president Richard Savini said.

Although exact wording of the referendum has not been settled, it will probably ask students to vote for what they consider an equitable wage, Savini said.

Curran supports the referendum, but expressed pessimism about students' overall interest in the issue. "Students have to back each other at least in their concern," he said.

Ford's defeat predicted

By DOROTHY L. MULLER

SOUTH HADLEY — The American people had great expectations for a guy who toasts his own muffins but Ford made a deal with Nixon for the pardon." According to Thomas Oliphant and Robert Healy of the Boston Globe Ford's chances for re-election are slim. "If a lot of People think the guy's a crook, he's done."

In a five college-sponsored lecture last night Oliphant and Healy predicted a "recementing of the national liberal democrat coalition and a damaging spinover in local gubernatorial elections. According to surveys conducted by the Boston Globe, 28 percent of the voting population will not vote republican "irrespective of the individual candidates."

Both Sargent and Dukakis's campaigns may suffer. According to Oliphant, "Even though Sargent was the one who questioned Connolly's appointment asking if he could count. Now he has ten counts against him."

Oliphant and Healy believe Ford failed to underestimate the public reaction to the Nixon pardon. The avalanche of mail and phone calls to the White House following the pardon doesn't increase the likelihood of further Watergate pardons. Oliphant says the Ford administration's position on further pardons may be gauged by White House reaction to Jack Colson's request. "Colson was brusquely told he could file his request for pardon in the in-box of the justice department."

The Watergate crisis has caused a reshuffling in the democratic preconvention scramble. Oliphant and Healy are confident that the preconvention political warmups will see "a new cranking up of the McGovern movement because of the impeachment proceedings. Union people — the Meany types — will try to control the administrative levels of power." Healy believes that with Kennedy bowing out, the party is left with no clear front runner. "Kennedy may play a bigger Senate role in terms of leadership." Oliphant adds the Kennedy's refusal to run is a result of "personal problems including Chappaquidic." It is hard to understand the tremendous pressure on Kennedy after the accident. Kennedy is also aware of his family role to his brothers' children. I think he realizes what the absence to a father means to those kids. He is also aware of his seniority on the Senate Judiciary Committee. Most people think only in terms of the immediate election, but Kennedy knows he is viable to 1988. He has a longer view than most people give him credit for."

Oliphant says the Kennedy refusal to run leaves an open field "unless you count Scoop Jackson." I think that the Mondales, Ruben Askew and people we haven't heard of before will come to the front."

However, Healy and Oliphant doubt the Watergate crisis will have a lasting effect on the U.S. Oliphant comments, The impact of Watergate was a rare exercise in power by congress but unless there is a definite change in power in Congress it will have no lasting impact. It was one instance in which many had a great stake — like Rodino and Sirica. The process carried them along. But there will be no great change because of the Seniority system in Congress. "...We must remember the good served in making the true story available. The American people must be informed as to what went wrong.

Black enrollment still suffers

By SHERWOOD THOMPSON

A disparity exists between the number of Blacks enrolled in the nation's colleges and universities and the Black percentage of the population. That the conclusion reached by a Ford Foundation study. Statistics used covered the decade 1960-1970.

Benjamin F. Payton, the foundation's officer in charge of minority programs in higher education, said the report "disputes that popular belief" that Blacks and Spanish-surnamed Americans have closed the enrollment gap between them and white students.

In short, the report is saying that percentage-wise whites greatly outnumber Blacks in the country's institutions for higher learning.

According to the report, "Minority Enrollment and Representation in Institutions of Higher Education," Blacks made up 6.5 per cent of all undergraduates and 3.4 per cent of all graduate students in 1970. The Black percentage in the general population was 11.1 per cent.

The report said that in 1960, 5.3 per cent of the undergraduates and 2.9 per cent of the graduate students were Blacks. From 1960-1970, the number of Blacks enrolled at higher educational institutions almost tripled, rising from 145,436 to 429, 948, but there was also a surge in white enrollment, from 2,734 to 6,388,244.

Estimates released by the Census Bureau indicate that by October 1973, Blacks comprised 8.3 per cent of the nation's 8,179,000 students in degree-granting institutions of higher education.

Language requirement remains in effect

by LARRY CONVOY

Staff Correspondent

Forty academic programs are continuing the much-debated Foreign Language requirement this year. The requirement states that a student enrolled in a liberal arts program must pass a language course at the 140 level.

Professor Dufau, chairman of the French and Italians Departments believes that if the pattern of the recent decisions by the General Faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences continue. There will be a language requirement for sometime.

A language course not only provides the student with the ability to speak and write in the language, but provides needed skills, culture and history, according to Professor Dufau.

She believes more emphasis should be placed on foreign languages in the high school where there is more time for instruction. "If a student enjoyed taking a foreign language in high school, he will continue. If he didn't enjoy it, he will have at least fulfilled the university's requirement."

Complaints spur "improved" library system

by MARTIN J. WATERS

Staff REporter

Magazine readers will soon have what UMass library officials call an "improved" system of filing periodicals.

Construction work is nearing completion on a center for unbound periodicals on the fifth floor of the library. Opening is expected in mid-October.

Gordon Fretwell, the associate director for public services, says the project is a response to many complaints about lack of a current periodical reading room in the new University Library.

Most complaints have been objections to location of some recent magazines on the main floor and others throughout the building with bound volumes of the publication, Fretwell says.

Renovation of the fifth floor area has an estimated cost of$6,500.

Fretwell says planning started in April with opening scheduled for Sept. 1, but that "orders got hung-up at the end of the fiscal year."

Current periodicals have been collected and temporarily shelved on the 17th floor.

Fretwell admits the opening of the fifth floor center will not end the complaints about magazine location at the library.

"I think some people will be unhappy with the new system because they'll have to go to widely separated areas to find issues of an individual magazine," he says.

Parking system —

a hassle or a help?

By B. J. ROCHE

Staff Reporter

This is the second in a three-part series on Parking at UMass.

It's Saturday noon; great party last night. Gorgeous day, it's Indian Summer. You and your roommate decide to hit Friendly's for lunch. You go outside, ready to druise, and there you see it. Or should we say, don't see it. Your car is gone. And even though there is a high incidence of crime in your area, you know the car has not been stolen. At least not illegally. It has been towed.

As they say, "What a drag." It will probably cost you somewhere around $25 to get it back; by now you are in a rage. But wait a minute, do you really know who to curse? Or even why?

The present parking system was developed for reasons. 10,000 of them. That is the minimum of cars registered at the UMass campus. Back in the old days, they had ways to deal with the situation. Freshmen were not allowed to bring cars to school, and there was not an overabundance of automobiles as there is now; things usually worked themselves out.

But the Freshmen ruling was declared descriminatory, and personal transportation has become an integral part of many people's existence; thus there is a need for some type of regulation.

The system was developed by the Transportation and Parking Council, in conjunction with the Dept. of Public Safety, and later approved by the Board of Trustees.

There are two basic costs incurred in parking at UMass, the first being the cost of registration. It costs $15 to register a car, with additional fees for the lot preference. These fees may range for $12 for an edge lot to $50 for the most desired lot — the lot next to Whitmore.

Previous decal owners are given first choice in lots, with the remainder of assignments on a first come, first serve basis. Registration fees go toward the upkeep of lots.

In addition to the registration fees is the expense of a possible ticket or towing fee during the year. The rate for a tow is $15 if the car is claimed on the first day and $1 a day for storage each additional day it is kept there.

This is in addition to the ticket, which is probably a $10 fine. Towing is conducted by Amherst Towing in North Amherst.

Amherst Towing received the contract under a competitive bid system; and this is its third year of operation with the University. From September 1 to June 30 of the last school year, the company towed over 2500 cars from the campus.

Last year over $75,000 was collected in parking fines, and $150,000 remains uncollected. This money goes into a Parking Scholarship Fund, which, in turn, aids students with financial need. $50,000 was given in scholarships for the '73-'74 year, which was the same amount collected the previous year. (Administrative funding comes out of the state budget.)

Over 34,000 tickets were issued last year, thus providing a lot of revenue for Financial Aid. In this way, the system can be viewed as a mixed blessing.

But for many, the Scholarship Fund is no compensation for the hassles, financially and mentally, of the system.

Tomorrow we will look at possible alternatives.

Angela Davis to speak on Socialism

Angela Davis will speak on the subject, "What is Socialism?" at the UMass Campus Center Auditorium on Thursday October 3rd at 8:00 p.m.

Davis, an internationally known political activist and scholar, will open a three day symposium on socialism in America. Organized by the local chapter of the New American Movement, the symposium will run on Thursday October 3rd, through Saturday October 5th at the Campus Center with lectures, workshops and films.

Among other topics to be explored are the socialist tradition in America, the role of socialists in the labor movement, the question of the role of women, racism and the future of socialism in the U.S.

The Cuban film, "Lucia," and some labor films from the nineteen forties will be shown as well. Concurrent with the symposium will be an exhibit, "Expo Cuba-Chile," at the New Africa House.

In explaining the purpose of the symposium, a spokesman said, "There has been a growing sentiment in the United States that there are serious problems which demand solution. The seriousness of problems of racism, sezism, war, poverty and inequality, urban crisis and ecology are widely recognized. But what has received far less attention is the viability of socialism as a solution and as a method for confronting such issues."

New Africa House presents exhibition

By Black News Service

The Steering Committee of The New Africa House will present "Expocuba" in The New Africa House Art Gallery opening Oct. 1st to October 12th.

"Expocuba" opened in New York City on July 26, 1973. Over 1000 people attended the exhibition in two days. It was a premiere of political and educational importance because "Expocuba" overcame the information blockade against Cuba.

"Expocuba" is built around a series of 6 foot high box "towers" which tell a story in easy-to-read text and dramatic photographs. The viewer, by walking around each tower and from one tower to the next, is able to follow a line of narrative explanation.

Coverup trial starts today

Strachan granted separate trial by Sirica

WASHINGTON [UPI] - On the eve of the Watergate coverup trial, U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica yesterday separated former White House political aide Gordan C. Strachan from the case and held a cl ed hearing on the authenticity of the White House tapes.

Sirica, however, refused to dismiss the charges against Strachan, who was former White House chief of staff H. R. Haldeman's liaison with President Richard M. Nixon's re-election committee. His trial will be held later.

Strachan has fought all the way to the Supreme Court for dismissal on grounds he had received immunity from prosecution for his testimony at the televised 1973 Senate Watergate hearings.

Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski, however, moved for severance last week after the U.S. Court of Appeals, though ruling against Strachan, had said the issue raised serious question that would have to be considered after the trial.

"It is the conclusion of the court that the matter in dispute would be most fairly resolved at a pretrial rather than post trial hearing," Sirica said in a two-page memo and order.

"Since the time remaining before trial cannot accomodate such a hearing, defendant Strachan's case must therefore be severed."

Sirica's hearing on the authenticity of the tapes — for which Jaworski has subpoenaed Nixon's testimony-was held in secrecy. Haldeman, one of five remaining defendants, attended the hearing but was not one of the witnesses who were called.

The trial comes two years and three months after a bugging team broke into the Democratic National Committee in the Watergate complex. Members of that team went on trial in January, 1973. Now the five defendants are on trial for trying to conceal the facts about the break-in.

They include some of the Nixon administration - former Attorney General John N. Mitchell; Haldeman; John D. Ehrlichman, Nixon's top domestic affairs adviser; former Assistant Attorney General John C. Mardian; and Kenneth W. Parkinson, attorney for the re-election committee.

Doctors report Nixon unable to travel

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] - Dr. John Lungren said yesterday that former President Nixon's condition is dangerous enough that he should not travel by airplane or other means on a long trip for at least a month and perhaps longer.

Lungren would not estimate whether or when Mr. Nixon would be able to appear at the Watergate coverup trial starting today, but said his condition was such he would recommend against his even giving a written deposition here within the next two or three weeks.

In a news conference at Long Beach Memorial Hospital, which Nixon entered a week ago yesterday, Lungren said he did not want to discuss Nixon's appearance at the trial because it was a political matter.

He added that he would be "derelict in my duty" if he did not recommend that Nixon avoid periods of sitting, standing or riding in a car, an airplane or a bus.

"If he wants to do it, I can't stop him," Lungren, said. "That's his decision, not mine."

Lungren said that Nixon might be able to leave the hospital by this weekend, but that he would have an indefinite period of convalescence.

Further tests will be conducted this week to determine the course of future treatment, he said.

Lungren said there was no indication at the present time that there was any need for surgery, but that therapy by anti-coagulants woud continue.

A medical bulletin issued earlier in the day said that Nixon was showing "marked physical exhaustion," and that he was able to get out of bed only for portions of the day to sit in a reclining chair with his left leg elevated. A newsman asked Lungren what has contributed to such exhaustion

"Twenty-seven years without a vacation," Lungren said.

Panel questions aides to Mills on suspected use of milk funds

WASHINGTON [AP] - A Watergate grand jury has questioned three current and former aides to Rep. Wilbur D. Mills about milk-fund money used in the Arkansas Democrat's brief 1972 presidential campaign.

In recent weeks the Watergate prosecutors have summoned Mills' administrative assistant, Oscar Eugene Goss, and two former campaign officials, Charles Ward of Conway, Ark., and Betty Clement Bullock of Little Rock.

Goss said he appeared voluntarily, without a subpoena, and was questioned about links between the Mills campaign and Associated Milk Producers Inc., the big dairy cooperative that recently pleaded guilty to donating $5,000 illegally to Mills.

Goss said the questions concerned the $5,000 cash gift, which allegedly passed through his hands, and the use of corporate money by the co-op to pay salaries and expenses of Mills campaign workers. Use of corporate money in federal election campaigns is prohibited by law.

Mills, reached by telephone at his suburban Virginia home, said he has not been called to testify by prosecutors. Earlier this year, Mills declined two requests by the now-disbanded Senate Watergate committee to appear for questioning..

Mills, asked for comment on the summoning of Goss and the other witnesses, said only: "'I don't know anything about it. I just know they've been up there, that's all."

Mrs. Bullock, who received a subpoena, confirmed in a telephone interview that she had been questioned for about two hours last Tuesday. But she added: "I'd just rather not comment on it."

According to Watergate committee testimony, Mrs. Bullock worked as a secretary for the Mills campaign for several months while receiving salary and expenses from the corporate funds of the milk produers' co-op

Ward, who headed the early "draft-Mills" efforts in 1971 and early 1972, was not immediately available for comment.

Concerning the $5,000 cash gift, Goss said he had testified that he has "no independent recollection" of having handled the money.

Senators feel Castro wants better relations

Compiled from Wires

HAVANA -After three hectic and contradictory days in Cuba, two American senators flew home yesterday saying they believe Prime Minister Fidel Castro wants to normalize relations with the United States, broken in 1961.

Sens. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., and Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., returned after a meeting with Castro.

Twenty-four hours after Castro's harshest speech against the United States in months, the senators dined Sunday night with the Cuban leader in a completely different mood. Pell described their three hours of talks as "frank, warm and friendly."

Refusing to go into details, Javits said for both of them:

"We believe that Premier Castro is interested in working toward better relations; one could say normalizing relations. That is our impression."

They said they were not carrying any messages from Castro to Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger but would report their impressions back to the Senate foreign relations committee and to Kissinger if he wanted to hear them.

They also said they aired American grievances against Cuba frankly in their talks with Castro and other Cuban leaders. Aside from Castro's bitter 50-minute attack on the United States Saturday night, the senators said they also heard some equally frank grievances in their private talks.

On the other side of the coin to Castro's speech was the cordial reception they received as the first American members of congress to visit Cuba since Pell was here as a senator-elect in 1960.

Castro's government also allowed 19 American newsmen -the largest number in years - to come in to cover the visit. Several were remaining on a few more days.

The American concerns which the two senators aired in their talks with Cuban leaders included:

-The fact that Cuba is the closest country to the United States which conceivably could threaten its security; Cuba allowed Russian missiles to be stationed here in 1962.

-The fact that Cuba is still holding nine American political prisoners and about 40 others on criminal charges ranging from marijuana possession to hijacking.

-The fact that huge American investments were seized here without compensation.

-The fact that the United States has been concerned about Cuba's attempts to export its revolution elsewhere in the hemisphere.

What the senators heard were Cuban complaints against the economic embargo imposed on the island by the United States and then by the Organization of American States. The OAS is expected to vote in November to lift the embargo.

Spinola resigns in Portugal as leftist officers assert power

LISBON [UPI] - Gen. Antonio de Spinola resigned yesterday as president and chairman of the ruling military junta after losing a power struggle with young, leftist army officers who helped put him in power with a military coup five months ago.

The Communists claimed victory and said Spinola's resignation would 'create the conditions for the progress of democracy.'

Three other junta generals were dismissed, and radio reports said one of them, conservative Carlos Galvao de Melo, was arrested.

Gen. Francisco Costa Gomes, chairman of the Armed Forces Joint Chiefs of Staff and a man without prominent political leanings, was appointed Portugal's new president.

Spinola announced he was no longer able to carry out his duties because the nation tottered on the brink of chaos.

'In this generalized climate of anarchy, in which everyone makes his own laws, crisis and chaos are inevitable,' he said.

In his first act in office, Costa Gomes asked left-leaning Brig. Gen. Vasco Dos Santos Goncalves to stay on as prime minister.

Spinola and Goncalves, who masterminded the April 25 coup, led opposing rightist and leftist factions in a military power struggle that culminated over the weekend with troop movements, the arrest of 238 rightists, and allegations of an aborted right-wing counter coup.

Spinola, 64, and his conservative supporters charged that left-wing 'totalitarians lurking in the dark' tried to mislead the Portuguese people, and he appealed to a 'silent majority' to 'wake up and actively defend itself.'

Left-wing groups led by the Communist party, which emerged as s strong power and a government coalition partner after the overthrow of the right-wing regime of Premier Marcelo Caetano, saw Spinola's appeals to the silent majority as a hostile act. Many of the younger officers agreed.

Indian defendant asks trial on reservation

BUFFALO, N.Y. [UPI] - One of two American Indians charged with the murder of a corrections officer during the 1971 Attica riot said yeaterday he wanted to be tried on an Indian reservation

'I can't get a fair trial here or anywhere else,' said John Hill of Buffalo. 'I'd like to have my trial on an Indian reservation with 12 Indians as my jurors.'

Hill made his comments after he and fellow American Indian defendant, Charles Pernasalice, of Syracuse, were again granted trial delays in their defense against charges connected with the death of officer William Quinn.

State Supreme Court Justice Carman Ball postponed the proceedings until Nov. 18 after receiving a firm commitment from defense attorneys that they would be able to proceed on that date. Their trial had been postponed once before.

Hill told the court he wanted to be called by the Indian name "Icajaweiah," meaning "Splitting The Sky."

'I ask that the court respect my native American tradition by using the name,' Hill said. Ball agreed to recognize the Indian name, but added that it must also be accompanied by Hill's given name, as used on his indictment.' 'I don't know what to expect though from a system which murdered 12 million Indians.' Hill said. 'The system forced me to steal so I'd have enough to eat and wouldn't have to sleep on the streets.'

Hill added the defendants in the recently concluded Wounded Knee trials would come to Buffalo to give their support.

Ball granted the trial postponement after Hill's lawyer, famed defense attorney William Kunstler, said he was involved in a New York City murder case.

Kissinger to tour Mideast again

NEW YORK [UPI] - Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger officially announced yesterday he will visit the Middle East Oct. 9-13 on a peace-promoting mission, while reporting some progress in seeking a solution for the Cyprus conflict.

U.S. officials said that Kissinger does not currently plan to combine his peace-making efforts in the Middle East with those on Cyprus by stopping in Nicosia during his four-day trip to Cairo, Damascus, Amman and Jerusalem.

Ford pledges cooperation in world inflation battle

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford said yesterday inflation has gone far beyond levels that the world can tolerate, and pledged the United States to help solve the problem through cooperation in trade, monetary policy and other means.

Addressing the opening session of a meeting of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, the President said:

"We want solutions which serve broad interests rather than narrow self-serving ones. We want more cooperation, not more isolation. We want trade, not protectionism. We want price stability, not inflation. We want growth, not stagnation. We want a better life for ourselves and our children."

Ford turned his attention to global problems just two days after completion of the domestic summit meeting aimed at seeking solutions to the nation's own ills including burgeoning inflation and unemployment.

Summing up the world situation, the President said in his prepared speech:

"The problems that confront us today are serious and complex — a worldwide inflation at a rate far in excess of what we can tolerate; unparalleled disruption in the supply of the world's major commodities; and severe hindrances to the growth and the progress of many nations, including, in particular, some of the poorest among us.

"We in America view these problems soberly and without rose-tinted glasses. But we believe that the same spirit of international cooperation which brought forth the Bretton Woods agreements a generation ago can resolve the difficulties we face today."

The Bretton Woods pact, reached at a conference in New Hampshire in 1944, included creation of the World Bank and the IMF in an attempt to stabilize world monetary and other financial policies.

Ford said Treasury Secretary William E. Simon will, during the current conference, "Speak in greater detail on how we view these problems and how we think they can be solved."

"You will help to decide how it can best be done," Ford said of the aims he spelled out.

"The United States is prepared to join with your governments and play a constructive leadership role."

During the two-day economic summit which ended Saturday, the assembled experts agreed that both inflation and unemployment are getting farther and farther out of hand — but reached no consensus on what can be done about them.

Foreign nations cope with severe inflation

By The Associated Press

The Japanese stocked up, the Belgians turned off, the Indians tried smiling and British brokers self-sacrificed yesterday to cope with the rotten state of the economy.

Japanese lined up at Tokyo railroad stations and stocked their cupboards in last-minute efforts to beat stiff price hikes on transport and rice.

Commuters spent more than an hour in line to buy six-month subway passes at $27, to beat the rate of $37.25 that goes into effect today.

Phone calls from customers seeking deliveries flooded neighborhood rice shops. Today, the price of 22-pound bags of standard-grade rice goes up to $7.10 from $5.40.

The price increases probably will trigger hikes in the cost of other goods for the Japanese consumer, whose costs have been rising at about 25 per cent a year.

In Belgium, superhighway lights were turned off to mark the start of an austerity program aimed at cutting down inflation.

"We probably are at the beginning of our Calvary," Economics Minister Andre Olette said. "Everyone must keep a cool head, the country must rediscover the virtue of economy and unity needed to face difficulty."

Saving from blacking out the 400 miles of floodlit superhighways was estimated at $2.5 million a year. The duration of the blackout was not given.

The Belgian government did announce monthly price controls on heating oil, household appliances and plumbing equipment, and threatened closing shops and suing butchers who refused to cut their prices.

Rich nations must up aid to poor

WASHINGTON [UPI] — International money managers and lenders, seeking ways to halt worldwide inflation without generating world depression, were warned yesterday that increased aid to poor nations is not a "luxury" to rich nations but a necessity.

Speaking at a meeting of governors of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF), World Bank President Robert S. McNamara said that while higher oil prices and inflation mean only a "downward adjustment" in rich nations, in poor nations they are life-threatening.

McNamara, former U.S. defense secretary, proposed that the bank lend $36 billion to poorer nations over the next five years, more than double the present rate.

Food costs to rise

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Despite a recent drop in the average price of raw farm products, Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz predicted yesterday that supermarket shoppers can expect to see food prices rise another 8 to 10 per cent by the end of next year.

The anticipated retail increase, a result of a grain shortage born in the spring rains that delayed planting or washed out crops and in the summer drought that did even more damage, would come on top of the 12 per cent food price hike already registered this year.

But the retail prices showed no apparent relationship to what the farmer is getting. Butz's prediction came shortly before the Agriculture Department released figures showing that lower prices for livestock and key grains allowed the average raw farm product price to fall 2 per cent in the month ending Sept. 15.

Allende aide killed

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) - Gen. Carlos Prats, a former minister in the Marxist-led government of deposed President Salvador Allende in neighboring Chile, and his wife, were killed yesterday in a machine gun and bomb attack as they returned to their apartment, police said.

In a separate incident, shots fired from a speeding car wounded three Argentinan miltary men early in the day, bringing to six the number killed or wounded since a Marxist guerrilla band launched an assassination campaign against army officers. A fourth soldier escaped uninjured from a separate sniper attack earlyyesterday.

Diplomat still held

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic [AP] — A note in a bottle and an eyewitness report indicated kidnaped U.S. diplomat Barbara Hutchison was holding up well yesterday, but efforts to free her and five others held by six leftist guerrillas in the Venezuelan Consulate proceeded slowly.

President Joaquin Balaguer said he would meet soon with Venezuelan Charge d'Affaires Orangel Cubillan, but did not elaborate.

Senate votes aid cut

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate yesterday voted 57-20 to cut off military aid to Turkey but killed an attempt to ban all U.S. aid to the world's exporting countries.

The Senate approved an amendment by Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, D-Mo., that would prohibit aid to any country using U.S. weapons in violation of laws governing their use. The Senate was reacting to Turkey's invasion of Cyprus.

"They have suffered enough," he says

Kennedy hits conditional amnesty program

BOSTON [UPI] -Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., describing President Ford's earned amnesty plan as only 'a courageous first step,' said yesterday 'no further penalty should be exacted" from those who refused Vietnam War participation for reasons of conscience.

'They have suffered enough - whether by serving time in jail or by being separated from their families, friends and futures,' he told the National Conference of Catholic Charities.

At a brief, impromptu news conference afterwards, Kennedy also said he opposed an additional 10 cent per gallon tax on gasoline which the President's economic advisors are reported considering as an anti-inflationary strategy.

Kennedy said his primary reason for rejecting the gas tax proposal was that 'it works to the disadvantage of working people' who by and large need their cars to get to work.

Kennedy drew on a series of historical precedents dating from President Washington's post Revolutionary War policies through the words of his slain brother, President John F. Kennedy, to support his position that 'for the young man who refused to be part of the Vietnam War policy for deep personal reasons of conscience, no further penalty should be exacted.'

However, he did not propose a more liberal alternative to Ford's plan, which allows for amnesty earned through alternative service of up to two years. When asked to expand upon his remarks, Kennedy demurred, saying, 'It's all said; it's all laid out.'

In his prepared remarks, Kennedy said 'President Ford deserves our support for having taken a courageous first step in braking with his predesessor and beginning a program of amnesty.'

'But,' he continued, fitting his remarks into the 'renewal and reconciliation' theme of the conference, 'that process must grow both from an understanding of the need for national reconciliation and from a renewal of respect for the individual act of conscience.'

Later, quoting from the writings of President Kennedy, the senator said 'War will exist until the distant day when the conscientious objector enjoys the same reputation and prestige as the warrior does today.

'I believe that it is part of our national heritage and there is no doubt that it is part of our religious heritage to recognize a higher morality, a standard that calls on us to be true to ourselves and our beliefs before all else,' said Kennedy.

His appearance at the conference came one week after a hastily scheduled news conference, also in Boston, at which Kennedy announced he had made a 'firm, final and unconditional' decision against running for president or vice president in 1976

Development council asks lifting of Bradley status

WASHINGTON [AP] - The New England Council for Economic Development (NECED) has petitioned the Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB) to grant Bradley International Airport co-terminal status with New York and Boston on Transatlantic routes.

Co-terminal status would give airline companies he right to originate and terminate nonstop trans-Atlantic flights to and from Bradley, a NECED spokesman said yesterday.

The Hartford-Springfield area generates many passengers at Boston and New york, and the co-terminal status would reduce ground excess congestion, according to NECED's Air Transportation Committee.

In terms of passports issued per capita, Connecticut ranked fourth nationally, NECED said.

Opponents, supporters of busing protest

BOSTON [UPI] - Opponents and supporters of busing staged demonstrations yesterday and attendance at two racially troubled high schools increased subtantially as Boston entered its third full week of court ordered school integration

Wearing black or green armbands and singing God Bless America, busing opponents gathered at historic Bunker Hill in Charlestown and marched through neighborhood streets for about an hour and a half. The marchers had a parade permit and no mishaps were reported.

Frank Vangora, an organizer of the demonstration, said the crowd was smaller than expected. 'Some people are afraid to speak out. They're afraid of being labelled something they are not,' he said.

'The only thing we're against is forced busing from neighborhood schools. That's it,' he added.

Black leaders staged an 'Assembly of Justice' demonstration in front of the State House to show their support for the desegretation program ordered June 21 by U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity.

Approximately 75 black community leaders and parents of school age children, assembled peacefully in front of the State House at midday to ask that state and city leaders work to provide better protection for black school children being bused into all white areas.

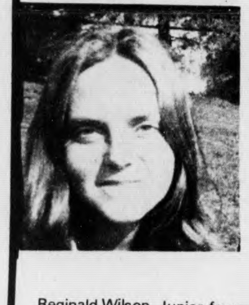
Campus Comments

When plans for a nuclear power plant in Montague were approved, there was a great outcry over the plant's safety. Last February, Sam Lovejoy, area farmer and ecologist, toppled the meteorological tower which had been erected by Northeast Utilities to test local weather conditions. Upon completing his act of civil disobedience, Lovejoy turned himself into the Montague police. Last week Lovejoy was acquitted on a technicality. The prosecution had called the tower "personal property," but the judge ruled that it was "real" property.

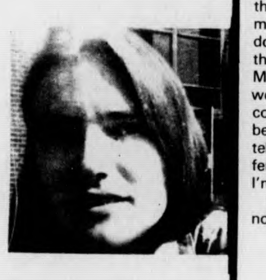
The Question — What do you think about the acquittal of Sam Lovejoy?



Janet Lehen, Senior from Foxboro living at Brittany Manor and majoring in Education; I'm very happy he got off. It's sort of discouraging in that I think the plant might sill go up, but at least he was able to express his views and he certainly did an excellent job representing himself."

Reginald Wilson, Junior from Springfield living at Brett and majoring in Social Psychology; I thought it was good because I think atomic energy plants are no good. It's another example of seeking benefits and profits without looking at the long term effects."

Cathy Restio, Sophomore from Milford living in JFK; "It's farout that he was acquitted. I think that power plants around this area would be dangerous and especially after hearing about the leaks that have been happening in power plants."



Linda Labbee — Smith College Junior from Granby, Mass. majoring in psychology: "I feel that he should be punished because he actually did destroy some property and whether it is personal or real property really doesn't make any difference. He admitted to committing a crime and he should be punished."

Michael Bell — Senior from Stoughton, Mass. living in Sunderland and majoring in English. "I consider it a minor victory in the ecological war. As far as justice goes, the law takes care of that."

Brian Metcalf — Senior from Boston living in Cance and majoring in English: "I'm glad he got acquitted. I don't think the issue was really confronted about whether or not he had a right to topple the tower or not, so I'm wondering if the whole trial was worth it at all. I don't think the issue was really brought to a head."

Ethnicism during war

By MARGARET CORNELL

It's really strange. Some people will sympathize with anyone from an ethnic group or racial minority. They are ready to sympathize with past evils, present cultural conflicts or even with the weird schizophrenia that being non-White in a White geared society produces. But when you get down to politics, oops! Sympathy is gone.

Asian-American history, that is, the history of American of Asian descent is riddled with ethnic politics. Exclusion laws were aimed at Asians, for White laborers wished to be rid of the "unfair" competition who were forced into such a low standard of living. In addition, articles were written and demagogues blared that the West Coast would be overrun by the highly sexed Yellow Horde. (Later the reformed, good Asian, who knew his place, was strangely sexless.)

But all that and the American concentration camps of World War II are dead and gone, right? Wrong...It is still a living issue, at least for some of us who remember the patterns of the past.

You see, it is so easy. Americans don't distinguish Asian-Americans from Asians, or even among Asian groups. In World War II, there were "I am Korean" and "I am Chinese" buttons so they wouldn't be mistaken for Japanese. And international problems turn into racial problems.

Even with the history of World War II, and the 442nd Battalion (Japanese-American) proving in blood that the Japanese-American internment was wrong, J. Edgar Hoover said on April 17, 1969 that, "...there are over 300,000 Chinese in the United States...who could be susceptible to recruitment...in Communist China." It sounded like the arguments used to intern Japanese in World War II. "This is a race war", said General DeWitt who ordered the internment of Japanese. (Japanese-Americans in Hawaii weren't interned. They were one-third of its skilled labor force and couldn't be spared.)

We are held up to other minorities as an example. Are we really accepted or just tolerated? When the United States is at peace with Asia, Asian-Americans are safe. What happens if another war...?

I picked up a book in the Campus Center Store (there are more copies) written by a Japanese, Yukio Mishima, The Sailor Who Fell From Grace With the Sea. On the cover it said, "A novel of the homocidal hysteria that lies latent in the Japanese character..." I wonder; it's really strange.

Dumbells for liberation

By CINDY ROGERS

When I was a Freshman UMie, three years ago, I was a 99 lb. weakling. I didn't begin my college career that way, but with the fantastic food at the D.C., I lost 10 lbs., in the first eight weeks of the semester.

I was always a weak person, ever since I can remember. I had this terrible handicap of not being able to carry books or suitcases which continued into college. My friends at UMass would make fun of me for struggling with any object that weighed over ten pounds.

The following summer, I decided it would be to my advantage to gain a little weight because nobody enjoys being called a "zipper". I gained a bit more than I had planned, I figured that with a little excess weight, I wouldn't be as weak.

I did achieve some success with carrying my books, but I still had trouble with those damn suitcases. All the extra weight added was flab here and there. The most aggravating problem I had was in opening glass doors. Those doors of the campus center are so heavy that I swear they discriminate against weak people. Many times while struggling with the doors, some guy would think he was doing me a favor by helping me. I could see him snicker as he thought to himself, "It will be my pleasure to help this "weak female." I felt like telling him "I happen to be a weak person, not a weak female. Someday I'll show you and everyone else that I'm as strong as anyone else."

I really was worried about my condition. There was nothing like "weaklings anonymous" listed in the phone book. Then I picked up an article about weightlifting for women at a west coast college. I checked the P.E. listings at UMass but they don't offer such a course. A common myth is that weightlifting will make "muscle men out of women".

I decided to can the whole idea until I started working at a country club this summer. I went into the Women's Health Club and there it was, a 15 lb. weightlifting bar. I picked it up and almost dropped it, but 15 lbs. couldn't be that heavy.

So I started on a weight lifting program, combined with exercise. It was exasperating at first but after a while it got easier. The sore muscles stopped hurting after a while.

I learned something else. Weightlifting for women is not just a way of building up strength. It improves the posture, strengthens the shoulders and arms, can slim the thighs, firms the chest depending on the particular exercise. It is not a goal to see how much weight you can press. I don't go around saying, "Hey, today I pressed 20 lbs., tomorrow I'll get it up to fifty."

I've been weightlifting for eight weeks and NO, my arms don't resemble those of Charles Atlas. I feel physically stronger and my weight is more evenly distributed. I can carry my suitcases with ease though I still have some trouble with the Campus Center doors. But I manage, and by myself!

I'm still classified as a weakling but I'm working at it. A friend of mine lent me his weights which I fixed at 20 lbs. So if I continue I'll get those doors yet, and I won't end up looking like a "muscle man".

Camelopard droppings

To the Editor:

It seems to me that the Collegian should be better able to fill a space than with the paraphrased pile of Charles Camelopard.

If Camelopard's presence in California is due to the University W-O Walls, there is even more merit to such a program. If not, I personally think it would have been funnier to read an article by Ron Ziegler on his own state of affairs [a topic that should be easier for him than affairs of state]. The column strangely echoed an article by Art Buchwald, who used the same Disneyland setting, and Ziegler fantasy-land idea. Incidentally, Buchwald was funny.

It seems to me that with the 36-30 size pants, and his fat profile, Camelopard takes up too much space.

Ford: act don't talk

In answer to demands by Secretary of State Kissinger and President Ford, that the Arab Oil block move to lower their oil prices, the Shah of Iran really stuck it to the western powers. "How dare they shake their finger at me? If they shake their finger at me, I will shake right back at them!" The Shah predicted that the Arabs would be a "world power" on the scale of West Germany within two decades.

During these insolvent seventies, oil has become the blood line of world economies throughout the world. The Shah's prediction leaves me with an already uneasy feeling. The Arabs are already investing their opulent profits in various unstable companies in Europe, and making investments available to the United States market as well.

There was more than just a bit of panic Kissinger's warning that the Arabs irresponsible price rise could jeopardize the political economy and the political stability of every major Western power. Kissinger is very good at long distance power politics, knowing the art of diplomacy that lets one side back down from a confrontation "with dignity"; and carves up a settlement the way "Grandpa" used to carve up a holiday Turkey.

However Kissinger's latest "get tough" warnings to the Arab Shah gives a hint to the new harried state of American statesmanship: We no longer hold all the cards. If the Arabs pull another embargo on us, what will we do? John Wayne is too old to put back in uniform, given a platoon of soldiers and told to "charge the Suez" (although I'm sure he'd be willing). Kissinger and Ford's harsh words can be interpreted as a cosmetic and not substantive "burst of emotions".

Over the past thirty years the United States has become so dependent on oil that we are in a position that we have never been in since colonial days: We need the good will of the Arab Shah's to insure that our system runs at all.

Last summer Richard Nixon toured the Middle East and just about gave away the State of California to gain the "good will" of the Arab nations. We are selling arms to Israel out of "principle", and arms to the Arabs because it is "politically pragmatic."

Ford and Kissinger should learn a lesson from the Japanese, who last year "re-evaluated" their entire international program simply to stay in the "good graces" of the Arabs. In regards to their Israeli policy, the Japanese did a complete turn around, when the Arabs said "Change or you can be sure there will be no oil for you this year!"

The United States must move quickly so that we don't become even more dependent on the Arabs for our economic existence. The President must forget his roots, and really stick it to his former constituents in Detroit: G.M. and Ford must be told to go for efficiency and not the cosmetic hullabaloo that so dominates the automobile industry.

Ford has got to stop the Oil men in Houston from whispering sweet nothings in his ear; they are the selfish ones that got us in this mess in the first place.

With their entire media machine in full gear ("Dig we must" says the stern faced Oil rig man), the Oil giants in this country have "convinced" the government that the Alaska pipeline is a "real" step in solving the energy crisis. At best, the pipeline is a temporary measure, where the U.S. has agreed to destroy some of its most beautiful natural resources to provide more oil for several years: At its worst, the pipeline is just another "quick profits" scheme from the oil companies.

Clearly the future of this country is not in Oil (and I don't give a damn what the Mobil or Esso ads are saying!). The U.S. has to make the search for viable alternative sources of energy a real priority immediately. It is important to note that "viable" does not have to mean "profitable"; if necessary, the government should nationalize the business of energy research, and once found, should take it out of the hands of the selfish oil powers who to this very day are trying to take over the various alternative energy fields for their personal profits.

Solar energy, water power, and in some cases, nuclear power (if it can be made safer) are all possibilities. However it is now impossible to count on the Arabs for our own economic and political stability. Kissinger and Ford should realize that action is more important than angry words.

The kind of action needed now should be directed against Detroit, Dallas, and Houston ... as well as Tehren.

Words are no longer sufficient.

Night worrying

The streets of Ware are empty of both cars and people. The only motion I see is the clock on the bank that alternately flashes 3:57 and 43 degrees. I flip on the heat, but for the moment it is a chilling blast of cold air. I feel remarkably awake, but then this is the earliest I've left the printer's this semester.

Please, dear goddess of journalism! Let there be no glaring headline errors! Let there be no missed bylines. I know how frustrating it is to see your photo or story in print minus its byline. Did I get all the turn to page —, and all the continued from page —? Such a simple mistake can be very frustrating to a reader, as I'm sure everyone will agree. I can still see the copy before me, but now the letters jumbling together into sentences that make no sense.

UMass, late at night after putting the Collegian to bed

The highway is empty, and the winding curves with their varied dips and rises give me the sensation of being on a roller coaster. My tired eyes see the white line in the center of the road as a cartoon that is fed with regularity by a machine that miraculously remains just beyond the horizon.

SHIT — an animal! The screech of my brakes is enough to send the creature scurrying to safety into the woods.

The adrenalin pumps through me and I shake for the next mile and a half. I turn to the radio which is my only company for the 20 mile drive to campus. Static wipes out my choice, so I play with the knob looking for some solid rock and roll that acts like audio caffeine. Buffalo, Washington, D.C., New York City — the stations come from far away. I settle on Springfield, which is close enough to fade with less frequency.

It wasn't a bad night, as nights spent laying out the Collegian go. There was little late breaking news, and once the stories arrived, the pages were done quickly. As my eyes focus on the double yellow line before me, my mind flashes on the printer's. I see the rows of light boxes with the pages laid out. I copy, I hear the computers and the typists. I see the page that was 9 inches short of copy, and I hope that the way I spaced out those paragraphs looks good. Oh, well, it's too late now.

This drive is one of the few times during the week that I get off campus, and I relax to enjoy it. These hours of Friday mornings have become mine with a sense of ownership that stems from not sharing it with anyone else. The country around Quabbin provides a beautiful and well needed contrast to the concrete and brick of Southwest. The trees lean over the road displaying the fiery colors of autumn. The sky is clear, broken by sparkling stars and the moon which I never seem to see on campus. Occasionally, patches of fog swirl across the road. This is a dreamy, fairytale world — far away from headlines and deadlines, term papers and reserved readings.

I drive on to campus, and park the car in its designated Campus Center parking space. In two weeks, I have seen absolutely no one as I've walked back to Southwest. It is strange to see the campus so dark and desolate. Within five hours, these walks will be packed with people rushing to classes. I walk swiftly, as the jacket I chose Thursday afternoon is rather thin for 4:30 Friday morning. If I'm cold now, just think of December, I remind myself.

I walk through the non-existent doors of the tower and greet the security guard. After exchanging good nights, I slowly climb the stairs. Damn it! I forgot to do the reading for my first class! Oh, well. With that, I lie down for a couple of hours of much needed sleep.

NUKE trial wasted

The recent trial and subsequent acquittal of Sam Lovejoy in Superior Court raises an important moral and less important question. The first concerns the actual reason for Mr. Lovejoy's acquittal. It had been the antenna-toppler's intention to level the Northeast Utility (NU) control tower, thereby inducing a day in court with the company.

Since Northeast had been using the control tower as the first step in the Atomic Energy Commission's (AEC) plans to build a nuclear power plant, Lovejoy's day in court could serve as a device to address the real problem, the problem being the AEC's building of nuclear power plants, without doing adequate safety research beforehand.

Just over a week ago, AEC safety expert Carl Hocevar said that he was resigning his post "in order to be free to tell the American people the truth about the potentially dangerous conditions in the nation's nuclear power plants." The safety expert went on to say that the U.S. should consider stopping the construction of power plants." The safety expert went on to say that the U.S. should consider stopping the construction of power plants until these serious questions could be answered.

Unfortunately the real problem was never addressed at the trial, which brings us to the legal question. NU's charge, as filed in court, was "malicious destruction of personal property", an erroneous charge, since personal property as defined by law, is that property which can be easily moved. Apparently, since Lovejoy had to use a pair of wire cutters to complete his task, his crime was destruction of "real" property. Thus due to nothing more than an irritating technicality, taxpayers' money is wasted, and more importantly, the actual problem was never dealt with.

The fact that the court system possesses inherently serious deficiencies is the minor detail in the affair. What should be retained in the observer's mind, is the goverment's evident lack of regard for both the land and the people. Not only could an accident in one of these power plants do a good deal of damage economically, far more serious consequences could result ecologically.

Hopefully more acts like that of Sam Lovejoy's won't be needed to illustrate that point. One thing's for sure, it will take someone of his calibre to bring the point home to the people and the government.

October 27 for Puerto Ricans

To the Editor:

Last Tuesday night in a lecture-dialogue, Puerto Rico House of Representative, Carlos Galiza brought to us the facts about the Puerto Rican situation:

-1898 a U.S. invasion during Hispano-American war with Spain, established a military regime opposing the autonomy granted a year before by the Spain government.

-1917 American citizenship was imposed even though the members of the Puerto Rican House voted two measures against it.

-1952 the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico was established, assuring federal control of diplomatic and commerce relations, also immigration and transportation controls.

-33 per cent of women sterilized and two million Puerto Ricans [almost half the nation] living in exile, all this encouraged by local and federal government as a solution to the problem of "over population", unemployment and lack of education opportunities. This compares to an 8 per cent of the population who were foreigners in control of the best jobs and the economy.

-85 per cent of the economy controlled by U.S. big companies whom don't pay local or federal taxes, and also receive aid from the local government.

-A $12,000 million debt over the Puerto Rican people, 6,000 being public in the form of government bonus, and the other 6,000 being private debts of private business.

Right now maybe you're asking yourself "What do I have to do with this thing?", or better you may ask yourself "What can I do about it?"

For the American people all I can say is that this is further proof of what the institutions are doing with the power that you have placed in their hands. You can Write to your local, state and federal representatives, care to find out if they are really working for freedom as they say they are. That's the only way democracy can be achieved, checking these institutions.

As for Puerto Ricans there's a dual role, as Mr. Galliza pointed out; we must appeal to the conscientious American who care for real freedom and justice, and let them know that our struggle is going on and that they have an important role to play in it. Also we must also join the American people in their own struggle in trying to make freedom and justice a reality to all people.

For those reasons on October 27, we, the people who care for ideals and their realization must be at the Madison Square Garden; for freedom, justice and Puerto Rico's complete independence.

I.P.O. is the problem

To the Editor:

I would like to refer to an article which appeared in the Collegian September 18 concerning the Office of International Programs and its' director, Barbara Burn. This summer I was on the UMass program in Florence, Italy. I feel I can add some insight into the present controversy about the office.

I have no personal vendetta against Ms. Burn or any member of her staff. My sole purpose in writing is to help improve the effectiveness of the I.P.O. UMass is no longer a small agricultural school. A university of this size should offer a wide variety of programs, one is the opportunity to study and travel abroad. Other smaller universities have a far more developed overseas programs office.

The I.P.O. sponsors only summer programs and does not have an established program for a year of study. Different departments such as the School of Education do sponsor full-year programs, however these are unrelated to the I.P.O.

I doubt whether the majority of UMass students even know the I.P.O. exists. Most students who went to Florence learned of the program through a professor or the Italian Department. I have never seen any type of publicity concerning any I.P.O. sponsored programs. Last week's Collegian had an advertisement for foreign study opportunities through Syracuse Universitv

While Chencellor Bromery praises the I.P.O. and defends the competency of Ms. Burn, I question how much insight he has into the situation. Obviously his associations with the office are on a different basis than the average student's.

There is much to be gained from a foreign study experience. The program should be expanded. I would not like to see the Student Senate cut funding to the I.P.O. however, the office must be made more responsive to student needs and desires.

Eric Fleet too hasty

To the Editor:

I question how Eric Fleet had the audacity to suggest, in his comments "Ecological Ignorance", that the "desired end" of the environmentalists is the "collapse of the economy". Are concerned citizens stepping out of line by questioning the consequences of nuclear energy? The subject is such a technically complicated matter, in terms of socie-economic and environmental impact, that such action is unquestionably justified.

Furthermore, it is difficult to place limits on the ability of our present technological capacity to produce economic substitutes for products that, for reasons of obsolesence or availability, must be replaced. For example, the feasibility of nuclear energy is still quite probable as a substitute for oil or coal. But had equal amounts of funds allocated to the development of solar energy, perhaps it might be more practicle as an economic energy solution. Of course, its profitability is questionable because its supply is infinite, relative to the Earths exploitable, limited resources, such as radio-active materials.

My point is, Eric, relax. The environmentalists are only questioning the consequences of uncertain activity. Is the state of the American Dollar inversely proportional to the quality and well being of our environment?

Rufus rots

To the Editor:

At one time I blamed the incompetence of the Collegian on the reporting staff. I now find that I've been attacking the wrong group. In general the editors of the Collegian, not the reporting staff, are the cause of the paper's incompetence.

Jerry Lazar and Co. critize Mr. Nixon and his friends for being obsessed with power, but, in actuality, they have the same obsession.

In the Sept. 23 issue of the Collegian one can read "The Further Adventures of Rufus McWhirter", written by Jerry Lazar, the paper's editor-in-Chief. This editorial is a quarter-page insult to whatever intelligence I might possess. Mr. Lazar wrote this editorial for himself [I'm sure no one else can understand it], not for the readers of his newspaper.

On might say that this editorial was being used as a filler, but that would be a lie. Last week I submitted an editorial which, in all modesty, was better than Mr. Lazar's. It made a point, which is more than I can say of Rufus McWhirter. It was never printed.

I also submitted two articles last week. I considered them at least as important as Don McGilvray's drawing of an erect penis. Only one of the two articles was printed. It was cut in the middle of a paragraph.

I'm sure that on this campus of 20,000 people there are other people who have this same gripe. Maybe together we can beat the system.

Kiss off Kosofsky

To the Editor:

Maybe I'm just sentimental, but I failed to find any human interest or humor in Ms. Kosofsky's "Kissing Blarney Good-bye" [9-27-74]. I think we'll all agree it takes a certain kind of person to throw his hat into the presidential ring, though we may not agree whether it's courage or ruthlessness.

No one has the right to attack the person when he-she wishes to criticize another's policies - even those of a political figure. I doubt if the smile would remain on Ms. Kosofsky's face if her son might be dying of cancer and someone referred to his condition as lightly as "to communicate telepathically amidst the cosmis vibrations." I found her reference to the removal of his "larynx" in poor taste. I hope her mother never has to suffer the tragedy of the killing of two of her sons nor fear the possibility of a third son being assassinated - using Ms. Kosofsky's style - two down, one to go.

"Service Contracts" need repairs

Expensive home appliances are usually sold with warranties to protect the consumer if something goes wrong with the appliance. But in many cases consumers bolster or replace the basic guarantee with a "service contract." These contracts work like insurance policies — for a fee, the customer is promised free repair service if the appliance breaks down.

The Attorney General's Consumer Protection Division is advising consumers to note some abusive practices that have arisen regarding these appliance "service contracts."

In one common deceptive practice the consumer is enticed by a discount on a product being sold without a warranty. For instance, a customer may save $60 by buying an appliance without a warranty.

However, the salesman then offers the buyer a one-year service contract. For $5 a month, we will fix the refrigerator fee if anything goes wrong with it.

Note that the service contract is just as expensive as the original warranty so in fact the buyer saves nothing.

The Consumer Protection Division of the Atty. General's office also advises that consumers avoid salesmen who:

—Misrepresent their product with phony sales claims or misleading "model home" offers.

—Tell customers selected at random that they are "specially selected."

—Misinform customers by stating they are the winners of mythical contests or prizes.

—Induce persons unable to read or write to sign a sales contract.

LCA to hold fall show

Leverett Craftsmen and Artists, Inc., of Leverett Center, announce their seventh annual Fall Show, opening October 4 and running through October 29.

The Fall Show is LCA's once-a-year invitational, which is aimed at showing the best work of its residents and the work of many of the best craftsmen and artists in the Pioneer Valley.

This year's show will have the additional goal of attracting buyers from the growing craft shop and gallery market in the New England area. To this end, exhibitors are being encouraged to submit portfolios as well as representative samples of their work.

Close to 50 craftsmen and artists will be exhibiting in the Fall Show. The opening is at 8:00 p.m., Friday. Shop hours are 1.5 weekdays, 12-5 Saturdays and Sundays.

LCA is a non-profit corporation, with 12 resident craftsmen and artists, who teach year-round classes and sell through LCA's salesroom. LCA holds monthly shows of individual craftsmen and artists in its galleries, and is located in the Old Box Shop, next to Town Hall in Leverett Center. For more information call (413) 253-9062.

"Amherst Singles" swing

Something new to most people in this area is the four-year-old "Amherst Singles," an open group whose only objective is to draw unmarried and unremarried people together.

Gaining momentum over the last few months, the membership is rapidly growing to the point of overcrowding at meetings held in homes. Although the organization is centered in Amherst (hence the name), members come foom throughout the Connecticut Valley. Most members are twenty-five or older and have have found few social or commercial organizations which fulfill their needs.

An open house-dance is held about the first of each month at the Farley Lodge on the UMass campus for the sole purpose of meeting people. No speeches or pressure, just fun. Refreshments are provided along with music and congenial people. A door charge of one dollar to defray expenses is asked.

The Amherst Singles' current president is Phyllis Boothroyd, UMass undergrad who, in her thirties, is the mother of three, divorced, and will receive her Bachelor's degree in psychology with honors next summer.

In order that people may make contact with "Amherst Singles," area representatives may be called for information. In the Greenfield area call Beverly Haynes at 774-4128. In Amherst, Northampton, call Bob Lentilhon at 549-1902, and in the Springfield area call Chuck Klein at 732-7444.

Marijuana laws termed "too permissive"

He said Oregon's law, which treats possession of small amounts of marijuana as a civil crime, was "too permissive," and that he favored one such as in New Mexico, where a first offense of possession of one ounce or less is punishable by a fine of $50 to $100 and-or 15 days imprisonment.

He said a proposal that suspended sentences be given users, pushers, and smalltime traffickers who cooperate with authorities "merits serious consideration."

Campaign funds law debated

BOSTON [AP] — A confrontation is brewing before the November elections between Common Cause of Massachusetts and the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts (CLUM) over the issue of campaign finance disclosure.

CLUM is preparing a call for a modification of the state's disclosure laws, calling them an infringement of personal privacy.

Common Cause, which sponsored the current statute requiring the listing of names and addresses of campaign contributors, opposes any weakening of the law.

CLUM Executive Director John Roberts said Friday he sees a "real concensus" within the organization that the "privacy of the ballot" is being violated by the law.

He said he expected a vote within the organization next month to favor one of three proposed positions calling for a modification of the statute.

"When campaign disclosure interests are weighed against the interests of personal privacy, the privacy interests really prevail," he said.

But a spokesman for Common Cause said, "The public has a right to know who is contributing money to a candidate."

"The laws are not an infringement of personal privacy at all," Mary Ann Fenton, the spokesman, said. "If a contributor is not trying to contribute a great deal of money to influence anyone, then I don't think there's any meed to be concerned."

Beer can collectors gather for convention

DENVER [AP] — Nearly 1,000 persons who gathered this weekend were more interested in looking at beer cans than drinking what they contained.

They filled a downtown hotel with wall-to-wall beer cans for the Fourth annual Convention of the Beer Can Collectors of America, a St. Louis-based organization which boasts 3,500 members nationwide.

The object is to see how many different beer can brands and designs can be collected. Some collectors specialize in full cans, but most collect empties. Collections vary in size from several hundred to nearly 7,000.

Bill Mugrage of Lynnwood, Wash., has 1,500 cans in his collection.

"I get most of my cans from dumps," Mugrage said, "You can also find a lot of cans under buildings, but rats and sheriffs are problems."

Although Mugrage says a lot of people raise their eyebrows when they hear about his hobby, he says, "I ask them what they collect and when they say stamps, then I laugh."

Some collectors specialize in foreign cans, some in gallon cans and others only collect cans they have personally emptied. Trading takes place through the mail throughout the year, but the Canvention is the best opportunity for good trades.

Public access act scored by MassPIRG

by BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group Friday released a report which documents non-compliance with the state Freedom of Information Act at the state and local level.

The Nader-style consumer and environmental group, which also has offices in Amherst, also advised against weakening the act in testimony before the Secretary of Administration and Finance.

According to the MassPIRG report, 23 of 59 requests for documents the group consider public record were denied by state agencies. Among the worst offenders, the group reported, were the Nursing Board of Registration, the Consumer Protection division of the Attorney General's office and the Department of Public Utilities.

In most cases, material requested was consumer complaint letters, the report said. Most requests were made verbally.

The report was compiled by students working for MassPIRG in both the Boston and Amherst offices travelling to state and local offices. Mass PIRG is a student-funded group. UMass is a member. UMass students voluntarily pay for the group on their semester bill.

Mass PIRG student interns checked documents in a number of western Massachusetts communities, including Amherst, Belchertown, Greenfield, Montague, North Adams, Northampton, South Hadley, Springfield and Williamstown.

Documents requested included revenue sharing regulations, balance sheets, police department rules, building inspection records and bids for public contracts.

Of 110 items requested, seventeen were unavailable because the documents supervisor was out. In twenty cases, students were told documents requested did not exist.

The report did not (N-O-T) note any difficulties receiving public records in Amherst.

Smart farmers send wheat prices up

BISMARCK, N.D. [AP] — The "Great Wheat Holdout" continues. Farmers are refusing to sell their grain in hopes of pushing up prices still further in a year with a record harvest.

According to most estimates, farmers now control 60 to 70 per cent of the 1.791 billion bushels of wheat produced this year on U.S. croplands.

From North Dakota, where the harvest is about half completed, to Texas, where it was concluded months ago, farmers are showing "an extreme amount of sales discipline," according to elevator operators, grain brokers and wheat exporters.

"We accomplished what we started out to do — we got $4 wheat," says Thomas E. Ostrander, the president of the Kansas Wheat Raisers Association.

Wheat withholding began with the harvest last spring. Farmers in Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas stored most of their wheat instead of selling it.

"I'm just gonna sell one out of five bushels to keep the bank off my back," said one farmer in the midst of harvest. "They'll have to pay my price to get the rest of it."

Higher wheat prices ultimately would mean higher prices for flour, bread and other consumer products. Wheat contributes only a small portion of the price of a loaf of bread, however.

Some farmers are still stinging from last year, when they sold at $2.50 a bushel only to see the price go over $6 by the end of the year.

Dumping on river

BY Ron Chait
Staff Writer

Members of the Fraternal Dump Association (FDA) are headed for a rendezvous with the Connecticut River.

This was the consensus following a recent organizational meeting in Brown House, attended by 15 die-hard dump enthusiasts.

"I think," suggested charter member Alan W. Kennedy, "we should have some kind of outing event to bring people together."

It was agreed upon that a canoe trip on October 5 should be planned.

"The purpose behind the outing will be twofold," began David J. Driscoll, staff advisor from the FDA's international office. The excursion will be fun, he said, but it shoud also be beneficial.

"We're going to survey and rate, for desirability and scenic quality," Driscoll explained, "the riverbank dumping system of the Connecticut River, from Greenfield to Sunderland."

He added that their findings would serve as a guide to future travelers on the river.

Following the discussion on the canoe trip, other activites were mentioned.

The majority of those present voiced an interest in a tour of "picturesque, alpine dumps" in Rowe, Shelburne, Heath, and other localities.

The only unfinished business at the meeting concerned a dump behind the Physical Plant which had allegedly "disappeared" without a trace. Members expressed dismay, but were unable to come to a solution, and the discussion had to be floored.

Though few were present, it was announced that 46 students have joined the FDA's UMass chapter since it was organized last semester. Stephen V. Masse, secretary, said "new members are entering in droves."

President Thomas P. Driscoll, brother of the advisor, said "Never ever litter the road; bring our dump another load," as the meeting concluded.

Commuter Assbly. begins colloquia program

After considerable planning and negotiations that began in late July of this year, the Commuter Assembly has made operational a colloquia program.

Waht are colloquia? Colloquia are one credit courses, taught usually by undergraduates, that offer skills or knowledge that might not otherwise be available through regular University course offerings. As with the colloquia programs offered by the other area governments, the Commuter Assembly hopes to make available to its constituents these unique learning experiences, as well as provide the opportunity for interested commuters with knowledge and experience to share their talents with the community through a program sponsored by their own area government.

The colloquia program can thus be valuable not only as an alternative course offering, but as an opportunity for those interested in teaching to develop skills and experience.

The Commuter Colloquia Program can become an exciting and valuable resource only if it continues to develop, organizers say. With the groundwork now established, the assembly strongly encourages anyone - undergraduates whether commuters or not, faculty, grad students, and anyone with knowledge and skills to share - to contact them about teaching a colloquia.

They have available the resources and assistance necessary to turn an idea into a colloquia, but they say they need students' interest and help.

In order that the program get under way by mid October, preparations should begin as soon as possible. For information or proposal forms Joe Beals in the Commuter Assembly Office, ground floor of the Student Union, behind the Hatch. The phone number is 545-2145.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Tuesday, October 1

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A matter of business must be decided on its own merits, regardless of your own preferences. Don't allow yourself to be discouraged by setbacks.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — A balanced combination of head and heart applied to the job at hand can make this a banner day for you. Realize a small ambition.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Protect yourself against the emotional upset that can occur when you fail to distinguish between fact and fancy and build up false hopes.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — See to matters of health this morning. Otherwise you may have to pay heavy penalties later in the week. Seek advice from an expert.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — The best way to take advantage of what this day has to offer is to plan things well in advance. Don't overlook possible if not probable events.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Cooperate with others on a project of importance to your distant if not your immediate future. You can turn the tables on failure.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — There may be unavoidable confusion this morning as young people attempt to gain their own way. Listen to any reasonable argument.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You may not feel congratulatory toward a winning competitor, but it will ultimately serve you well if you offer best wishes today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Don't allow an argument with a competitor to intrude upon your business or professional affairs today. Separate areas of your activities.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Honors you have sought but failed to gain may cause you considerable embarrassment at this time. Your best bet is to grin and bear it!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Any display of weakness could cause you to lose out on advancement. Guard your reputation jealously at this time; put and keep your best foot forward.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Setbacks today are caused by quick, false moves. You would do well to take your time making up your mind as to what course of action to follow.

AL SKINNER In action for UMass.

"Skinner has a very good chance to make this team" - Net Coach Kevin Loughery

Dr. A and Dr. J in the ABA? the prognosis looks good

By GLENN POSTER
Sports Staff

For those of you who don't read the New York Times because it is "over your head," you missed a valuable piece of information in yesterday's sports section. (actually I don't read the Times for the above-stated reason) But, thanks to Sam Goldaper and an anonymous source who wandered into the Collegian office yesterday, Poster's "Where Are They Now Series" continues with an updated report on the progress of Al Skinner.

Goldaper refers to last year's Minuteman captain as, "...a Julius Erving protege, and is seeking a job in the Nets backcourt."

To set a few facts, the New York Nets are the class of the American Basketball Association in addition to being the defending champs. Their principle owner, Roy Boe, holds the same position with the National Hockey League's New York Islanders. Both teams play in the beautiful new Nassau County Coliseum. The arena is without question, the finest facility in the ABA. And, of course the New York metropolitan area can give an athlete a few other things to do in his spare time in the way of making money. So Skinner has a few incentives staring him in the face should he make the team.

In an exhibition Friday night against one of the better NBA teams, the Detroit Pistons, Skinner saw sixteen minutes of playing time. While he was on the court, Al scored ten points, shot fifty percent from the floor, (4 out of 8) hit on two of three foul shots, grabbed a rebound, had two assists and one personal.

Goldaper got comments from two men who make the ultimate decisions in the Nets' scheme of things. From general manager Dave DeBusschere: " 'I liked him from the first time I saw him. People underestimated him. They thought he couldn't play guard.' " (The Nets have two fine forwards in fellow alumnus Julius Erving and Memphis State product Larry Kenon.) And from Coach Kevin Loughery: " 'Skinner has a very good chance to make this team. He showed me some quickness and good moves.' "

Let's hope that Al can keep up the good work.

Sports do not make $ at UMass

By BILL DOYLE
Sports Staff

Collegian sports staffer Bill Doyle recently investigated the financial situation of UMass athletics. This report is the first of a two-part series.

Intercollegiate sports do not make money at UMass nor will they in the forseeable future, according to Financial Manager Al Rufe.

"Very few colleges make money on their sports programs," said Rufe, "Only colleges like Notre Dame, Ohio State, UCLA and Nebraska make money on them."

Money for sports at UMass is received from the state, students, ticket sales and alumni, said Rufe.

"The state pays for about fifty per cent of the athletic program at UMass," Rufe explained. "The state pays for the coaches, the fields and their upkeep, the athletic buildings and even the offices." The chances of receiving more aid from the state are not rated as good by Rufe. "There are just too many other social needs of the state, which prevents them from increasing their aid to the athletic program. Even if UMass was to get more money from the state, it would not go to the athletic department."

The students pay for about one third of the expenses through the athletic fee of fifteen dollars per semester, adds Rufe. The athletic fee pays for all the equipment used by the various teams. Another way to create more revenue would be to increase the fee, but as Rufe says, "It hasn't been raised since I've been here. It hasn't been raised since around 1964 and I don't forsee it being raised in the near future. The students probably wouldn't want an increase anyway."

Ticket sales is another main source of revenue for the athletic department. Unfortunately, only football and basketball sell tickets, so these two sports must pay for all the twenty-three teams on campus. Neither the football nor the basketball team even pays completely for itself, so state funds are necessary.

The football team must sell a certain amount of season tickets in order for the entire athletic department to operate effectively. To get more money obviously more season tickets must be sold.

The basketball team is limited by the small size of Curry Hicks Cage, so it doesn't bring in as much money as football. Basketball is doing "a fine job" said Rufe but the Cage is obviously too small a facility for the UMass campus.

Alumni donations make up a small percentage of the total funds received.

Four things are needed in order to make money on sports at UMass, said Rufe. They are: 1-a basketball and hockey facility, 2-more scholarships, 3-better schedules, and 4-more traveling.

A better facility, which houses both basketball and hockey, is imperative, according to Rufe, in order to make more money. A new facility that seats between eight and twelve thousand would help in many ways. More tickets could be sold, because there would be more seats and people may come just to see the building. Recruiting and scheduling would be helped immensely.

The hockey team, a story in itself, needs a new facility desparately. It now plays it's games in Orr Rink at Amherst College, which is even smaller than the Cage. Again, recruiting and scheduling would be helped greatly. Hockey could become a money sport with a new facility, Rufe said.

More scholarships would help recruiting and improve the brand of ball played at UMass.

Better schedules would help attendance figures, recruiting and create more revenue.

Rufe said that UMass cannot conceivably attain these things needed to make money. A new facility isn't a likelihood since it can't be financed. The number of scholarships that can be awarded is limited by the Yankee Conference. Besides, there is little money for them. To get better schedules, you need bigger stadiums to sell more tickets to be able to give the visitors the guaranteed amount of money it takes to get them here. The Civic Center in Springfield isn't the answer either, Rufe said. A big enough profit can't be made.

One thing must be understood, said Rufe, and that is that the goal of the UMass athletic department isn't to go big time. The goal is to operate a greater number of athletic programs on a New England schedule rather than to operate a lesser number of programs on a national level.

UMass running attack - it's no joke

Photos by Russ Mariz

Sports Staff

Last year the UMass running backs learned how it feels to be laughed at. The lines around this football-frustrated campus went something like: "Did ya hear how Dick MacPherson was arrested for using his running attack at a football game? The charge was assault with a dead weapon."

This year the only laughter has come from the UMass bench, and most of the joking has been done by the UMass running backs. In three games the UMass rushers have traversed 660 yards of turf, exactly 89 yeards less than they gained in the entire 1973 season.

Why the sudden turnaround? Only Dick MacPherson's dauntless dashers know for sure, but part of the reason is diversity. Mark Tripucka (left) runs a quarterback keeper. Jim Torrance (below right) bulls his way up the middle, and little Rich Jessamy (below left) shows his secret weapon-flight. Laughing together on the bench, Jessamy and Tripucka (center) can be sure of this - the UMass running attack is no joke.

UMass water polo teams burst out of starting gate

By MARC GORDON
Special Correspondent

The UMass Water-Polo Club this weekend showed why it is rapidly becoming one of the most feared powers in New England. On Friday the squad defeated arch-rival B.C. 12-10, also a major power in N.E., and on Saturday went on to mop up UNH and Hebron Academy in impressive fashion 28-6 and 26-6, respectively. In addition, the women's team outswam and outscored rival B.C. 6-2.

Last week I promised you a thriller against B.C. and the large crowd on hand in Boyden was certainly not disappointed. The first quarter saw the hometown favorites go down by a score of 2-1. Only UMass forward Henry MacLean could slip one through the excellent goaltending of B.C.'s Mike Quigley.

But in the second quarter Duncan "the Dunc" Lomis, the other UMass forward, went wild pouring in a 4 goal assortment of backhands and forehands. Henry added another and the half time score read UMass 6 and B.C. 5. Building up steam in the third quarter, the team increased it's lead to 9-7 behind such goals as Ron Bucher's bomb from 10 yards out that was in the corner of the net before the goalie knew what hit him. Or Duncan Lomis's mad dash down the sideline and in on goal that left both teams in the dust wondering if jet propulsion was legal in this league. Both teams found their second winds in the fourth quarter and the fans were treated to some outstanding two way action. Kevin McGinn notched the clinching goal for UMass with a minute and a half left in the game to make the score 12-9. Final score UMass 12 and B.C. 10.

The UMass team, often plagued with fouls, was especially pleased with the game since everyone played well and no one came close to fouling out. Next time the teams meet B.C. will be without the services of 5 goal-scorer Tom Groden who is a grad. student and inelligible for tournament play.

The women's team came out equally fired up and powered their way by B.C. 6-2. High scorer for the women was Jane Welzel who notched three followed by Sharon Smith, Kathy McDonald, and Debbie McCafferty. Sharon, who is new to the game, is an excellent swimmer and shows great potential; improving each time she plays. The poloettes displayed a fine all around team effort led by the heads up passing and strong swimming of players like Judy Day, Debbie Hoxsie, and MaryAnn Elias who did an impressive job filling in for injured goalie Jane Kennedy.

Saturday's games at UNH were dominated by UMass. One pleasing highlight of the UNH game was the play of newcomer Ed Fouhey who not only notched his first goal in competition, but went on to round out a hat trick showing some veterans that he knew just what to do with the ball when the opportunity came to him. Ed started the second game and showed why, netting another against the fine swimmers of Hebron Academy. Other scorers were Captain Bill Bridgam, Ron Boucher, Spencer Sullivan, Kevin McGinn, Henry MacLean, player-coach Bill MCafferty, Duncan Loomis, and Marc Gordon.

The poloers go into training now in preparation for a big do or die weekend here and at B.C. two weeks from now: October 11, 12, and 13.

Funds surface from "Rowathon"

By LAURIE GULLION
Women's Crew Team

The "Rowathon" held by the University of Massachusetts Women's Crew Club on the Connecticut River last Saturday raised the necessary funds to purchase new racing equipment while it conditioned the club for its fall racing season.

The Women's Crew Club wishes to thank all persons who, by sponsoring a club member, helped support the team's effort to alleviate their budgetary problems. When the donations are collected from all sponsors, the club will have raised $2,000.

Rowing twenty-five miles in five hours with half of the distance rowed in the rain and three dockings for food, the club members raised the funds to purchase ten Australian Croker oars and to begin financing a new racing shell.

While the five hour "practice" improved the rowing technique of the newer members, it strengthened the overall performance of the three shells by stressing coordination and precision required to keep each boat balanced.

The experience gained through the "Rowathon" helps prepare the women's club for the "brush" on the Connecticut River with Trinity College and Smith College on October 12th. The major event of the fall season is the Head of the Charles Regatta in Boston on October 27th followed by a race with MIT on November 2nd.

Runners chase first win in 22 years

Harriers face PC, Harvard

By SCOTT HAYES
MDC Sports Staff

After a few early season meets, Boston area cross-country coaches are picking Providence College as the team to beat in today's tri-meet between the Friars, Harvard and the UMass harriers. The competition will be fierce for the Franklin Park affair, but the Minutemen runners have plenty of incentive, and of course, incentive can be the difference between victory and defeat.

First of all, Harvard has a 21-year winning streak over UMass teams, and senior co-captains Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin would like to end the famine. A year ago, Rick Rojas lowered his own course record in leading the Crimson to a narrow, 27-30 triumph over the Minutemen.

Secondly, the runners were a unanimous choice : the New England coaches in the pre-season poll. Providence was ranked second and the harriers would like to keep it that way. A much improved Friar team, however, may cause problems for Thomas, Gillin and teammates, who topped Providence 24-34 last year.

Another reason that exceptional performances can be expected today is a personal rivalry between Thomas, Gillin, PC's Tom Smith and Mike O'Shea. In the 1973 tri-meet at Franklin Park, Smith placed second, Gillin third, O'Shea fourth and Thomas fifth. At the New England championships, O'Shea took first, Thomas third, Gillin fifth and Smith tenth. In the IC4A's, Thomas came back to finish ahead of O'Shea, capturing fifteenth. O'Shea placed eighteenth, while Gillin finished twentieth and Smith thirty-first.

Those four runners possess a great deal of talent, and it may be that the deciding factor will be pride. One can't predict what the order of finish will be this afternoon only because a very even matchup exists.

Providence will be featuring sophomore O'Shea, team captain Smith and a trio of freshmen runners. O'Shea set a New England course record in capturing individual honors at the New Englands last season, and Smith, the team's number one runner in 1973, is now the number five man for the Friars. Providence has plenty of backup strength in the form of Irishmen John Tracy, Jerry Redmon and the 1973 Massachusetts cross country champion, Stetson Arnold. Tracy placed third in the International Junior Cross Country championships and Redmon has some experience in international competition. Phil Campbell and Mike Byrne round out the top seven for Providence.

To put it mildly, Providence is a better team than the one that finished third in the New Englands last season. In fact, the Friars, who have had two meets in Franklin Park already this season, may be equal in strength to powerful Manhattan.

Harvard is not quite as strong this season. Jim Keefe has been running well for the Crimson, recording a 24:17 over the Franklin Park course. Aside from Bill Muller and Keefe, Harvard will be counting heavily on a trio of first year runners. Chris Bickerton, the New England Prep cross country champion at Andover last year, Gary Conroy, and Stein Rafto will have to run well if Harvard hopes to continue its supremacy over UMass. Conroy placed third in the Eastern Cross Country Championships while Rafto was the Hawaiian champion.

UMass failed to close the gap between its fourth and fifth runners last year, but hopefully John Scheer, Devin Croft or Tom Maguire can prevent the same from happening today. Maguire and Croft will be competing for the first time this season, after sitting out the BC meet.

Pennant races: Pirates, Cards, Orioles all win

AL

From the Wire Services

The Pennant races stayed cloudy as St. Louis, Pittsburgh and Baltimore all won.

Earl Williams and Bob Grich each hit home runs and drove in three runs apiece Monday night to help the Baltimore Orioles strengthen their tenuous hold on first place in the American League East with a 12-6 decision over the Detroit Tigers for their seventh straight victory.

Baltimore built a 9-2 lead after four innings then hung on through the mist and chill to increase their lead to a full game over the idle New York Yankees. Jim Palmer, 7-12, will try to clinch at least a tie for first place Tuesday afternoon against Joe Coleman, 14-12.

Williams' 14th home run of the season highlighted a five-run second inning and drove 16-game winner Mickey Lolich out of the game with his 21st defeat, the most losses for a Detroit Pitcher in 54 years.

Grich, whose 19th home run was in the sixth and made it 10-5, capped a three-run fourth inning with a one-run double.

Pinch-hitter Richie Zisk tripled home the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning Monday night, giving the Pittsburgh Pirates a 2-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs behind the three-hit pitching of Bruce Kison.

The win was the Pirates' ninth in their last 13 games and enabled them to remain in a tie for first place with St. Louis in the National League East. Each team has two games remaining in the regular season.

Cards, 5-1

Ted Simmons hit a three-run homer in the first inning and rookie Bob Forsch tossed a three-hitter Monday night to lead St. Louis to a 5-1 triumph over the Montreal Expos which enabled the Cardinals to remain tied with Pittsburgh for first place in the National League East.

The Cardinals jumped on starter Steve Rogers with one out in the first when Ted Sizemore singled and Reggie Smith walked. Simmons then followed with his 20th homer of the year and that was all Forsch needed to win his seventh game against four losses.

Ex-UMass star Whelan makes World Games

by WALT POWERS
Sports Staff

Former UMass gymnast Gene Whelan overcame major breaks in the compulsory exercises and went on to finish fourth in the American World-Game qualifying meet this past weekend at Austin Texas.

Whelan and his twin brother Jay, who finished sixth, both earned berths on the American World-Games team which will compete at Varna, Bulgaria, on October 20th-27.

Whelan, who won the Eastern League all-around championship and finished fourth in the NCAA last year, was beaten by two Olympians, Steve Hug, and John Crosby. Wayne Young of Brigham Young won the meet with a score of 108.7, followed by Hug, of Stanford, 107:7 and Crosby of Southern Connecticut, with 106.45.

Whelan, now a student at Penn State, tied with Jim Ivicek of Southern Illinois at 105.45, and Jay Whelan of Southern Connecticut was the final qualifier with 105.0.

Both Hug and Young had failed at earlier trials because of injury, but had gained special permission to compete in the finals. Another Olympian, Penn State's Marshall Avener, was not so lucky. An injury forced him out of the finals.

The World Games are held every four years between the Olympics, and are the equivalent of the world championships.

Mounted police patrol arrives

By CRAIG ROCHE
Staff Reporter

The UMass Mounted Patrol has made its appearance on campus. Patrolman Steve Warren and horse, Patrick, began patrolling the campus last week after completing a training period which included riding instruction and 150 hours of riding time under UMass riding instructor, Beth Donahue.

Staff Sergeant Donald Zidik of the Department of Public Safety detailed the purpose of the patrols. "You don't pat a cruiser, but you can pat a horse," Zidik said in citing the benefit in public relations the patrols will have.

The patrols will cover the areas on campus that are relatively inaccessible to the cruisers, like the residence and wooded areas. Zidik pointed out the crime deterrent factor in the patrolman's better view from the back of the horse, as well as the visibility of the patrolman and the mount to the students.

At this time, Patrolman Warren and Patrick, a Morgan horse, are the only patrol. Patrolman James Turati and another horse, a thoroughbred, will join them after the horse completes a blood test.

Zidik, Donahue, and the two patrolmen went to Rutgers, N.J. Thursday, Sept. 19, to observe the mounted patrols there on the University campus and to discuss the two schools' mounted patrol programs.

The proposal for the horse patrol was submitted last year by Officer Richard Guilmette, who has since left the UMass police force.

Fire destroys bedding in Coolidge tower

By BILL DENSMORE
and CHRIS DILLARD
Staff Reporters

A single-alarm fire, apparently caused by a faulty hot plate, yesterday destroyed a mattress and bedding in a tenth floor room of Coolidge dormitory and forced residents of adjacent floors to vacate.

The fire broke out at about 5:30 p.m. in room 1015, a single. Approximately 300 spectators watched four Amherst Fire Dept. engines and one ladder truck arrive.

Paula Bertolino, 22, the junior living in 1015, said her fire started when her hot plate short-circuited and her bedding caught fire. She said she left the room and shut the door. She then pulled a fire alarm and left the dorm.

An unidentified UMass policeman said the fire could have been due to a wiring malfunction or a faulty portable electric stove.

Fire Cheif John Doherty said he "presumed" that the fire was caused by an electrical malfunction, but he said a report would not be completed until today. He described the fire as an "easy one to put out."

He said nine UMass students who volunteer on the Amherst Fire Department manned two of the engine companies responding to the fire.

University regulations prohibit the use of hot plate in dormitory rooms.

Wood seeks gripes

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

University President Robert Wood is waiting for a "coherent, rational statement of concerns, frustrations, and grievances" from graduate students in the UMass community.

Featured as the guest speaker at Monday night's Graduate Student Senate (GSS) meeting, President Wood conversed with senators about the immediate and long term needs, concerns, and goals of UMass graduate students.

"I hold to the simple proposition that a university is distinguished from other institutions of higher learning by the single fact of its commitment to graduate studies," he said.

Wood addressed the Senate on the issues of the state of higher education in general and graduate education in particular. He discussed such "bread and butter" issues as grievance procedures and also related his sense of need for reform of graduate education.

He went on to characterize the two major changes that he feels have affected education today: 1) the fact that the quantitative projections in the '70's were greatly inflated, and 2) the fact that qualitative education has moved towards a conservative anti-intellectual level of development.

According to the University President, these quantitative changes, the actual growth of the university, and the current disenchantment with the notion of producing great thinkers have strongly affected graduate education more than anything else.

Wood revealed that the three most pressing demands received by his office are for increased admissions to the Medical School in Worcester, a strong demand for a Law Center at the Amherst campus, and a "simply overwhelming demand for a veterinary medicine program."

"I am glad to see that graduate students are finally beginning to have a sense of identity; I think it's one of the healthiest things I've seen in a long time."

Wood referred to a proposal about grievance procedures that was submitted to him by graduate students over the summer. Although he explained that the President's Council is still going over the procedures, he did state that he would accept this proposal as an interim document. He invited the designated representatives of the GSS to meet with his Council about this issue.

"I do believe that this process of your involvement in university affairs is long overdue."

In response to a senator's question, Wood explained the situation regarding graduate programs at UMass Boston (UMB). "Boston has had a moratorium on graduate programs for four years while waiting for the Amherst community to come to grips with its graduate priorities."

Citing a 7-8 year outstanding commitment to many UMB faculty members, the President said he didn't think the moratorium should exist beyond this year.

He made it clear that UMass Boston will not duplicate any of the Amherst graduate programs. The quality of programs that will be developed at UMB will be based on a series of selected and interdisciplinary fields that do not represent already established programs.

SGA head Savini advocates unionization

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

Rick Savini, president of the Student Government Association, says he supports student unionization but adds he "doesn't know what it will look like in the end."

Last Spring, the Student Senate allocated $45,000 to the Student Organizing Project (SPO). The money is being used in part to organize a student union on campus.

Savini says the SGA cannot "selectively 'go against' the University administration because it is under its strings".

But the union would be outside of the system and would have fewer hurdles to cross. The union would have more autonomy but there is no guarantee that it won't become a power structure. Hopefully, it will maintain neutrality in politics."

Nesta King, an SOP organizer, said she would like to see students approach the union plan idealistically. "Students that start out with a pessimistic attitude don't accomplish much," she warns. I think most students will support it."

King believes most students will support the unionization plan.

As to the possibility of such unions as the teamsters getting involved in the student's union, Savini says the "legitimate purpose" of the union would then be lost.

He forsees possible problems in the organization of a union and said it's up to the students to look at those problems. "The students shouldn't make the decision of organizing and accepting a union in vacuum."

King, however said, "We can't start out seeing that far down the road. What I now say as a staff organizer may differ from what the union members will decide as to what will happen with the union."

"The union," she said, "is based on the premise that there exists a contract between the students and the administration whereby the students agree to do certain things and the University agrees to do certain things. The students have no bargaining power as to what that contract will be. The union run by students will determine what students want at the bargaining table."

King says the union would be a legal one. Kind said the student is a worker. They participate in classes learning the skills that will help them later and they perform tasks for credit and credentials.

Doug Phelps, another staff organizer says it's "totally legal" and anyone can negotiate a contract." Without the union as a bargaining agent, the University can breech the contract. There is no way to predict how the University Administration will accept the idea of a student union."

King said that membership in the union would be a voluntary one. The members would receive direct benefits from the credit union and cooperatives, such as liquor and records, that the SOP is presently planning to organize. "If the majority of students designate the union to be a barganing unit, the benefits gained by the contract will be applicable to all students."

King says there could be union dues, but "hopefully the cooperatives will pay for the union."

She suggests the possibility of a checkoff on the student's bill to support the union, and the possibility of fund raising events such as concerts. But, she says, there are no concrete plans now.

The credit union, controlled by its members, will be a resource of loans to students and to the cooperatives, organizers say. King does not see the credit union running out of money because "it can only lend a percentage of its assets."

Outreach adds practical work experience to 'book learning'

Students interested in Outreach internships should attend a meeting in room 101 of the Campus Center at 7:30 tonight.

Since its origin two years ago, the Outreach program has been "integrating practical experience with llarning at the university", and has increased enormously in enrollment.

The Outreach program itself began humbly in the Fall of 1972, when an interested student and director Bill Burke got together to try and formulate some way of correlating practical experience with classroom learning.

Pat McDonough, one of 18 part-time staff members, says letters were sent to all political science people telling them about the program. "Since the beginning, when we had 11 internships, the rate of growth has been phenomenal," he says.

During the following Spring semester, enrollment swelled to 44, and has increased ever since. This semester, there are about 175 internships, and next semester there will be approximately 200. Since its birth, the Outreach program has granted 606 internships.

Outreach consists of two subdivisions; the Student Internship Program (SIP), and the Student Volunteer Service (SVS). The SIP consists of working at an agency 40 hours a week, often going off campus. For example, this semester there are about 30 students in Washington, D.C., and another 12 in the New York area. There are also students in Chicago, and California.

Once granted an internship, the student recieves certain housing waivers from the university, and about $100.00 in fee reductions. However, the student must pay for any expenses incurred while traveling, housing, etc.

To alleviate some of this expense, Outreach has recently purchased two houses in which students may lease apartments. One of these houses is located in Washington, while the other is in New York. The cost of renting one of these apartments generally runs about $325.00 monthly.

At the end of the internship, the student must write a four page evaluation of his experiences. Also, the supervisor must write an evaluation of the student. This is how the student recieves academic credit (up to 15 credits). The Outreach office itself does not grant credit. Rather, a faculty member who has sponsored the student throughout his-her internship may issue credits.

Less than 1 per cent of students get paid during their internship. McDonough explained this is so because most agencies aren't willing ro don't have the resources available to pay students. She stressed, however, that money should not be a major factor in determining whether or not a student accepts an internship.

The other part of Outreach, SVS, consists of working as a volunteer 5 to 20 hours a week usually in the Amherst-Northampton are.

"We like to place these people in non-racist, non-sexist, non-profit agencies," McDonough explained. "The volunteer work they do should correlate with classes they're taking during the semester."

Among the major things Burke would like to do in the future is to "institutionalize" the program.

"We would like to see the individual university departments take over the agencies. For example, the Biology department might take over responsibility of the students working at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute. In that way, we wold have more room to grant new internships," he said.

UMass engineer feels garbage can be energy

By LYNNE DOLINSKI
Staff Reporter

Can garbage be converted to energy?

UMass chemical engineer W.L. Short thinks so and this will be the subject of his Oct. 19 speech in Windsor, Conn. at a half-day symposium titled "The Energy Dilemma, the Chemist's Challenge."

Scientists have discovered that garbage can be converted to methane, an organic gas with the molecular formula CH4.

Short says the process begins when garbage is sorted into what is called "feed stock." This, he says, includes all paper-type materials.

After metal and glass are separated, the garbage becomes a stream of cellulose material which is "digested" in a scientific process in which there is no oxygen present. The end result is that the original garbarge converts to methane.

Dr. Short says this process is being used commercially by the Taiwanese for digesting farm waste but it's not being used commercially in this country.

What is currently done here on a commercial scale is that waste is being used as a fuel material in water plants. They process and treat it as a supplement along with oil and coal. Another commercial process is incineration. It obviously generates heat but nothing is recovered from it, he quips.

A company called Dynatek is planning to build a demonstration plant which will probably handle one to ten thousand tons of garbage daily. One thousand tons is somewhere near the daily amount of garbage in the Greater Springfield area.

However if all the garbage is converted to methane, this could supply roughly 7 percent of the country's energy needs. It's a fair hunk, but it won't solve the problem that solid waste is posing; about half of the material left, such as sand and gravel can't be converted to methane, Dr. Short said. These things are "inert" which means it is an extra land filler material. There is also the problem of citing an industry plant somewhere to do this, he said.

Viable alternatives scarce to present parking system

By B.J. ROCHE
Staff Reporter

Although the parking system has come under fire from a variety of interests, ranging from staff to the Student Senate, viable alternatives seem to be scarce.

Complaints from the student body prompted the Student Senate to look into the feasability of a student run towing operation. This would have provided students with many advantages, while maintaining some type of system.

Under the proposal, cars would have been stored in the C.C. Garage, rather than the 2 mile distance to No. Amherst. Students would have been able to pay by check, and the fee would not have been as high as Amherst Towing. In addition, jobs would have been provided to students in the line of parking lot attendants and tow truck drivers.

The use of state plates had been cleared by the state, as the towing would have been conducted on UMass property. All would have gone well, the Student Senate could have taken over when Amherst Towing's contract expired in December, had it not been for the lack of funds. Salaries, upkeep, and insurance, in addition to the initial investment in at least two trucks all contributed to the overwhelming costs of the system.

It was also determined that the main towing problems would not be alleviated. Rick Savini, then Chairman of the Rents and Fees committee explained, "Nobody likes towing no matter who's doing it. It would also be a matter of on campus students, who may not own cars, subsidizing off campus students. The Student Senate rationale for a service is that it should pay for itself, but this does not seem to be possible with a towing system."

Another alternative to towing is simply not to own a car. This may be feasible action for an on campus student, but for the off campus student, it is not always so easy. Bicycles, hitching, and walking provide other means of transportation, as do buses, but the first three can be cold in winter, and buses serve a somewhat limited range, both geographicaaly and schedule-wise. UMass buses service the immediate campus area, but the route 9 "Burger Boulevard" district is serviced by the Western Mass Busline, which maintains a protected line. This means that UMass buses could not service the line. It is, however, possible for a bus to go from the UMass campus to a predetermined destination, without stops. This has been done in the past with the "Little Mac" which was provided by McDonald's.

The towing provides headaches, the money provides scholarships. For better or for worse, unless a better system is designed, the parking system appears to be here to stay. Any ideas?

New director of Newman Center uncertain about future plans

By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

The new director of the Newman Center, the Roman Catholic ministry on campus, is so new at the job that he's still not sure about plans for the future.

But Fr. Joseph F. O'Neil, former editor of The Catholic Observer in Springfield, still took time from his new duties yesterday to tell The Collegian what some of his plans are.

"The first matter of priority is the promotion of understanding and spirit of cooperation and sharing of responsibility among menbers of the staff," Fr. O'Neil said.

He said this fall is the first time the Newman Center, on North Pleasant St., has had three full-time Chaplains.

Fr. O'Neil was appointed last Saturday by Bishop Christopher J. Weldon, of the Springfield diocese. O'Neil fills the post of Monsignor David J. Power, long-time director of the Center who died suddenly July 31.

Fr. O'Neil stressed communication with members of the Newman Club and the lay employees at the Center, who he described as "dedicated and competent."

The Newman Club is a Christian organization which examines the religious, social and intellectual needs of the UMass community, according to Fr. J. Joseph Quigley, another staff member at the Center.

Membership is open to non-Catholics.

"The center exists to serve the students," O'Neil said, "Any programs that evolve in coming months are going to be dictated by what is in the best interests of the students," he added.

The Newman Center is 11 years old. It was built at a cost of $1.5 million in 1963 by the Springfield Diocese.

The building, located at the south end of campus near the School of Business Administration, has a cafeteria, game rooms, lounges, study areas, a student office, a library and a chapel. It is open seven days a week from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. to anyone, according to O'Neil.

The concept of the Newman Center is a world-wide one. Such centers exist nearby college campuses all over the coutnry although they are owned and operated by the Roman Catholic Church.

The center's take their name from John Henry Newman, a nineteenth-century Englishman and converted Catholic. He was Chaplain at Oxford University in England.

Collegian adviser offers news writing seminar

Chris Kertesz, editorial adviser to the Collegian this fall, will hold a news writing seminar tomorrow night at 7 at the Collegian offices in the Student Union.

The seminar is billed as a repeat of last week's session on the basic news story but can be adapted according to the needs and desires of those who turn out.

Kertesz is bureau editor at the Daily Hampshire Gazette, a daily in Northampton. Future seminars will deal with feature stories, news features and other aspects of news and editorial writing.

Registration tables open

The Student Registration Committee reminds all UMass students that they may register to vote in the November 5th election today in the concourse of the Campus Center from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

On Thursday a registration table will be set up from 10 to 5 in Hampshire Dining Commons in Southwest.

Weight Watchers use "friendly persuasion"

By HUGH OWEN
Staff Reporter

The brochure the Weight Watchers organization is circulating in celebration of its tenth anniversary calls it the "friendly persuasion of a Weight Watchers meeting."

One woman at the predominantly female meeting said it is the knowledge that you have to face a scale before the meeting and then detail before the members at the weekly meeting how much weight you did or didn't lose. Whatever it is, most of the members at last night's meeting said they have been successful with the Weight Watchers program.

The Weight Watchers program here at UMass, a franchise of the worldwide Weight Watchers, Inc., held an open house last night at 7 p.m. in Room 165 of the Campus Center, in an attempt to inform people what Weight Watchers, Inc., is.

According to Jean Watson, head of the UMass program, there are "19 million overweight people in the world who don't know what does on in Weight Watchers."

This, she explained, is one of the reasons for the open house Weight Watchers is holding during October.

Anyone interested in losing weight is invited to attend an open meeting of Weight Watchers this month.

The only criteria for membership is that you have ten pounds extra weight to lose and you pay a six dollar membership fee and subsequent two dollars and fifty cents weekly dues.

"We are re-educating our members about their eating habits," said Watson.

To facilitate this re-education process, Weight Watchers offers a three step program — the basic plan, the levelling plan, and the maintenance plan.

There are also Weight Watchers programs in Northampton and at the Howard Johnson's in Hadley.

Streaking returns to campus

By PAUL CONNELLY
Staff Correspondent

"Streaking" is alive and well and living in John Adams.

Primed with Demon Rum and invigorated by a water fight, a dozen JA's issued the call, recently, for all able-bodied Umies on the floor to join the ranks of the streak.

Eight streakers staggered to attention, torches in hand, ready to brave 50-degree temperatures and an apathetic campus.

Once outside the dorm, the UM-eight dropped their drawers, lit their torches, and sprinted through the parking lot, around John Quincy Adams to the pyramids in front of Washington and back to John Adams.

The 10:30 p.m. dash lasted 15 minutes. It was the first streak of the season.

Graphics course continues today

On Wednesday evening, October 2, at 7:30 in the MDC office, Chuck Kidd, advisor to the Collegian, will hold the second in a series of seminars on newspaper graphics and photography. Everyone is invited to attend.

Ford threatens veto

Senate cuts all U.S. military aid to Turkey

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The Senate yesterday ignored a threatened presidential veto and passed legislation to cut off all U.S. military aid to Turkey because of that nation's use of American arms in Cyprus.

Before the final vote, the Senate voted 59 to 29 to defeat a motion by Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott to send the funding resolution back to committee with instructions to delete the aid cutoff amendment which was added on the floor Monday.

Earlier in the day, President Ford warned he would veto the entire measure if the aid ban amendment sponsored by Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., were not removed. Ford said the ban would "destroy any hope" for U.S. success in settling the Cyprus dispute.

Shortly after Ford issued his veto threat, the Senate also voted 47 to 41 to ban further U.S. military assistance to Chile.

Arguing for his amendment, Eagleton said that Turkey had used U.S. arms in its base in Cyprus and thereby had violated U.S. laws governing their use.

The entire measure passed 72-16 and must now go into conference with the House, whose version contains a mild provision which only suspends aid to Turkey until Ford certifies that "substantial progress" is being made toward a solution to the Cyprus conflict between Turkey and Greece.

During a heated debate, Scott read from a State Department legal brief which said the Eagleton amendment "could result in a suspension of arms to Israel."

The provision bans arms aid to "any country" which uses American arms in violation of the law restricting their use.

Sirica predicts lengthy trials, as selection of jurors begins

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Watergate cover-up case went to trial yesterday with the judge predicting it will be months before the jury renders its verdict upon three men who once sat with Richard M. Nixon at the government's high command.

"Every effort will be made to conclude the trial before the holiday season, but this cannot be guaranteed," U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica said as he began the painstaking process of selecting a jury from more than 600 panelists.

Before him were three men once counted among the most powerful in government, now joined as defendants in a criminal conspiracy case: John N. Mitchell, Richard Nixon's law-and-order attorney general; H.R. Haldeman, who ran the executive branch as chief of staff; and John D. Erhlichman. who wielded presidential influence over the nation's domestic programs. Along with co-defendents Robert C. Mardian and Kenneth W. Parkinson, they are accused of plotting to hide responsibility for the Watergate break-in through "deceit, craft, trickery and dishonest means."

In addition, all but Mardian are accused of obstructing justice and Mitchell, Haldeman and Ehrlichman face multiple charges of lying to investigators about Watergate.

Second clash in less than a week

Israelis kill two terrorists in Lebanon

By United Press International

Israel said its troops killed two Arab terrorists yesterday in the second clash in less than a week at the mountainous eastern end of the Lebanese frontier. The Tel Aviv military command also disclosed that a guerrilla infiltrator from Jordan was tracked down and killed Monday.

Reports from Beirut said a 17-year-old Lebanese youth was seriously wounded when Israeli artillery shelled the border village of Mazrat al Bustan. An Israeli military sources said several shells were fired into the village, about a mile inside southern Lebanon, in a routine preventive measure designed to disperse guerrilla concentrations and to turn Lebanese villagers against the guerrillas.

In Cairo, informed sources said Palestinian leaders will actively consider the formation of a government-in-exile if they win a "favorable" resolution from the U.N. General Assembly.

The sources said this was the understanding reached at the meeting in Cairo last month of the foreign ministers of Egypt and Syria and representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organization, parent body of major guerrilla groups.

At the request of the Arab countries, the Palestine question has been included on the agenda of the U.N. Assembly and is expected to be debated next month.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmi, in a policy speech to the assembly meeting in New York, said Egypt is ready to resume Middle East peace talks at Geneva with two objectives: liberation of Israeli-occupied Arab territory and recognition of Palestinian rights.

Reporting on the clash Tuesday, the Tel Aviv command said an Israeli force "on routine activity in the vicinity of the Lebanese frontier came across two terrorists and in the exchange of fire two were killed." It said there were no Israeli casualties.

A predawn patrol spotted the guerrillas, armed with Soviet-made automatic rifles, in the Mount Dov region of Lebanon, a military source said. An Israeli officer and a guerrilla were killed in a clash in the same region Saturday.

Nader forms new alliance to fight economic crime

WARREN, Vt (AP) - Consumer advocate Ralph Nader and two representatives of the National District Attorneys Association yesterday heralded a new alliance between public action groups and local prosecutors to fight economic crime.

Nader called the alliance "a uniquely pioneering effort to develop a grassroots effort" to combat crimes ranging from monopolistic practices by large corporations to political kickbacks. He said the crimes involve billions of dollars and effect the entire economy.

"It will be a real red letter day if we're successful in doing that," said Prosecutor Robert Leonard of Flint, Mich.

Chittenden County State's Atty. Patrick Leahy of Burlington, Vt., said, "We have areas of joint concern and can be effective working together."

Leonard and Leahy are co-chairmen of the association's economic crime committee which is holding a three-day conference in Warren.

The new alliance will match the legal expertise of local prosecutors and the research capabilities of public interest groups promoted by Nader to tackle consumer problems.

Nader said his public groups have developed stacks of information on economic abuses, but have not found a place to take it. "The information has to have a cutting edge, and the cutting edge is the district attorneys," he said.

Leahy, the Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate, said. "We better do it because nobody else is."

The three said local prosecutors and public groups will decide the economic crimes to fight in their areas, The expertise developed in one county then can be used by prosecutors around the country.

Nader faulted the U.S. Justice Department for not taking an active role in prosecuting white collar crime, which he said is part of the "rotting and crumbling of our society."

By joining with local prosecutors, Nader said, "I'm not giving up on the Justice Department. But you have to build a fire under it."

Thieu criticizes U.S. for reneging on aid

SAIGON, South Vietnam (AP) - President Nguyen Van Thieu charged last night that the United States reneged because of "internal problems" on promises of increased aid for South Vietnam.

In a gesticulating, two-hour broadcast and televised speech, Thieu also rejected charges of corruption against him and his family and made clear that he plans to run next year for a third term. But he offered to resign if he loses the trust of the South Vietnamese people and armed forces, indicating that only he can determine if they lose faith.

Thieu said the U.S. government promised him 20 months ago when he accepted the Paris agreement that ended American involvement in Vietnam that it would react strongly if the other side violated the cease-fire and North Vietnamese troops infiltrated into the south.

"But now there is no such reaction because of their internal problems," he said. "If the aid does not stay at its old level, with the prospect of a general offensive, the situation will become very critical. If military and economic aid is not satisfied, I think the U.S. Congress, attitude would only encourage the Communists to invade South Vietnam."

Thieu said some members of the U.S.Congressand other Americans want him to bring Communists into the government but vowed that the South Vietnamese "will fight to the last drop of blood" rather than do so.

Auto official eyes tradeoff between inflation and devices

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) - A leading automobile industry executive called yesterday for a five-year moratorium on new auto safety and emission standards as an inflation-fighting measure.

"Stopping inflation should be our first priority," said Lee A. Iacocca, president of the Ford Motor Co., in an address to the 15th annual conference of United Press International Editors and Publishers. "We in the auto business could best contribute to the battle against inflation if we are given some relief from other demands on us."

Iacocca said standards now set to go into effect with 1976, 1977 and 1978 models would add about $750 per car or $8 million a year, and would increase materials requirements for industry by about 2 million tons a year.

A moratorium on new safety, antipollution and damage impact requirements "would help us get inflation in check more quickly by slowing price increases, reducing excessive demand, for materials and energy, and releasing some of the capital needed to expand capacity and improve productivity," he said.

"We could put several thousand of our engineers to work figuring out ways to improve fuel economy and reduce the materials content of our vehicles. With a long-term achievable oxides-of-nitrogen standard, we could afford to schedule production of our version of the programmed combustion engine that is cleaner than the present internal combustion engine, and at the same time promises to deliver 25 per cent more fuel economy."
25 per cent more fuel economy."

Iacocca told the more than 400 Edicon delegates that a moratorium would not downgrade safety and environmental factors.

"They are very important, and I'm not talking about a rollback," he said. "Actually we have made great progress in those areas and would see further improvement even if we did no more than maintain current standards."

Iacocca was one of three speakers in a panel discussion on "The Economic Outlook for 1975" at the opening session of the three-day conference.

3-year-old is unable to touch human hand

HOUSTON [UPI] — For David, a 3-year-old who has never felt the touch of a human hand, the world is a sterile plastic bubble isolating him from ordinary germs that could take his life.

An inherited defect robbed David's body of its ability to produce immunity against the billions of germs in the environment. A common cold could kill him.

He was placed in the isolator within a half-minute after his birth and has remained there since, learning to sit, stand, and coordinate use of his hands while a team of Baylor College of Medicine scientists watched.

"He is a superbly healthy, happy and headstrong little boy who is doing very well," said Dr. Raphael Wilson, professor of pediatrics and the child's godfather.

David's adaptability is forcing doctors to revise ideas about what is necessary for normal personality development. Doctors once thought human touch and the chance to cling to parents were vital to personality development.

"Now we know that this is not true," Dr. David A. Freedman, a psychiatrist, said. "He demonstrates — at least for now — that perhaps body touch and odors and other sensory experiences may not be all that relevant after all."

David gets to visit his parents in a special traveling container at times and in the hospital he has three connecting units, including a toy-filled playroom. The hospital has withheld the identity of the family which lives in Houston.

Wilson said efforts are underway to find a way to repair or to cure the combined immune deficiency disease. As for the future, Wilson said David can keep growing and learning under the present protected system.

Australian P.M. to meet Ford

CANBERRA, Australia [AP] — Australian Prime Minister Gough Whitlam, unwelcome at the White House during the presidency of Richard Nixon, meets President Ford in Washington Friday. Many Australians hope the get-together will end two years of cool relations between Australia and the United States.

Whitlam set the tone for the meeting in a speech Monday to the United Nations General Assembly, saying: "Australia is, of course, allied by treaty with the United States and we make no apologies for it."

Panel OK's Ford offer

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A House judiciary subcommittee, surprised by President Ford's offer to appear before it, offered him yesterday a choice of three days next week to testify on why he pardoned Richard M. Nixon.

Chairman William L. Hungate, D-Mo., told reporters the questioning of Ford would be confined to the pardon, and the White House indicated Ford intended to limit his testimony to that issue.

Ford gives pay hike

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday reluctantly ordered an immediate 5.52 per cent pay raise for 3.5 million federal government workers and military personnel.

Ford had sought to postpone the increase until Jan. 1 on grounds it would contribute to inflation, but the Senate refused to give its approval.

The 5.52 per cent pay hike had been recommended by the Office of Management and Budget and the Civil Service Commission to bring federal salaries into line with those for workers in non-government jobs.

Nixon improves

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] — The blood clot in former President Nixon's right lung has grown smaller and there is no evidence of any new clots, his doctor said yesterday.

The favorable bill of health from Dr. John Lungren followed his earlier statement that there was a good chance for Nixon's release from Long Beach Memorial Hospital by the end of the week.

Lungren also had said that the former President may be well enough to give a written deposition in the Watergate coverup trial, which began in Washington yesterday, in two or three weeks.

Cuba ties doubted

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Two senators just returned from a visit with Fidel Castro said yesterday normal relations with Cuba are a long way off but that both nations could take some small steps in that direction.

Sens. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., and Claiborne Pell D-R.I., returned Monday from a weekend in Havana, where they conferred for three hours with the Communist premier.

They said the time has come to try to restore the diplomatic relations that were severed in 1961, but Javits told a news conference:

"Major steps are a long way off ... We have made it clear to them this is a two-way street."

Javits said the remaining major obstacles to restoration of relations were compensation for seized American properties, continued export of revolution by Cuba throughout the Western Hemisphere, humanitarian treatment of prisoners and unification of broken families.

Bill to create 200 mile fishing zone pushed

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Legislation to establish a 200 mile fishing jurisdiction off U.S. shores has been referred to the Senate Armed Services Committee in an effort to save the bill.

Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, D Wash., chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee and sponsor of the legislation, decided on the course of action after top Ford administration officials indicated opposition to the bill.

President Ford indicated his personal opposition to the legislation in a four paragraph letter to Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield, Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott, and House GOP Leader John Rhodes.

Calling attention to his "strong opposition" to the bill, Ford said that passage could destroy efforts to work out an international agreement to protect U.S. fishing stocks from depletion by foreign fisherman.

"While I fully understand the problems in protection of living resources off the United States coast which have led to the consideration of this legislation," Ford said, "passage could seriously harm U.S. oceans and foreign relations interests, including our fishery interests, and could paradoxically destroy the best opportunity we have had to definitively resolve our fisheries problems; that is by a comprehensive new oceans law treaty now being negotiated within the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea."

The legislation, which is expected to be the subject of hearings by the Armed Services Committee, must be reported out by Nov. 14 for consideration on the Senate floor, a spokesman for the Senate oceans and atmosphere subcommittee said.

James P. Walsh, staff counsel with the subcommittee, said Magnuson decided on the course of action because early efforts to win passage of the bill were "going badly."

Walsh described the efforts against the measure as "the strongest effort yet to kill the bill" and said a delay in its consideration on the Senate floor would allow more time to "muster support."

A United Nations Law of the Sea Conference failed earlier this year to resolve the problem of foreign fishermen depleting stocks of fish near U.S. shores, and supporters of the Magnuson bill feel passage is necessary to protect American fishermen until some international accord is reached.

EPA plan to limit student parking hit

BOSTON [AP] — The president of Northeastern University said yesterday that a federally imposed cutback on college parking lots could mean economic disaster for some schools in the Boston area.

The Environmental Protection Agency said Monday that it would require schools to reduce their parking 25 per cent by May, 1975 to cut down air pollution.

"This new EPA proposal may well result in a reduction in overall enrollment," siad Asa Knowles, president of Northeastern.

"During these times, when all private colleges and universities are finding it difficult to make ends meet, it could therefore spell economic hardship and perhaps disaster for some private colleges and universities in this area," he said.

Northeastern, which has a high percentage of students who commute, provides 2,500 parking spaces.

In its announcement, the EPA said that business would be exempted from the cutback rule if, after a good faith effort, they are unable to comply with it.

Paul Keough, an EPA spokesman, said the agency hoped any increase in air pollution caused by easing restrictions on businesses will be made up by extending the rule to students.

Patriots players visit Hub schools

BOSTON [AP] — Four stars of the New England Patriots football team - two blacks and two whites - visited two of Boston's racially troubled high schools yesterday to preach non-violence.

Schools throughout the city were reported quiet yesterday after opening 14 days ago under a court-ordered busing program.

Middle guard Ray Hamilton, running back Sam Cunningham, wide receiver Randy Vataha and offensive guard John Hannah spent the day touring Roslindale and Hyde Park High Schools and talking to students.

Vataha said, "I think our message will be one of non-violence. After all, our team is a little community, and we have a great feeling for one another. We're showing with our team this year that we all work together, play together and succeed together."

Academic funding presents political problems

By VICTOR MANUEL GOMEZ

The availability and nature of the funding sources for academic programs presents many ethical, political and academic problems. A state monopoly on funding sources creates a direct dependence of the nature, scope and content of the academic programs on the political needs of that ruling elite which allocates and controls the funds. Throughout the 60's Defense Department contracts and grants caused the research and academic programs of many U.S. Universities to depend on the Pentagon and State Department needs related to the Viet Nam war. After the success of the Cuban revolution in 1959, the Latin American Studies Departments mushroomed at U.S. Universities, most of these were financed by State Department funds and other closely affiliated private organizations such as the Council for Foreign Relations, and the institute for International Education. The academic content, research areas and priorities, characteristics of faculty....etc., were determined not by the search for academic excellence and objectivity, nor by the desire to contribute to the better understanding of Latin America, but by the specific political needs of the State Department and the C.I.A.

The U.S. Universities' complicity and dependence on these two latter agencies has been very well documented - among others - by I. L. Horowitz in his study of the famous "Camelot" project in Latin America. During the late 60's the students at Michigan State University discovered that their University was being used by the C.I.A., and the Agency for International Development (A.I.D.), for intelligence, counterinsurgency and cover-up operations in Southeast Asia. When Mr. Hannah, the President of that University resigned he became the Director of A.I.D.

Many other examples of this relationship of complicity and dependence abound. Right on campus we have a very clear and blatant example. The Center for International Education, of the School of Education, is almost wholly financed by the State Department through its Agency for International Development. This Center; that could be more adequately called the "Center for the Americanization of Education in developing countries"; has recently received a $750,000 grant and in the past three years has received other A.I.D. contracts. The total of these grants and contracts amounts over $1 million. However, the School of Education only pays the salaries of three (3) faculty members and provides funds for 3 or 4 teaching assistantships. In other words, it would not be exaggerating to estimate that over 80 per cent of all the Resources of this Center come from one single funding source: the State Department!

Moreover, these grants and contracts are not generous gifts. The purpose of the State Department - through A.I.D. - is to expand and improve the capabilities of U.S. Universities to work in developing countries, as partners of A.I.D. In this particular case, the Center for International Education is funded so that it can train the future A.I.D. consultants and advisors in educational development; but not for this country but for the so-called 'developing' countries; to provide in-service training for A.I.D. officers, to work with "key" nationals (and in the process co-opt them and use them...), and to carry on important research and development of educational strategies, techniques, and mainly a U.S. designed educational philosophy.

As a matter of fact, the nature and objectives of A.I.D. can only be considered in relation to its political role as a tool of this Government's foreign policy. In his 1969 Message to the Congress on Foreign Aid, expresident Nixon clearly described the objectives and mandate of A.I.D.; "...but progress has been greatest where governments have encouraged private enterprise, released bureaucratic controls, stimulated competition, and allowed maximum opportunity for individual initiative. A.I.D.'s mandate will be directed to this end." (emphasis added.) This is just a broad but clear statement of the political aims of this country's foreign aid policy. More specifically, these objectives are the following:

1-To expand the market opportunities abroad for U.S. private investors through A.I.D.'s Overseas Private Investment Corporation.

2-To guaranty and insure their investment through A.I.D.'s "Risk Investment Guaranty Program".

3-To protect and improve the U.S. balance of payment through tied-loans that require that at least 90 per cent of that money be spent purchasing goods and services in the U.S. (Foreign Aid thus provides windfall profits for the big U.S. companies, multinational corporations, and create ever-increasing ties of economic, political, and technological dependence).

4-To provide security for U.S. interests, i.e.; private investments and military needs. This objective is achieved through military aid, military loans, reallocation of military surplus, A.I.D.'s security assistance and public safety programs. An analysis of A.I.D.'s security assistance program over a number of years shows clearly how this "aid" is utilized to bolster and support repressive regimes (Brazil, Viet Nam, Laos, So. Korea...), to finance counter insurgence and intelligence - and also torture - training for police forces, to finance Viet Nam's jails, to conduct "pacification and resettlement" programs in South East Asia,....etc.

5-To influence fiscal, monetary and educational policies of the "developing countries"; through the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, A.I.D.'s Educational Advisory Missions, and others; so that the competitive advantage of the U.S. in the international market place be maintained, and the right type of manpower educated and trained with the right type, i.e.; U.S. designed and directed; educational policies.

Many other specific objectives and operations of A.I.D. could be described in detail. But in this article the important issue raised is; what is the dependence of the Center for Educational Education on A.I.D.'s funds ?, what is this Center's-and by extension- the University's - complicity with U.S. foreign policy?

From an academic perspective, what are the implications on the nature, content and scope of course offerings? What types of students are accepted to the Center? What are the ideological and political biases - determined by A.I.D. - that will determine, in turn, the characteristics of the new faculty presently being hired? What areas of study and research are being neglected due to the characteristics of the funding source? Could there be academic independence, objectivity, freedom of expression and dissent when over 80 per cent of the funds come from one single source, and a very political one indeed.?

Is the anti-intellectual atmosphere, redbaiting practices of the Center's Director, repression of dissent...presently occurring at the Center just the beginning of more far-reaching attitudes and practices? Why are there not faculty and students from different disciplines and points of view involved in policy-making, evaluation...etc. in a project that by its very nature should be multidisciplinary? What is exactly doing at the Center an A.I.D. officer (now on leave of absence from Laos), when A.I.D.'s operations in Laos have primarily been; cover-up for Army and C.I.A. operations, police training, financing jails for political prisoners, and other similar endeavors of the so-called "Political support" program? Isn't this a blatant example of University complicity? I urge this University community; the Chancellor, the Provosts, the University Research Council, the Graduate Student Senate, and individual students, to take a closer look at the operations of the Center for International Education. There are just too many questions unanswered...too many ethical and academic freedom issues at stake!

Run for S.G.A.

To the Editor:

Where are you, Nick Apostola? Now there is a hard act to follow. Our ex-Commander-in-Chief made student government a joke when he came riding into the last SGA Presidential elections on a bicycle and looking like that guy in Mad magazine. What's his name again? Who cares, though. I mean, who really gives a rats ass! Isn't that what everyone says about student government. Not everyone, just almost everyone, after receiving only seventeen nomination papers last Monday for over 110 senate seats. Cold fear hit all concerned SGA members because the apathy was so much more widespread than ever before. Well, we are trying to put the pieces together again by resetting the closing date for nomination papers: October 9, 1974 at 5:00 p.m. They can be returned to 420 Student Union. The elections will be held on October 16 and 17 in all the concerned residential areas, the Colonial Lounge for Commuters, and the New Africa House for the Third World constituency [further information available in the Student Senate Office].

What's it like to be a senator? Well, it's getting to know yourself as someone who has taken on the responsibility of representing 250 people. At a school the size of UMass, all are just numbers and can be forgotten unless there is someone out front to fight for students' rights. This is the role of the student senator: half gladiator, half statesman, all person! Now, for all you who need a bribe to become involved: academic credit can be arranged through the Senate Academic Affairs committee.

There are also fifteen Third World seats which need to be filled. We're looking for minority input and participation. Registration for the Third World district will take place in New Africa House. Nomination papers are available in the Senate Office.

Let's not hear any more of this "I don't want to get involved," stuff. The opportunity is now to become recognized as the force to deal with the administration. Join us, won't you.

Yes, we are responsible!

Justice at Wounded Knee

To the Editor:

I responded to your recent editorial with cries of joyous, wholehearted affirmation. The fact that a double standard of justice does exist in America is clearly brought to light when one juxtaposes Watergate with the Wounded Knee '73 trial. One finds that a corrupt, power-hungry man, Richard Nixon, can effortlessly secure a political white-washing while an honorable man of strength and conviction, Russell Means, must fight for eight months to clear himself of the slanderous charges of the United States government.

Your editorial brought out in detail the cold, hard facts of life that daily confront the Oglala Sioux, Russell Means' people, on the Pine Ridge Reservation. I was shocked into awareness of these facts - the poverty, alcoholism, poor nutrition, unemployment, boredom and frustration - by living under their burden this past summer on Pine Ridge. I travelled the same dry, dusty, desolate roads, ate the same government commodity food, and lived in the same poorly constructed BIA housing as the Sioux Indian people. I grew to share the feelings of frustration and powerlessness of the Indian family with whom I lived.

Then 1973 Wounded Knee takeover by Russell Means, Dennis Banks, and other AIM members was a demand for the Oglala Sioux peoples' rights as human beings. Their inability to be recognized by the U.S. government and by their own tribal government forced the Sioux to utilize an extreme move, a real chlincher, to gain attention. The Wounded Knee takeover was an action that allowed the Oglala Sioux to break free from the shackles and gags with which the United States government and Dick Wilson's tribal government had confined them for many years. mr. Pete Plenty Wounds, an AIM member, told me this summer that he'd felt free, he'd felt like a man for the first time during AIM's stand at Wounded Knee in 1973.

Russell Means, a man who could no longer bear to see his people weakened, powerless, abused, sapped of life, the man who led the Wounded Knee takeover, as rightfully freed from the burden of the government's malicious claims...claims that once again illustrate the U.S. governement's inability to even TRY to uunderstand the Indian people.

It gives me hope that someone in the East, so removed from Pine Ridge, so accurately elucidated the facts surrounding the Wounded Knee trial.

Kosofsky tasteless

To the Editor:

I must protest the classless attack of Joyce Kosofsky on the Kennedy family.

Perhaps Ms. Kosofsky thinks herself to be witty by disguising her hostility in satire. I find no humor in the tragedy that the Kennedy family has been forced to endure.

If she wishes to comment on Edward Kennedy's political views, she should do so openly. The aspects I find most unprofessional are the allusions to the Senator's wife and son. Joan Kennedy has had a history of emotional problems; Ted Jr. has had an unfortunate bout with cancer, causing him to lose his leg while only twelve years old.

Finally, there is no need, Ms. Kosofsky, to drag up Chappaquidick. That is muck-racking, the very kind of dirty politics you abhor.

If the Collegian wishes to uphold its standards, it should not allow such irresponsible garbage that Ms. Kosofsky passes off as commentary to be published.

Spying on the CIA

It would appear, at least from the media preoccupation with the subject, that the United States has finally discovered the Central Intelligence Agency. Until now, the CIA has always managed to get off the front page as fast as it got on, slinking back to Langley to plot yet another misadventure in international intrigue. But after Watergate nothing is sacred or secret anymore, because it has become the national pastime to find out everything there is to know about the mysterious workings of our government. I would add an unequivocal "and rightly so", if I were not so troubled by the sometimes excessive zeal of the media, and the questionable proprieties of certain Congressmen and Senators.

It is reasonable to ask for accountability from the CIA, but if we are to scrutinize then we must be prepared to go the full route. It will not be enough to wait for Guatemalas or Chiles, it must be a day to day affair. If the media and the Congress are prepared to do this, then more power (and time) to them. But more important, if we as a citizenry are prepared to join in the effort, then we must also accept responsibility for future CIA activities, as well as the consequence of inactivity. And kid yourself not, my fellow liberal, there are consequences.

I happen to believe that there is a need for an intelligence gathering organization. The world is not, as yet, a free and open society, and government must deal in realities and not dreams. Intelligence gathering necessitates secrecy, and it is impossible for the CIA to become an open forum and at the same time conduct its business, shady as it is, effectively.

But unfortunately, intelligence gathering is not the only function of the CIA. Presidents in the past have seen fit to request the Agency to act upon intelligence it gathers, to alter situations reported on, short of becoming identified as a U.S. sanctioned action. Hence, covert operations, and dirty tricks. Intelligence should rightly be used to aid in negotiation, but if negotiation breaks down, the temptation to use alternate means to accomplish the same end must be great. It is in times such as these, that control and restraint are needed. When the Chief Executive is allowed virtual exclusive rights on foreign policy development, then it follows that the dangers of abuse become greater. It is there, at the top, that control is needed.

I contend that for Congress to establish another committee to watch the CIA, is unworkable and not getting at the heart of the problem. It is assumed, furthermore, under these new proposals for oversight, that any Congressman is qualified to judge whether or not the missions of the CIA are in the national interest or not. Sen. Lowell Weicker has stated that a person's election to Congress should be security clearance enough to serve on such a proposed committee. While this sounds nice and honorable, there are procedures that exist to determine security clearances, and to apply Weicker's theory would be akin to eliminating not the need for security, but security itself. Instead of worrying about committees, the first step that should be taken is to strip Henry Kissinger of his role as the power on the "40 Committee", and have the President conduct its meetings, and hold him answerable to the top Congressional leaders, and ultimately to the people. That would bring the responsibility back where it belongs, and make the President aware that he can no longer pass the buck along to Kissinger, the CIA, or whoever is taking the blame that week.

It is obvious that intelligence gathering and assassination are two terribly distinct things, and to endorse the latter would be insane. But I accept the fact that there can be a need for covert activities of a type, but naturally limits must be drawn and insisted upon by the men at the top. I commend the recent interest in the CIA, and especially the media's role in getting to the truth about the Chile affair. But before you jump on the anti-CIA bandwagon, please remember that the disclosures were originally made by CIA Director Colby himself, to a committee overseeing the CIA. And while the hero of the day would seem to be Cong. Harrington, he found out what he did by simply reading Colby's testimony. And further, if the Congressman's disclosures have served the nation's interest, and I do not doubt his intentions, the fact remains that his own interests have been served equally well.

Gotta have a gimmick

"Are you trapped in a dull job?" came a voice over the radio. I slowly lifted my head from the desk. "Little pay; no interest?"; I sat up fully and faced the speakers. "Well maybe you're stuck in the wrong place! A new exciting career maybe what you're looking for! Well, PPI can help you."

"PPI, Pick Pocket Institute of New England now has openings for its Fall semester. Get into the exciting world of crime and high finance; meet interesting people and travel to exotic places like New York, Paris, London, Revere Beach, or Northampton District Court! Be your own boss! Ya like ta work with ya hands? Huh? Well listen: Get up; get your hands out of your pockets; and into someone elses! For more information..."

I took his first suggestion and got up. However, I proceeded to change the station. "Bzzzz whirrr...-shakes out white turns blue...yes, folks, da ya remember dat tune? Dis is a Lawrence...have I gutta deal fa you pal....rockity bop bop dip dip de do..." What have I done to deserve this; what haven't I done? Finally I centered on a channel in which some group of questionable identity was chanting a barbarous, teutonic barb about applauding for some werewolf or other. I turned the radio off and left my room for the lounge to think about my writing there.

On a sofa I found a rag of papyrus that claimed to be a college newspaper. I thumbed through it and scanned the headlines. On one of the back pages I read this:

"Say, have you ever been at a party and quoted James Joyce, Or maybe something original? And someone says to you: 'Ya know; that's good. You should be a writer.' Well it's true! You should be if you have the talent.

"How do I know if I've got the talent? you may ask yourself. Well, for a short time only we're running Collegian Writing Talent Hunt Test; and it's free. Absolutely free of charge (void where prohibited by logic).

"Mr. Yazblonikov Zamiblinski, of Amherst writes humerous romances in his spare time. J.B. Pencraft composes idealistic situation commedies after supper, every evening. You too can be a part of this exciting field of journalism and writing. How? Take our test.

"Here's a for instance for ya: Can you complete this sentence? 'The chicken crossed the road (a) to get to the other side or (b) fowl purposes.' If you can send this in right away, our top, highly apaid analysts will get right back to you within days. Here's all ya gutta do..."

Someone entered the room and turned on the television. It was seven o'clock and I supposed he was planning to watch the news. A brief musical interlude informed me that he wan't.

"It's time to play...WHAT'S MY GIMMICK!" A hearty round of applause and the host enters. "OK, panel, you know the rules. You have three seconds to guess the contestant's gimmick. Will the first guest sign in please!"

More music and a thin mustached gentleman boldly stepped in front of the screen and scrawled his signature across a black board. "Mr. Rudy Find," read the host. Another round of applause and he joins the host, Barney, at a desk. "Ok, we'll start with Goopy Sales; Goopy?"

"Ah, do you sell lead golf balls?"

"Why, do you know a market for them?"

"Five down, three to go," said Barney.

"Ahh, I give up. This one's a toughy."

"Panel," said the host, "Rudy makes his profits off disasters. How about an example, Rudy?"

"Sure, sure! Hey, big train wreck in Idaho, tons of luggage. Hurricane in Honduras, plenty of wrist watches and rings. War in Cyprus; how about a new dinette set?"

The fellow watching the program leaped up from his seat beside me and turned the set off. "What an insult to the public's intellect! What's wrong with these people? Shakespeare in paperback! Van Gogh prints, two dollars! Gimmicks, gimmicks! Frozen breakfasts!"

"So what are you going to do with yourself for the rest of your life? What about an education? What school is right for you? Well, UMass is proud of its fine quality performance in the past and we'd like to occassionally display this through some of our graduates. Leo Freeseat, you graduated in 1972 as an astrophysicist. You hold five PH.Ds, and two Masters; you were editor of the paper and president of the Southwest amateur Gynecology Society. How ya doin', Leo?

"Ahh, ahh, da, ffff, fine, man. Just, ahhh, fine."

JUSTICE TAKES ANOTHER LUMP

Register to vote

In response to a petition filed pursuant to a recently enacted statute, several UMass campus groups have required the registrar of voters for the Town of Amherst to schedule another day at UMass campus when students will be entitled to register on campus to vote in the coming November election.

The petition is one of several steps which Mass PIRG (UMass), Environmental Action, Student Organizing Project, University and State Communications Council, and Veterans Coalition for Community Affairs have taken in their efforts to ensure that all eligible voters are registered to vote in the November elections.

Because of their efforts, the Town Clerk has agreed to staff a registration table in the [Southwest] Hampshire Dining Commons on Thursday, October 3rd, from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. This session is in addition to the one scheduled for the Campus Center on Wednesday, October 2nd from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

These groups are urging students to register and to vote in Amherst because of the problems associated with filing absentee ballots, and-or travelling to one's parents homes on election day to cast a ballot. Several of the groups have cited the unusual opportunity which voting in Amherst provides this year.

In addition to being able to vote on whether the state should help finance private colleges, voters in this senatorial district will be given the rare opportunity of deciding by ballot whether or not the nation's energy needs should be met by nuclear power. Two specific referendum questions formulated by the Alternative Energy Coalition, a group closely associated with Sam Lovejoy and his efforts to oppose the construction of twin nuclear power plants in Montague, Mass., will allow voters to indicate whether they think a nuclear plant should be built in Montague and whether two existing New England plants should be closed.

Any resident of the Town of Amherst who is over eighteen (18) years of age (or will be over 18 by November 5) is entitled to register to vote in Amherst. A UMass I.D. and proof of age should suffice for proof of residence. For further information, contact the Town Clerk (253-3885) or Mass PIRG (256-6434).

The opinions in this space represent those of a majority of the Board of Editors.

"I'm looking for a symbiotic and not a redundant relationship," said Wood. "Despite geographical locations, we are one university. Opportunities of locale can mean that these specialties can be mutually beneficial."

President Wood then referred to Chancellor Randolph Bromery a senator's question about the accountability of teaching assistants and graduate professors.

Declared the Chancellor, "We have to answer for what the university is going to look like compared to the state colleges. We have nothing to hide if we show the university in its best light, that is, by showing that everyone who is receiving state funds is actually serving the state."

Speaking to the same question, Acting Dean of the Graduate School, Verre Chapel responded: "It seems as if there has never been a systematic survey of workloads on this campus. We are aware of the vast differences that exist from department to department."

"We have assigned these questions to the Financial Aid and Student Affairs Committees to find out what actually happens and at least encourage some sort of equity regarding workloads and contact hours," reported Chapel.

In other GSS business, senate members passed a motion which increases the number of senators for each of the five clusters within the School of Education. This motion also entitles each cluster to apply for their own portion of the revenue sharing funds that are available to graduate departments from the GSS.

A second motion, which was amended and passed, increased the number of senators representing the Masters' and Doctoral divisions with in the School of Business Administration. As amended, this motion also grants each division autonomy to apply for separate revenue sharing funds.

EPA bans production of pesticides

WASHINGTON [AP] - Environmental Protection Administrator Russell E. Train on yesterday banned any further production of the pesticides Aldrin and Dieldrin for most farm uses, citing them as probable cancer hazards.

Shell Chemical Co., the sole manufacture of Aldrin and Dieldrin in the United States, announced it would appeal to a federal court.

The EPA said the two pesticides are used for farm and commercial pest control, but not in products used around the home.

All the same, EPA administrative law judge Herbert J. Perlman warned ten days ago that the entire U.S. population is exposed to Aldrin and Dieldrin in the air and as residues on food.

An EPA spokesman said Train's decision allowed Shell to continue manufacturing limited amounts, for use only in three specific ways.

-Deep ground-insertion for termite control.

-Dipping of roots and tops of non-food plants.

Catalytic converters required on '75 cars

Exhaust devices add cost, cut pollution

DETROIT [UPI] — The catalytic converter is one device Detroit's automakers could have done without.

The muffler-like device that treats exhaust gases makes the 1975 models now rolling off assembly lines probably the most pollution-free automobiles ever produced with internal combustion engines.

Sometimes kicking, sometimes screaming and sometimes getting their way, Detroit's automakers have come up with the catalytic converter as their answer to the 1970 government order to take the car out of the pollution picture by 1975.

They not too affectionately refer to the device as the "Muskie Muffler" in reference to the U.S. senator from Maine who was most responsible for the 1970 Clean Air Act.

Aside from the technical developments and the legal battles, the addition of the little chemical furnace beneath the floorboards of 1975 cars basically means to the American motorist:

—Higher prices since the catalytic muffler is adding between $100 and $150 to the price tags of the '75's.

—Better mileage since engineers for the past five years have been tuning engines to produce fewer pollutants can now tune for more get-up-and-go and mileage. General Motors is talking about a 14 per cent improvement over '74 models and Chrysler says it has a general 15 per cent gain.

—Mandatory use of unleaded gasoline since the lead additive that controls knocking also "poisons" the platinum and palladium catalyst. There's a new, smaller gas tank filler pipe on the '75's that will prevent anything but unleaded gasoline - at one or two cents more a gallon - from being put into the car.

Less evident to the motorist will be the exhaust coming out of the tailpipe containing 90 per cent fewer hydrocarbons than 1967 models, 83 per cent less carbon monoxide and 48 per cent fewer oxides of nitrogen. In California, where smog is a greater problem, the exhaust will be even cleaner.

GM, which was sharply critical of the government's timetable set in 1970, has since embraced the catalyst technology more than any of its competitors. But that didn't stop the world's largest auto company from going into court to fight the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and gain further delays.

In Congress, in the courts and in front of big and small groups, GM spokesmen told their side of the clean air controversy. They asked for delays in implementing a technology that no one really understands fully.

"Catalysts have an aura of alchemy about them, black magic,' even with chemists," says Dr. Richard Klimisch, GM's first resident expert in catalysis. "The normal sequence of research and development is almost always turned around in catalytic technology.

"Somebody finds a catalyst maybe by a clumsy accident," he says. "Then we spend 20 years trying to find out why it works. I hesitate to say this, and I'll probably lose a lot of friends, but we don't really understand many catalysts."

The basic principle of the catalytic converter is that it speeds up the chemical reaction that converts unburned hydro-carbons and carbon monoxide caused by incomplete combustion in the engine into harmless carbon dioxide and water.

More important, it does this and emerges unchanged - able to repeat the process again. That's important since the catalyst is a combination of the relatively rare platinum and palladium that is available from only two places - the Soviet Union and South Africa.

To supply its need GM signed a deal with Impala Platinum Limited of South Africa for 300,000 ounces of platinum and 120,000 ounces of palladium a year. A lot of rock - 10 to 15 tons - has to be mined to produce just one ounce of platinum and palladium.

The government says the catalytic converters should last 50,000 miles without deteriorating. However, if the leaded gasoline is somehow put into the gas tank, the catalysts will be "poisoned" since the lead coats the metal catalyst and doesn't allow it to come into contact with the harmful gases.

North Sea oil to reduce dependency on Arabs

By PHIL NEWSOM
UPI Foreign News Analyst

Smaller than the vast oil reserves of the Middle East, the new oil fields in the North Sea nonetheless are expected to go far toward easing the Arab stranglehold on world energy supplies.

Britain's oil fields, for example, stretch in an almost unbroken line from the coast off Scotland all the way around to the coast of Wales.

The British fields are expected by the late 1970's to supply 80 per cent of Britains's oil needs as well as a major portion of the requirements of the rest of Western Europe.

Norway, with three oil fields already known and vast areas still to be explored, also is expected to be an important contributor.

The North Sea oil boom, which was touched off by discovery of Norway's Ekofisk field by the Phillips Petroleum Company in 1965, has created new defense problems for NATO and for the two countries most directly involved, and technological, social and political problems as well, especially for Norway.

Unlike Britain, whose economic difficulties dictate that she develop her new found oil resources as quickly as possible, the Norwegians have put the brakes on development of their new fields deliberately out of fear that too sudden riches would upset their economic balance.

A political problem arose for Norway out of a decision to pipe oil and natural gas from the Ekofisk field 200 miles off the Norwegian coast to Britain and West Germany. Trade unions objected they should be brought directly to Norway instead. The political wrangle faded away when it was demonstrated that a deep rift in the seabed made it impossible to build a pipeline from the oil field to the Norwegian coast.

An economic and social problem facing Norway, a nation of only about four million people, is the fear that the new oil industry will siphon off labor and thus damage other industries.

Another consideration arises in the far north around the city of Tromso.

Off this coast lie some of Norway's richest fishing grounds.

Under these same waters are believed to lie important oil deposits.

The fishing industry opposes oil exploration in the area not only for what it might do to marine life but also out of fear fishermen and others involved in the industry might be attracted away to better jobs.

Sexism to be women's society topic

By ELIZABETH CORELL
Staff Correspondent

"Sexism" is one of the topics to be discussed Friday by a national speaker at the meeting of the Mortar Board society of the New England region, according to Sharon Smith, secretary of the UMass chapter.

The senior women's honor society will have representatives from seven campuses meeting Oct. 5 in Herter Hall to discuss issues and problems facing Mortar Board.

A main topic will be the issue of opening the society to men. Another topic of concern is the criteria for selection used by the different school.

The society hopes to find means of increasing participation in the community service project -- the major purpose of Mortar Board. Ideas on fund raising methods for the project and general administrative expenses will be raised.

The campuses attending include UNH, UMaine, BC, BU, UConn, St. Lawrence, and UMass.

The topics will be assigned to four of the seven schools, with one member leading the seminar. At least one representative from each school will be present, to ensure that all of the societies benefit from the information presented.

French film deals with anti-Semitism

"The Two Of Us" is a powerful and touching movie dealing with the theme of interpersonal relations of people with different backgrounds. It traces the interaction of two very different people - a young Jewish boy and an old anti-Semitic man. Although it is set in France during World War II, this award-winning French film (with subtitles) could have been filmed yesterday. It's free - in the Campus Center Auditorium at 9:00 p.m. tonight. All are welcome.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Wednesday, October 2

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — You will need to take intelligent action this morning if you are to avoid a crisis situation on the employment scene. Study the circumstances.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Annoying delays may cause you to do less than your best during morning hours. Let wisdom prevail; make up for lost time later in the day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You should be able to come closer to your objectives than you had anticipated today. Cooperation with a partner is the key to success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Be guided by your conscience today in matters concerning another's success. Don't allow jealousy to direct either thoughts or actions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — For best results today, depend exclusively upon your own knowledge and your own physical abilities. Evening hours offer diversion.

PISCES (FEb. 19-March 20) — Take care that you don't allow a display of temper to spoil a budding relationship with one who could be of service to you in the future.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Take things neither too seriously nor too casually today. Now is the time for discovering where the happy medium lies — and heading for it!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Further your own career by the judicious application of charm. You can gain much for a study of one who has known success in the field.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Decide business matters early in the day. If you wait too long you will find that they have been decided for you— and perhaps against your preference.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — What you take to be another's interference may have been nothing more than well-meant interest. Take care not to be overly "touchy."

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Don't allow yourself to become upset by another's criticism of your work. Consider the source and you will have to discount the judgment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Though you may not be progressing as rapidly as heretofore, you can still make gains before day's end. Patience pays off in the evening.

Frank Robinson to become first black major league manager

NEW YORK — Frank Robinson, the only man to win the most valuable player award in both the National and American Leagues, will become the first Black manager in Major League baseball history Thursday when he will be named player-manager of the Cleveland Indians, it has been learned.

Robinson, who will suceed Ken Aspromonte as manager, will also retain both his current role of designated hitter and his $173,000 a year salary, making him the highest paid manager in baseball history.

The Indians obtained the 39-year-old Robinson on waivers from the California Angels two and a half weeks ago and the immediate speculation was that he was purchased not only for his hitting ability but also to replace Aspromonte as manager. The speculation gained credence last week when Aspromonte was fired.

Robinson will become the major league's first player-manager since 1952 when Lou Boudreau handled both jobs with the Boston Red Sox, getting into four games as a player that year. It was Boudreau in 1948 who led the Indians to a world championship when he served as player-manager.

"So far as I know, it's not official," said Robinson, who was with the Indians in Boston for Tuesday night's game.

But when questioned further by newsmen, Robinson did assess the Indians personnel in a general way.

"There is some good young talent on this club," he said. "It's a type team that can move because it's young. The older a player gets, the more set in his ways he becomes.

"The toughest thing about managing is not that I am black. I hope they would hire me more for my qualifications than for that. But after rubbing elbows with these guys, it would be a funny feeling, realizing you'll be the man and you can't do things like go out drinking with them anymore."

Robinson's only previous managerial experience came in the Puerto Rican winter league where he managed the Santurce Club for five winters. Robinson succeeded present Baltimore Orioles manager Earl Weaver as manager of Santurce and it was weaver who recommended Robinson for the Santurce job.

"There's no question about his baseball knowledge, and he has shown he can lead men," says Santurce club owner and president Hiram Cuevas. "You need the same prerequisites to manage in the major leagues as you do to manage in our league."

"If you can manage in Puerto Rico, you can manage anywhere," says Weaver. "I think Frank will make a good major league manager. I've thought that way for a long time."

Football season tickets help athletic programs

By BILL DOYLE
Sports Staff

In the second part of a two-part series on the financial situation of UMass athletics, Bill Doyle writes about the importance of selling season tickets to football games as it relates to the athletic department as a whole.

Season tickets account for the bulk of the revenue accumulated by the football team, according to Assistant Athletic Director Vic Fusia. He pointed out that the more football season tickets sold, the better for the entire athletic department. Part of his job is to publicize UMass football and sell tickets. In addition to the season tickets, three dollars of the fifteen dollar student athletic fee is put towards paying for the football stadium.

The number of season tickets sold reached an all time high during the days of Greg Landry, Fusia said. Nineteen hundred and seven season tickets were sold. The number dropped when Landry graduated to where only thirteen hundred were sold two years ago. The department suffered, as a result because money was scarce. Certain sports were dropped because of the lack of funds. Junior varsity swimming, jumior varsity golf and junior varsity tennis were among them. The number of games each UMass team played had to be limited and restricted to only New England.

Fusia said that last year the number of season tickets sold rose to seventeen hundred and this year that figure has been reached again, with two thousand being the goal.

The athletic department sells most of its season tickets to Western Mass. residents, Fusia pointed out. He added that season tickets are sold around the Boston area and as far as New York City.

Fusia doesn't think that being in a sparsely populated area like Amherst hurts attendance. "We have no competition from the Boston pro sports nor any other colleges to take away spectators. We have the best stadium in the area and the best athletic program."

A Sports Feature

The athletic department is trying a new way to sell season tickets this year, Fusia explained. Letters are sent to local industries, inviting them to "bring clients to the games" or to come with their families.

Other ways of publicizing UMass football are television commercials with Greg Landry, plugging the team and billboards exhibiting the football schedule.

Fusia said that he is optimistic about UMass' athletic program. "Our goal is to be number one, not in the nation but in New England, and I think that goal is within our reach."

Russia edges Canada 3-2 in USSR to lead series 2-1

MOSCOW [UPI] — The Howe family, Gordie and Mark, each scored a goal Tuesday night, but team Canada couldn't stop an aggressive Russian squad that posted a 3-2 victory to take the lead in their eight-game series.

Alexander Maltsev scored twice for Russia as the Canadiens played catchup hockey after the Soviets scored the opening goal with 5:34 gone in the opening period.

Each team had one victory and played two ties during the first four games in Canada.

The Soviets had a faster, rougher and more fluid game going from the start. Team Canada only really came to life in the third period when it showed some of the hard driving form that might still enable them to win the series as they did two years ago.

Gordie Howe tied the game at 1-1 just 15 seconds into the second period with an assist from his son Mark and Ralph Backstrom, but Maltsev cracked the Canadiens' defense again in the middle session to put Russian in front, 2-1.

Alexander Gusev gave Russia the deciding goal when he batted in a rebound off goalie Gerry Cheevers' pads in the third period.

In the final 10 minutes, the Canadians pulled out all stops and started to outpace and outplay the Russians. This paid off at 18:10 with a goal by Mark Howe on an assist from Paul Shmur.

In the final minute, team Canada pulled Cheevers off the ice and threw in another forward for an all out assault, but could not get through Russian defense.

Set to defend ECAC regional title

UMass golfers hit Hartford

By RICH SEVEIRI
Sports Staff

The UMass golfers, newly crowned New England intercollegiate champions, travel to Hartford today to defend the ECAC regional championship they captured last Fall.

Wednesday will be a day of practice for the Minutemen on the exclusive Hartford County Club Course. The 18-hole ECAC regional championships will be held Thursday.

The two top teams, and the ten low individuals at Hartford will qualify for the ECAC championships later this month in Jamesburg, New Jersey.

Last fall the UMass team posted a low score of 313 on their own home course, Hickory Ridge C.C., to win a ECAC regional qualifying position for the first time. In the ECAC championships which were held at Pleasant Valley C.C., in Sutton, they finished a respectable 5th.

Sectional qualifying rounds will be held throughout the East on Thursday. Bucknell will serve as host in Pennsylvania, Rutgers in New Jersey, Cornell in New York. Two teams from each district will be chosen for the ECAC championships.

Hartford Country Club is a tight, demanding 6700 yard, par 71 layout. Straight driving and accurate iron play will be a must.

Rick Olson is still a mile high after his capturing of the New England individual title this weekend. Olson became the first Minuteman to capture the title since William Young in 1957.

"It was super to finally win a tournament," said Olson. "I've come in second quite often, but this was my first major championship."

Olson said that it was his putting that won the title. He took a triple-bogey at three, and a bogey at four in the opening round of the tournament. He charged back with birdies on five, nine, ten and seventeen, for an even par 72. His second round 78 was good enough for a 4 stroke victory.

Coach Fan Gaudette had nothing but praise for John Lasek's steady play. Lasek finished tenth in the New Englands with a 158 total.

"Lasek has been really consistent," said Coach Gaudette. "In only one round this year his game was off".

Pats, UMass turn tables

By STEVE SARACENO

Why did sports editor Dave Eibel stuff staff soothsayer Scott Hayes into the "recyclable trash" bin after Hayes announced in his column that the Los Angeles Rams would romp? Why?

Why did coach Dick MacPherson joyfully carry his players around the field last Saturday at Dartmouth? Why?

Why is your roommate dangling from the ceiling with that belt so tight around his neck after wagering all his bread on this week's college football favorites. Why?

Why? Why not? It was a week of upsets.

- - - -

The big stories of the last week...The Patriots beat the undefeated Rams, 20-14, and now their dynasty has reached the three-game mark...The Minutemen upset the Big Green, 14-0, but had to take part in The-Most- Boring - Second - Half - in - the - History - of - Man to do it... in campus gridiron action, more big bananas fell, the biggest of which was No. 2 Notre Dame - upset by Purdue, 31-20...

...And in baseball, the two eastern division pennant races (minus the Red Sox) continued neck-and-neck, while both western division winners finally were decided...

- - - -

FOOTBALL--The Patriots finally gained respectability and, what's more, they did it without Babe Parilli. The Pats' Big D took the ball away from L.A. six times. The talk now is New England vs. St. Louis (also 3-0) in the Super Bowl.

The Pats win may have been the biggest upset, but it wasn't the strangest thing that happened in pro football...Detroit quarterback Bill Munson centered the ball on one play against the Packers--and it clicked for 27 yards..

UMass looked very good beating Dartmouth, but mercy, couldn't they have livened up the second half? The only things left to do for this Minuteman fan standing in the downpour were to watch despondent Big Green rooters jump off the top of the stadium and listen to some nut outside the stadium with an incredibly loud P.A. system advertising "half-chicken at half-price"...I think it was Frank Perdue...

...in other college football, the curse of the Top Twenty continued...besides the Irish, Texas (No. 5), Arizona State (6), Oklahoma State (8), and Wisconsin (10) were all upset.

...in New England football, BC was surprisingly whacked by Temple, 34-7...Vermont (which invades Alumni Stadium this Saturday lost convincingly to BU, 29-6...and in the 106th renewal of the Princeton-Rutgers rivalry, the game ended up a tie because the Rutgers fans tore down the goalposts before their team could kick the winning field goal...that's the old school spirit...

- - - -

BASEBALL--The Sox took two-out-of-three from the Yankees and three straight from the Tigers, but then Detroit's Vernon "Slide" Ruhle mathematically eliminated them as he won his 20th game this year (the first 18 wins came in the minors)...

Baltimore continued to win in the ninth on squeezes and two-out singles, going 5-0, but the Yankees held onto first in the East by virtue of a 4-2 week...

In the N.L. East, Pittsburgh made up one-and-a-half games on St. Louis as they took two-out-of-three from the Cards in a crucial series. St. Louie won the wacky third game by scoring four runs in the 11th to win, 13-12...

Oakland clinched in the A.L. West, and the Dodgers gained at least a tie for first in the N.L. West even though the Reds went 6-0...

...and Al Kaline went over 3,000 hits...

- - - -

CAMPUS MISCELLANEOUS--The soccer team blanked both BC (4-0) and Maine (3-0). The Harriers routed BC, 15-50, as Tom Wilson, John McGrail, Randy Thomas, and Bill Gillin tied for first.

...and The Collegian football team fell to Dartmouth, 12-6. Several team members are reported under surveillance by the FBI on game-fixing suspicion...

Pats picked over Colts

STATELINE, Nev. [UPI] — New England, St. Louis and Minnesota, all unbeaten in National Football League play, are favored to extend their records this weekend, according to odds posted Tuesday by Harrah's Tahoe racebook.

New England is a 14-point choice over Baltimore, St. Louis two over San Francisco and the Vikings one over Dallas.

In other NFL games, Oakland is a 13-point choice over Cleveland, Cincinnati five over Washington, New York Giants four over Atlanta, Chicago three over New Orleans, Buffalo three over Green Bay, Pittsburgh 15 over Houston, Denver two over Kansas City, Los Angeles 15 over Detroit, Philadelphia five over San Diego and Miami 14 over New York Jets.

Harriers finally best Harvard but come second to Providence

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

The weather was ideal for a cross country meet, Tuesday afternoon, at Boston's Franklin Park. But it was more than just the weather that resulted in a collection of some of the fastest times in Franklin Park history, as the Providence Friars stopped the UMass harriers, 26-31. The real reason was a gathering that included a number of the most talented cross-country runners in New England, and the exceptional times justify that. UMass did beat harvard, 19-38, marking the first victory over the Crimson since 1953.

Randy Thomas captured individual honors by running the sixth fastest time on the Franklin Park course, a 23:57. Thomas outran Providence sensation Mike O'Shea, who placed second with a time of 24:03.

John Tracey edged Bill Gillin and John McGrail for the number three spot, finishing just two seconds ahead of the UMass runners, both of whom were clocked in 24:09. Tom Smith and Jerry Redmon rounded out the top seven, as the times were seven of the fastest on Boston's popular course.

The race was all UMass-Harvard after the first half mile. A group of seven runners battled until close to the three-mile mark, where O'Shea, Redmon and Stetson Arnold made their move to assure a Friar victory.

The meet actually wasn't as close as the five point margin indicates. Arnold, Providence's fifth man, beat devin Croft by 41 seconds.

Croft, the fifth man for the Minutemen, ran a "super race", according to Coach Ken O'Brien. Croft was competing for the first time this season, after suffering frrm a cold for two and a half weeks.

This season is Croft's first year of varsity competition, and the senior harrier came through in a pressure situation with a fine time of 25:18.

The key to victory for Providence was its depth, which proved to be the deciding factor as UMass again failed to close the gap between its fourth and fifth runners. A year ago, the harriers lost to Harvard as a result of inability to close the gap; this year it cost them a victory against a strong Providence squad, which almost assuredly will move into the number one spot in New England when the coaches next cross country poll is released.

The runners set a blistering pace over the first two and a half miles of the fast course, running the first mile in 4:45 and completing two miles in 9:25. Providence's Smith came from way back in the race to place sixth, and the Friar captain was a big factor, providing Providence with some experienced running.

Harvard's Jim Keefe placed eighth, while PC's Arnold finished ahead of Tom Wilson, the Minutemen's fourth runner, who captured tenth.

Frank Noto and Chris Farmer finished 18 and 20, respectively. O'Brien also singled out Farmer's time of 15:28, which would have been that of a third man under other circumstances. Farmer's performance, however, went practically unnoticed among yesterday's assemblage of talented runners. Tom Maguire finished 21, with teammate Phil Broughton right behind. Maguire also had been battling a cold for two weeks, and lost valuable training during that time. Maguire and Croft were not sharp, but no doubt Providence has a very strong team, and the friars outran UMass in a matchup that will recur at the New England championships.

Kickers collide with Keene

By BEN CASWELL

"An early lead could be very important," said Coach Al Rufe about this afternoon's 3:00 contest with Keene State, "that first score will be crucial, if we can get it than we could be on our way."

When the Minutemen take the field today they will be putting a two game undefeated, unscored upon streak on the line.

Keene State will also enter the game unbeaten. Their record to date this year is 4-0. Last week they beat another Yankee Conference team, New Hampshire, in a close defensive battle 1-0. Presently they are rated sixth in the New England standings. All-American forward Mickey Rooney is, as Coach Rufe put it, "all over the field," and will be the main concern of the UMass defense throughout the game. Keene State also boasts a fine defense and excellent goal corps.

The last time that these two teams met Keene State come out on top 3-1. Coach Rufe said that, "we are a much better team than we were two weeks ago in that exhibition game. Our defense is now much better organized and the team as a whole is playing much tighter and as a unit."

Coach Rufe plans to go with the similar team he started against Maine on Saturday when the Minutemen shutout the Black Bears 3-0. Bill Belcher, Tom Coburn, who scored two unassisted goals in that game, and Bob Snow will be the starters at forward positions. The half-backs will be Bill McDonald, Jim Vollinger, and Bill Spyker. Mike Parsons, Dean Lungu, Gary McKenna, and Dan Ouellette will be the fullbacks.Marc Hanks will be the starter in goal once again as he puts his shutout streak up to the toughest test of the season thus far.

QUICK SHOTS — The game will be played at 3:00 today at the field across from Boyden. See you there. UMass is now rated 9th in New England.

That not once more this season
Will the Minutemen be licked."

The University of Massachusetts has been struck by an outbreak of the dreaded disease football fever, health officials announced over the weekend.

Although the outbreak has not yet reached epidemic proportions, officials fear that a scheduled large congregation at Alumni Stadium this weekend could cause the number of those infected to mushroom.

The disease is apparently carried by bacteria, more specifically, the pigskinicoccus bacilli. Apparently the initial strains of this bacteria were introduced to the campus from such outlying environs as Orono, Maine and Hanover, New Hampshire.

UMass was relatively free of the disease last fall, and the last major outbreak here occured in 1972. That epidemic pointed out the difficulty in shaking the effects of the illness once contracted.

The Great Plague of 1972 lasted for three months, and the disease was not purged until a group of the University's greatest warriors traveled to Atlantic City, New Jersey to make short work of sacrifices from Davis, California.

Last year, the disease seemed to infest itself mainly in Storrs, Connecticut. This year, however, the symptoms of the disease (a strange urge to assume a three-point stance and a constant desire to punt) have been absent from that overrated environment.

Thus far, the disease has been spread on this campus by word of mouth and the perusal of selected newspapers. Direct contact with the infection has been of low incidence, but that factor is expected to increase in the next several weeks, with Saturday afternoons being the prime time for contraction of the disease.

Health officials are not optimistic for an immediate cure. Resistance is predicted to be weak for a protracted period, and the height of the epidemic is expected to be reached on the weekend of October 26, which coincides with Homecoming.

A turning point in the strength of the disease could be reached at that time, but if the decline in numbers of those affected is not realized, it is feared that another superstitious excursion to Atlantic City may be the only way to avert a possible overrunning of the campus by the bacteria.

But even if the disease is brought under control, assuming as most authorities do, that this could not be accomplished before the end of November, there are other complications that could arise. Though no medical proof has been established, there is a fear that football fever, even after the symptoms are gone, could lie dormant within the body for several weeks before reappearing in its much more dangerous winter form, hoop fever.

"Twas an optimist's season,
And all through UMass,
There were dreams of an Eagle
Knocked on its ass."

Orioles, Dodgers clinch

By SPORTS STAFF

Only one divisional race is left to be decided after last night's action in the major leagues.

The Los Angeles Dodgers who played San Diego last night on the west coast clinched the National League title when the Cincinnati Reds were crushed 7-1 by the Atlanta Braves on a four-hitter by Buzz Capra. In the National League East the Pittsburgh Pirates clinched at least a tie for the crown when Bob Robertson hit a two-run pinch homer in the eighth to give the Bucs a 6-5 win over the Chicago Cubs. In Montreal, Mike Jorgensen hit a two-runn homer in the eighth off Bob Gibson to give the Expos a 3-2 win over the St. Louis Cardinals leaving the Cards one game behind the Pirates with each team having one game to play.

In the American League East the Baltimore Orioles beat Detroit 7-6 to clinch a playoff berth with the Oakland A's. The win coupled with Milwaukee's 3-2 extra-inning win over the New York Yankees gave the Orioles the division title.

In what was really a "nothing game" the Boston Red Sox beat the Cleveland Indians 7-4 at Fenway Park behind Steve Barr who went all the way in recording his first major league win.

New day care system initiated for UMass

By CHRIS WILLIAMS and PATTI KELLIHER
Staff Reporters

Amid some doubts and disagreements, a new day care system is serving the University community this year.

Instead of operating independently, the University day care centers are governed and funded by an umbrella committee with the financial backing of the University. Hopefully this will alleviate, if not eliminate, the funding problems the individual day care centers have had in the past.

However, two of the five day care centers that were originally included in the plan have dropped out, but are still negotiating with the system. A more final decision is expected on Friday.

Helen Hill and Randy Dahl of the Commuter Affairs Office, the two major planners of the new system, told the Collegian that the plan began un October, 1973, when a subcommittee of the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Women began a study of how the day care centers could improve their service to University women.

The day care centers suffered from underenrollment, poorly paid staff, inadequate space, and a general lack of money. The subcommittee created a plan whereby a central coordinator would receive funds from the University and other sources, and dole it out to the individual centers depending on their need.

The new system has already achieved several of its goals. The University has promised the system $32,000, which should cover the deficit incurred by the individual day care centers after the fees are paid. Each of the day care centers has a full professional staff.

At present, the central committee is performing the coordinator's role. However, official operating policy for the day care centers is still being worked out.

For fiscal '76, Hill and Dahi hope to have a single coordinator, with the committee having an advisory role. They are also hoping for increase enrollment in the North Village center, and slight increases in equipment and supplies for all the centers.

The three day care centers currently participating are the University Day School in Bowditch Lodge, the North Village center in Apt. J16, North Village, and the Grass Roots center in the basement of the 1st Baptist church, Amherst.

The two centers still negotiating are the Infant Center in New Africa House, and the New World Center in Mackimmie House.

The afternoon session at North Village still has room for students. Interested parents should contact North Village.

Occupancy up, signs down

Violations found in local bars

The following article is the result of a three-week investigation by a team of eight Collegian reporters: Michele Amrich, John Butler, John Dunphy, Dave Kowal, Chris McLean, Dave Ostrander, Linda Wiener and Mike Kneeland.

Some area bars are apparently ignoring their assigned occupancy number, allowing more patrons inside than permitted by law.

A Collegian investigative team visiting local bars on random nights found illegal overcrowding in Mike's, the Pub, the Rusty Nail, and the Steak Out lounge.

Bars visited which were not above their occupancy levels were the Rusty Scupper, Rachid's, Barsilotti's, the Drake and Quicksilver.

The most flagrant of the violators was the Rusty Nail, located on Rt. 47 in Sunderland.

At least 400 people were counted inside the Rusty Nail on Friday, Sept. 20. In violation of the law, no occupancy sign was posted.

More importantly, Sunderland officials could not say how many people are allowed in the Rusty Nail.

Reached at his home Tuesday night, Sunderland Building Inspector Edward Smith said he did not know how many patrons the Rusty Nail was allowed because the records were in his office.

When his office was called by the Collegian yesterday, a secretary said Smith was not available and "wouldn't be in until Friday."

The secretary said she could not say how many people are allowed in the Rusty Nail because "there was a fire recently and some of our records have been destroyed."

Sunderland Police Chief Joseph Sedowski said he has "gotten a few complaints about that place (Rusty Nail)" and added "they have quite a crowd there sometimes."

A spokesman for the Rusty Nail refused Tuesday night to comment on the Collegian charges warning, "you'd better do more digging." Before hanging up the telephone abruptly he said he had "nothing further to say."

The other three bars in violation of the law were not as flagrant as the Rusty Nail.

The Collegian team counted a minimum of 250 people in the Pub on Friday, Sept. 20. That bar is allowed to have 201 patrons.

Pub manager Jerry Jolly said he was not overcrowded that night. He said the Amherst Police checked the Pub twice that night, once at 10:15 and once about midnight.

Jolly said the number of people are carefully controlled by one counter at the door and three counters on the floor.

Amherst Police Officer Dave Jankowski said shift commanders regularly check bars for occupancy violations and underaged drinkers. He estimates the police officers visit the bars at least three times a week.

Last semester the Collegian reported the Pub was excessively overcrowded at a Great Pretender's "concert." Following that article, it appeared the Pub more carefully observed their legal occupancy level.

The Steak Out lounge was about 80 per cent overcrowded on Friday, Sept. 13. There were 189 patrons while the lounge is allowed 103 patrons. By 11 p.m. that night, however, patrons were admitted only as others left.

Manager Joe Almon said he has established a one dollar cover charge to prevent overcrowding. He said the Steak Out is regularly inspected, the last one occurring about three weeks ago.

There was a power failure in the Steak Out on the 13th and firemen visited the premise. One waitress remarked, "If the firemen had come another night, they would have closed the place down." She said the lounge is especially overcrowded before vacations and after "UMass wins a football game."

In addition, the rear exit sign was unlit that night and was almost totally hidden by a partition. Almon admitted "that's a problem."

Trustees approve budget

By FRED NOBLES
Staff Reporter

A "freeze" on enrollments in "traditional programs at Amherst and Boston" will be the result of the University maintenance budget for fiscal 1976 approved yesterday by the UMass Board of Trustees. The 1976 budget of $18 million represents a 16.5 per cent increase over anticipated 1975 expenses.

Commenting on the budget before the assembled Board, UMass President Robert Wood said, "I simply could not go higher than $18 million and that represents the best judgement of the University administration at this time." Saying that "the University is peculiarly and especially vulnerable to the ravages of inflation."

Wood went on to suggest that it is necessary to freeze enrollment in order to maintain quality education at UMass. Over 90 per cent of the increase reflected in the 1976 budget will be used "to meet in-

Cal. Lt. Governor convicted of perjury

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Ed Reinecke, described as a victim on his "own selfish ambition," yesterday was given an 18-month suspended sentence for perjury minutes after he resigned as lieutenant governor of California.

Reinecke, once a leading candidate to succeed Ronald Reagan as California governor, told U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker "I still do not feel tat I am guilty" of lying to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Parker, who pronounced sentence, told Reinecke that he was "a victim of your ambition, your own selfish ambition."

Reinecke was released on bond pending an appeal. Parker also placed him on one-month unsupervised probation.

Reinecke, whose bid for the governorship as wrecked by his perjury indictment, handed in his resignation by messenger in Sacramento, Calif., 15 minutes before his sentencing began.

Reinecke was found guilty July 27 of lying to the Senate committee about the date in 1971 when he first told the Attorney General John N. Mitchell about an ITT offer to back the Republican National Convention in San Diego in 1972.

APO-GSS provide services

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

Ride Board, Used Book Exchange, Freshman Register, Reading For The Blind all have two things in common-GSS and APO.

Known as the "Alternative Greeks", Gamma Sigma Sigma and her brother fraternity Alpha Phi Omega, are strictly service organizations.

Although they carry the Greek letters, neither is a social "fraternity". They have no houses or rushes.

What GSS has is a motto, "Come Share, Come Serve", which binds a growing number of college women to pledge at least 15 hours of service a semester, according to Ellen Crowell, president of UMass' Alpha Theta chapter of this national organization.

"Our purpose is to serve the community and the university," she said.

APO, the older of the two groups, pledges "leadership, friendship and service", and shares not only an office in Student Union 304, but also the responsibilities for many service projects with GSS, according to one APO member.

The two groups, together and separately, have launched such projects as the Used Book Exchange, Las Vegas Night, The Freshman Register and an upcoming Walkathon, to raise money for the blind, hemophiliacs, CARE and the Heart Fund.

Interested people can get in touch with either group by calling 545-2068.

One GSS member said, "I had been here a year before I knew it existed. I wanted to help people and when I found GSS it was just what I had been looking for."

Publicity program for high school students revived

By TONY BATTISTA
Staff Reporter

The Greek Area Government has approved a proposal for the creation of a University Publicist Program to be operated by the Greek Area.

The proposal was submitted by the Future Plans Committee of the Greek Council. Karl Greene was named temporary chairperson with the position still being open to any interested Greek upperclassman. The Greek Council will appoint a permanent chairperson at a later date.

Under this program, Greeks from this campus will travel to high schools across the state answering any questions high school students might have about UMass. It is a revival of a similar program previously sponsored by the debate union.

The design of the new group will be similar to Arcon, the Greek-operated University Guide Service. A chairperson and twenty members will make up the group. The membership will come from Greek upperclassmen, the selection of new chairpersons and membership being up to the group itself. A name for the new group will be submitted to the Greek Council at a later date.

Paul Sweeney, chairperson of the Future Plans Committee, stressed that the University Publicist Program is still only a pilot program.

"Funds have been appropriated for the program", he said, "and I hope to see some good, solid support from the Greek Area".

He also indicated that the funds for the program are coming out of the Future Plans Committee.

"Members of the new organization will be primarily assigned to cover high schools in the area of their own home towns during the month of January," Sweeney added.

Sweeney hopes to put together some audio-visual materials to be used on the high school visitations. He also hopes the group will be able to use the admissions office in establishing contacts with high schools.

Angela Davis' intensity is mirrored in her life

By PATTY MORIN
Special Correspondent

Ms. Davis will speak tonight at 8:00 in the Campus Center Auditorium on "What is Socialism?"

In September, 1963, in the Baptist Church of Birmingham, Alabama, four little Black girls were blasted by a bomb, at the hands of white racists. Down the street was a neighborhood nicknamed, "Dynamite Hill" due to the constant harrassment activities, including bombings, conducted there by White night-riders.

It was in this middle-class Black neighborhood, that Angela Yvonne Davis had been born to school teacher parents, in 1944. Angela knew the three little girls killed in the bombing; she knew their families.

In the mid-fifties, at age ten, Angela attended her first civil rights movement with her mother in Birmingham. Inspired, she helped form interracial study groups among young people, which were later disbanded by police.

At age fifteen, Angela won a scholarship from the American Friends Service Committee, to attend Elizabeth Irwin High School, a progressive private school in Greenwich Village, N.Y. She was placed in Brooklyn, and taken into the home of a controversial Episcopalian minister, Rev. William Melish, winner of the 1965 Stockholm Peace Prize.

Melish was deeply involved with the civil rights movement and was also Chairman of the American-Soviet Friendship Council in New York.

Upon graduation in 1961, she was offered scholarships to nursing school and Brandeis University.

Profile

After graduating Magna Cum Laude from Brandeis, Angela spent two years studying philosophy in Frankfurt, Germany. Her return to the states in '67 was attributed by friends to her inability to stay in Europe while her own country was "degenerating." She earned her M.A. in philosophy in 1968 under Marcuse at the University of California at San Diego.

In 1969, Angela was hired by UCLA as a Philosophy Professor. At the finish of the academic year, after open admission of her Communism, Angela was dismissed by the California Board of Regents, despite an excellent record as instructor, and against recommendations of the faculty and University Chancellor.

Shortly thereafter, a court order reinstated Angela in the University where her courses were once again among the most popular on campus.

During this time, Angela had become completely entrenched in the cause of the Soledad Brothers, three Black prisoners accused of killing a prison guard. She became close to the Soledad Brother, George Jackson, before having ever seen him, through correspondence.

Angela was suspected of complicity in an abortive escape and kidnap attempt in Martin County, California on Aug. 7, 1970.

Shortly after, she was placed in solitary confinement in a California prison for many months. Angela's cause became the focus of a worldwide freedom campaign.

On June 4, 1972, Angela was acquitted by an all white jury of all charges against her. On being released she vowed to free all political prisoners.

workers at the Boston campus.

During their meeting, the Trustees voted to approve the establishment of two new master of science degree programs at UMass Amherst. Following approval by the Board of HIgher Education UMass will be offering degrees in Manufacturing Engineering and Hotel, Restaurant and Trave Administration.

According to Trustee Frederick Troy, the M.S. degree in Manufacturing Engineering will "combine elements of mechanical and industrial engineering" and will be offered to ten students annually. The Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration program will accept 15 students into its masters program, said Troy.

In other action the Board approved the appointment of Gladys Keith Hardy as secretary of the University and secretary of the Board of Trustees. Hardy is the first woman ever to hold the position. From February 1972 to June 1973 she served as Undersecretary of Educational Affairs.

Repainting too expensive

Students still forbidden to paint rooms

By FRAN BROCK
Staff Reporter

"There is a 'No Paint Policy'," said Ken Dean, director of the Office of Residential Life, "until something else can be done."

This means that students may not paint their rooms.

According to Dean and Bob Campbell, also of Residential Life, it costs the University too much money to repaint rooms after the inhabitants paint them.

Campbell said Brett and Wheeler dorms were painted this summer. The estimated cost, before the dorms were looked at, according to Campbell, was between 11 and 12 thousand dollars.

Because many rooms had to be given two or three coats, Campbell said that the final cost was over 24 thousand dollars.

Jon Spiegel, head of residence for Wheeler, said that he was extremely impressed with the paint job that the Physical Plant did on his dorm.

Spiegel agreed with the policy that students should be liable for their rooms. But he also felt the University had a responsibility to provide suitable rooms for the students. Spiegel added thht students should have a say in the color of their rooms. Students did have a say in Wheeler.

The feeling among many students is that the rooms need painting and the fastest way of getting them painted is to do the room themselves.

Campbell and Dean said the trouble with students painting their own rooms is the damage that often occurs by not covering everything or the color that is used is not acceptable for future residents.

They said that the physical plant does not have the money to go through and repaint and repair so many rooms. The money comes only from the students' rent fees and, according to Dean, because the rent was not raised last year, the money for such extensive jobs is not there.

"We want to make the dorm life more desirable," said Dean, "but the money spent on painting means less money for other 'environmental projects in the dorms'."

Some heads of residence are opposed to the No Paint Policy. One head of residence from SW, said that she did not care what the students did to their rooms.

According to the policy, all paint jobs must be done with the approval of the area director and the Office of Residential Life. Dean said that the decision to paint or not was left up to the discretion of the area director. But the painting must be done by the Physical Plant or by the student with the supervision of the head of residence, counselor, or someone in the area staff.

The head of residence from SW said she was not going to be a policeperson and keep an eye on what is going on in the rooms. Nor, she added, would she have her counselors do it.

Many heads of residence seem to agree. So do the students. One student, from Central said, "They don't care, and I do, so I'll paint it."

Another student from SW said that she wished someone would paint her room. "I pay enough for the room, and if they say they'll paint it, I'll wait. But I wish they'd do it soon."

Many students on campus have painted their rooms despite the ruling and the $27.50 per coat penalty for painting a room.

"We're not so naive as to believe they're not doing it," said Campbell. "And we're not going to go around making checks."

He contended it was up to the area directors and staff to enforce the rule.

"We have to honor the requests to paint rooms," said Dean, but he added that supervision was necessary so the physical plant would not have to keep painting the rooms that are not acceptable to the next resident.

There are alternatives to the paint policy, and Campbell and Dean said that they would be meeting with area directors to discuss changing the present policy.

Campbell said that Amherst had tried vinyl wallpaper in its dorms and it proved successful.

Dean said Florida State painted all the rooms off-white and only had to repaint every two years. But, he added, he did not particularly like this alternative.

ASTROLOGY:

Knowledge guides individual potential

By KERRY MELLO
Staff Reporter

If you've been blaming that broken romance or flunked exam on your horoscope, then you'll have to find a new scapegoat.

So believe astrologers Don Cerow and Leslie Mitchell, who maintain an undividual's horoscope suggests only possibilities of what the future may hold.

Cerow, a UMass classics student, says he and Mitchell will only be scratching the surface of astrology in a one credit course to be held in room C4 at Amherst-Pelham Junior High, beginning tomorrow. One course is sponsored by the Continuing-Ed program.

In this class Cerow and Mitchell plan to examine previously erected astrological charts of people and nations, and see how they have worked.

Cerow said, in dissecting the charts, students will be able to better understand the basic energies present in them. It is these energies, he believes, that make up an individual.

When an individual knows what energies compose his personality, he can better cope with them. "He learns what's going on at the grass roots level," Cerow said.

The word horoscope is derived from the Greek word hora-hour, and scope, meaning to view — to view the hour.

Cerow pointed out that just as we affect the actions of others and vice-versa, the planets affect our actions.

"Everyone is born with a stamp and an individual's potentials (energies) are in this stamp," he said, "but it's how a person uses these potentials that counts." Cerow added that this is where free will comes into play.

The sun-sign chart, read by most laymen on newspaper comic pages, is, Cerow said, just a small portion of astrology.

"What astrology does," he said, "is separate the individual into basic energies and then reassimilates them."

He believes the greatest facet of astrology in self analysis, knowing what energies one is made up of and thus being able to direct them better.

"Actually," Cerow quipped, "what I'm doing is teaching people how to be good boyscouts. 'Be prepared' is my motto."

The astrologer indicated that if time allowed, students would learn to erect their own charts in addition to reading those of others.

There is a registration fee of $7.00 for the class, which may be paid at the first meeting. The course also involves a lab fee of $1.00.

If enough are interested, Cerow plans to organize a course for university students. This would involve the lab fee only.

Laws vague, revocation unheard of

Mike's bar, a Greek favorite located in North Amherst, was overcrowded on Thursday night. Regular customers said that is usually the case on Thursdays.

Inside there were at least 125 patrons while they are only allowed 109 patrons.

Managers at Mike's said they had "no comment" on the allegations.

Although it was not overcrowded, the Drake did not have an occupancy sign posted in its upstairs section where they are allowed 152 patrons. Downstairs, however, their occupancy sign of 175 was posted.

Brad Parker, a manager, said the upstair's sign was recently removed and he plans to put a new one up soon.

"The town of Amherst is definitely enforcing the building codes," Parker said. Responsible for the building codes in Amherst is Building Commissioner Chester Penza.

He said the law is vague on how often each establishment must be inspected. A new law to go in effect Jan. 1 will say "a place is certified annually and inspected periodically."

Penza said his office, through the town, has the right "to pull the occupancy permit" of a bar but that it has never been done here.

"As soon as we receive a complaint, we correct it and recheck it within a short period of time."

He said he will be going out to the bars "in the near future."

William Start, the Amherst Housing Inspector, said "maybe he's (Penza) vague and maybe I am too."

Penza said occupancy levels are determined by seating arrangements. If the tables and chairs are not stationary, the occupancy level is based on 12 square feet per person. If the tables and chairs are stationary, the level is based on 6 square feet per person.

Amherst Deputy Fire Chief Casmir Ziomek said the fire department checks area bars at least four times a year plus conducts spot checks. "It's important," he said, "but I can't be there seven days a week.

"Think of the owners' problem too. What if you were there with three or four couples. You'd be pretty mad if you couldn't get in.

"I'm not speaking for the owners, but what if Notre Dame came to Alumni Stadium, would you want to be turned away?"

Reinecke ruined by own honesty

The company later won a favorable settlement of an antitrust suit.

In an emotional pre-sentencing plea, F. Joseph Donohue, Reinecke's lawyer, told the judge that Reinecke had been "destroyed" by his own honesty in cooperating with Watergate prosecutors who sought and won his conviction on perjury charges.

"And so was destroyed the budding career of an able, honest, energetic public servant," Donohue said.

Absentee ballots available today in C.C. concourse

All a student has to do is fill out a very short and simple postcard-type of form and send it to his-her local town or city clerk's office. The clerk will then send back to the student an absentee ballot.

UMass studects interested in voting in the November state election are strongly urged to pick up absentee ballot applications in the Campus Center Concourse today from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

News seminar held tonight

Chris Kertesz, editorial adviser to the Collegian this fall, will hold a news writing seminar tonight at 7 at the Collegian offices in the Student Union.

The seminar is billed as a repeat of last week's session on the basic news story but can be adapted according to the needs and desires of those who turn out.

Kertesz is bureau editor at the Daily Hampshire Gazette, a daily in Northampton. Future seminars will deal with feature stories, news features and other aspects of news and editorial writing.

D'ya wanna work in an election?

Those students interested in working for any democratic candidate are invited to a meeting in room 164 of the Campus Center at 7:30 tonight. At this time the formation of a campus based task force will be discussed.

Rabin warns Egypt

By United Press International

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin warned Egypt and Syria yesterday "the only answer" to any attack with their Soviet-make ground-to-ground missiles against Israeli population centers was counter-strikes on Arab cities.

The Sinai, Golan Height and Jordan River cease-fire lines were quiet. But Beirut newspapers said Israeli artillery shelled the outskirts of Rachaya el Fakhar, Kfar Haman, Halta, el Maria and Dheirjat in Lebanon's southestern border region of Al Arkoub for about 3½ hours during the night.

Rabin's warning coincided with diplomatic reports from the Middle East that the Soviet Union has promised new military supplies to Syria about the $2 billion sent since last year's October war and that this will be supplemented by economic aid and military advisers.

Secret plans banned

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The Senate voted yesterday to ban secret foreign operations by U.S. intelligence agencies except in cases where the President finds such action to be vital to national security.

The Senate added the ban, on a voice vote, to the $2.5 billion foreign aid authorization bill. The prohibition would apply to such agencies as the Central Intelligence Agency, Defense Intelligence Agency and others.

Earlier, the Senate defeated, 68 to 17, an amendment by Sen. James Abourezk, D-S. D., that would have extended an unconditional ban on such activities.

Envoys not for sale

WASHINGTON (AP) - Former White House aide Peter M. Flanigan denied under oath Wednesday that he offered ambassadorships in exchange for contributions to former President Richard M. Nixon's campaigns.

Flanigan's testimony to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which is considering his nomination to be ambassador to Spain, conflicted with that given House impeachment investigators by Herbert Kalmbach, former lawyer for Nixon.

Sen. J. W. Fulbright, chairman of the Foreign Relations Commitee, did not indicate any attempt to resolve the differences.

Veterans aid upped

WASHINGTON (UPI) - House-Senate conferees agreed yesterday on a compromise bill to raise veterans education benefits by 23 per cent and to create a loan program to supplement the benefits.

The measure, estimated to cost, $780 million in the first year, would be retroactive to Sept. 1 to aid GI students already enrolled in colleges.

Gas tax proposed

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Federal energy chief John Sawhill disclosed yesterday he had proposed to the White House that gasoline consumption be reduced by imposing a tax that would later be refunded by the Internal Revenue Service.

He said he suggested to President Ford's advisers that the "refundable fee" be set at 20 to 30 cents a gallon with the motorist filing for a refund through his income tax returns.

"The refund would have to come through the withholding system although other mechanisms would have to be found to refund to people who are not part of the tax system; that is those who don't pay income tax," said the head of the Federal Energy Administration.

"In order to really be effective a fee would have to be somewhere in the 20 to 30 cents a gallon range."

Double jeopardy claim may cancel Ehrlichman's trial

WASHINGTON (UPI) - John D. Ehrlichman claimed yesterday he cannot be prosecuted on Watergate cover-up charges, saying the principle of double jeopardy invalidates two of the five charges against him in the two-day old cover-up trial.

With jury selection proceeding slowly in the courtroom, Ehrlichman's lawyers filed an "affirmative defense of double jeopardy" with trial judge John J. Sirica claiming their client cannot be prosecuted for the cover-up conspiracy because of his earlier conviction in the Ellsberg burglary case.

Sirica, meantime, warned prospective jurors they could be jailed for contempt of court if they fail to declare their true feelings about the case during the jury selection process expected to last several more days.

After eight hours of preliminary screening yesterday Sirica excused 80 persons from jury duty on personal hardship grounds and ordered another 80 to return tomorrow for further individual questioning. Today Sirica will question another 64 prospects who survived Tuesday's first round of preliminary screening, making a total of 144 held over for more screening.

Ehrlichman, a former presidential adviser and one of five defendants in the cover-up trial, was convicted in July of conspiracy and perjury in the 1971 burglary of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrists office by White House "plumbers."

His lawyers did not say why that conviction would bar prosecution for the cover-up, but it appeared they would argue that the Ellsberg break-in and the Watergate cover-up were all part of the same conspiracy. The constitutional principle of double jeopardy means a person cannot be punished twice for the same crime.

The lawyers said only that Erhlichman is "constitutionally immune from prosecution" for the first two counts of the indictment against him, which charge conspiracy and obstruction of justice in the cover-up. He also faces three charges of lying to federal investigators but the double-jeopardy contention did not extend to those charges.

Ehrlichman was sentenced to 20 months to five years imprisonment on the Ellsberg conviction.

The change is coming

By MIKE IZDEPSKI

Rejoice America, for the honeymoon is over! In fact the whole marriage is doomed to die an untimely death on November 5th. Too bad for the aging bride, she was such a lovable if incompetent creature. If only Watergate hadn't shocked the Archie Bunkers of this great republic into reality so brutally! But now even they have joined the ranks in fanning the winds of change.

Too long has this country been run by the old pros, who so far have used politics like a treadmill: making impressive huffs 'n puffs... and getting nowhere, while at the same time trampling on the needs of the American People.

Many would like to nail the blame for this kind of foot-dragging on the Democrat controlled Congress. What these critics fail to recognize is that in the past year alone over a dozen important bills, which could have contributed substantually to the solving of some of the nation's most nagging problems, were actually passed.

Unfortunately, a President, who tended to be personally offended by any piece of legislation, which did not agree to the hilt with his own views, consistently brought down the hatchet on each of these bills by vetoing them.

Lo and behold, Congress can override a veto, but it takes a two-thirds majority in both houses to do it. And the Republicans up to the very end thought it more proper to hide behind the rapidly shrinking coattails of their President, than to come out and push for passage of those bills.

If America is to survive the 200th birthday of its independence, it desperately needs a Congress in which one of the two major parties holds a two-thirds majority in both the House and Senate.

More likely than not some will scream down the idea of a veto-proof Congress as undemorcratic, or possibly even as totalitarian.

Yet most governments in Western Europe are based on just that idea. They call it the parliamentary system.

When British or German voters go to the polls, they determine, which party or coalition of parties should run their country during the next term. This party or coalition then assumes full power of proposing and passing legislation, for there is no one to cast a veto, thus in most cases a simple majority is sufficient for a bill to become law. And should that party or coalition do a poor job or try to abuse its powers, guess who's going to be on the way out come election time?

With a veto-proof majority, the time Congress spends dragging a bill from its proposal to a final vote could be cut down from the average two years to four to six months.

Come November, it is highly probable that the Democrats will control the two-thirds majority in both Houses. The fail-out of Watergate and more recently the Ford pardon, which seems to confirm that while all crooks are pardonable, some are more pardonable than others, have undoubtedly worked against G.O.P. candidates.

The main reason why more and more people will be looking toward the Democrats on election day, is the impressive line-up of youg faces and new ideas. Not only men like former McGovern campaign manager Gary Hart and one-time Attorney General Ramsey Clark, both running for the U.S. Senate, will profit from the present antagonism of the electorate against incumbents, but also women like Connecticut's gubernatorial candidate Ella Grasso and Baltimore councilwoman Barbara Mikulski, who is vying for a Senate seat, will have their say, if everything runs according to the developing trend tbwards "New Politics".

In Massachusetts, the smashing primary victory of Mike Dukakis over his party establishment opponent Robert Quinn is further evidence of the public's growing disenchantment with the jovially frolicking party regulars and what they stand for.

But time is running short. The oil companies and other representatives of big business long have been taking advantage of Congress's current impotence by heating inflation with exorbitant price hikes, while at the same time adding to their already outrageous profits with the help of tax loop-holes.

Now is the time to act. We must realize that only a veto-proof Congress can still save America from bankruptcy and that only the Democrats can currently provide the kind of energetic and upright initiative it takes to run such a Congress. If we do, it just might make all the difference.

Gun control debate

To the Editor:

The headline "Gunhaters meet Thursday" placed over my letter of 9-24 about handgun control was terribly misleading. Lest anyone be upset by its apparent prejudice, I want to clear up any confusion.

The letter was in two parts. I first outlined the growing threat of handguns in America, and introduced "People vs. Handguns;" a Mass. citizen's group working for handgun controls which is starting to organize in this area. Then, as an entirely separate postscript, I mentioned a debate on handgun control that will take place tonight, Thursday, Sept. 26, at 8:00 in the Amherst Junior High Cafeteria. I did not mean to suggest that the debate will in any way be dominated by "gunhaters," as the headline might imply. It will be a fair, bipartisan debate, presenting both sides of the issue. Debating will be Dain Perry of the Mass. Council on Crime and Correction, and Nathan Silverlieb, Director of the Pistol Division of the State Rifle and Pistol Association. "People vs. Handguns" will in no way, nor ever intended to, prejudice the fairness of this event. That headline was placed by the Collegian entirely without my knowledge and consent. We are just encouraging people to attend the debate, listen to both sides, and then make an educated decision on the issue.

Thank you.

Fred Weiss wrong on Arab oil

To the Editor:

We were rather saddened to read Fred Weiss's misinformed column of October first, titled "Ford: act don't talk." The "Arab Shah" would be rather annoyed to be told that he predicted "that the Arabs would be a world power on the scale of West Germany within two decades." Actually what Shah had said was that Iran would be a world power within two decades. Unknown to Fred Weiss is the fact that the Iranians are of Indo-European descent. The Arabs and the Iranians do not share language or cultural traditions. Though both Moslems, they belong to different sects which split almost immediately after Mohammad's death. Thus it is erroneous to speak of an "Arab Shah."

The petroleum price hikes were not a Arab innovation but an Iranian one. During the 1973 Arab oil embargo, though the Iranian oil continued to flow to the West and Israel, Shah took advantage and with the backing of the Oil Producing and Exporting Countries [OPEC], which by the way includes non-Arab producers such as Iran [second largest exporter], Venezuela [third largest exporter], Nigeria [sixth largest exporter] and Indonesia, the base price of oil for taxation was increased. Saudi Arabia, the largest exporter of crude oil from the start was against price hikes but was convinced to go along. Shah's logic, in increasing the price of oil was two fold; the natural resources of the developing countries, for too long, had been ravaged by the industrialist West, and it was about the time for the West, and it was about the time for the West to recognize the importance of this precious mineral and stop wasting it on gas guzzlers like Cadillacs and Mark IVs. Shah envisions a more efficient use of petroleum through petrochemical industries. And certainly he has every right to want the profits for betterment of livelihood of Iranian masses. Iranians and the Arabs, sitting on black gold, have simply been too poor for too long.

It may also help to note that the U.S. reliance on Shah and his policies are that Washington has relegated to Iran the power of watching over the affairs of the Persian Gulf region, which supplies 80 percent of world's oil imports. Among the most recent weaponry sold to Iran are F14's, which are the most advance planes delivered to the U.S. Navy, and no other army, outside the U.S. and Iran, will have them for a while. And "poor" Arabs? When was the last time the U.S. sold arms, in any meaningful quantity, to them? Only Jordan and Saudi Arabia [Pro-West and U.S. allies] have purchased weapons from this country; the rest rely mainly on the Soviet Union and on France and Great Britain to a lesser extent.

To argue that Shah, by increasing the price of oil, envisions the demise of the West is pure nonsense. He is too dependent on the U.S. arms, and too worried about his northern neighbour, the USSR, to even think abot such possibilities. As he has noted many times, he hopes that he West, particularly the U.S. experiments with alternative sources of energy. Shah certainly is. Although Iran is the fourth largest producer of oil in the world, Shah recently purchased five nuclear plants, from France, for production of energy.

Moreover, as proponents of equality among all men and nations, we don't understand why one should be worried that the U.S. "no longer holds all the cards." No nation ever did, but besides all nations are suppose to share the cards. Master and slave roles, we are told everyday, belong in the Dark Ages. A meaningful understanding, in international relations, can come about only if the major powere recognize the rights of smaller nations. As Shah recently noted in Canberra, Australia, "My country does not want to dominate any other country. We don't need it . . . On the contrary, we would like to see all these countries completely free from outside domination."

Being ripped off

To the Editor:

Whenever anyone discovers that I'm a University of Idaho student on exchange at UMASS for one semester, they ask. "Why did you come all the way out here?" That's a good question -- I'm beginning to wonder myself. I expected administrative problems in changing schools. [After all, the hours I spent on Orchard Hill, that night, looking for my housing assignment since I was never informed by mail, weren't all that bad -- even though I discovered I was supposed to be in Southwest.] The opportunity to experience a totally different part of the country and take classes not offered in Idaho made it all worthwhile. Until ...

Sept. 5, My 10-speed bicycle and that of a friend from Idaho, were stolen. They were discovered by the police in the room of two men from my own dorm. We still do not have the bikes as they are being held as evidence until the trial. It rather irritating since we brought them all the way through Canada on the back of the car and have never had the opportunity to ride them.

Mid-September. The sub-master key to the top two floors of my dorm was stolen, putting everyone in mortal fear of losing everything they owned. Sept. 28, the university went to the expense of changing all the locks.

Sept. 20. It was discovered that mail has been stolen from dorm boxes. One man lost a personal letter that had been seen in the box earlier that day.

And finally, Sept. 30. The battery was cut out from our automobile-effectively wiping out our other form of transportation. They could have at least disconnected it. Now we have to buy new cables, too.

That's pretty discouraging record for one month. I lived twenty-one years in Idaho and that was one of my least worries. How do people spend their lives here without becoming hopelessly paranoid, never trusting anyone? What is it that breeds the desire to take other peoplle's belongings? For a place that chatters about communication, working for equality, rights for everyone -- there certainly is little concern for one's fellow man. It's taught me one thing. I appreciate Idaho, now. I just hope the overflow from the East doesn't move out West and bring all their problems with them!

Learning exchange

To the Editor:

Is there something, a hobby or skill that you've always wanted to learn but have never done so because of lack of money, motivation, or because you couldn't find anyone to teach you?. Have you ever wanted to share your interests and skills with others but found yourself limited? Do you like learning from people in a non-academic environment away from large lectures and textbooks? If you've answered yes to any of these questions then the Learning exchange, an alternative to structured education, is for you.

The Learning Exchange, located in the Amherst Community Resource Center at the Jones Library started about two years ago with the intent to help individuals in the Amherst and surrounding communities get together by sharing, learning and talking about their interests which range from discussions on books to tutoring to playing tennis.

People with similar or complimentary interests are matched together by the Learning Exchange service. All one needs to do is register with the exchange by filling out an "interest card." There's also an opportunity to indicate what you know that other people would like to know. The more specific you get with your interest, the easier it is to find someone with matching interests.

Currently the Learning Exchange has a catalogue with over 400 registered interests ranging from ESP to just about anything you can think of.

Besides personal satisfaction and the opportunity to meet people, an added attraction of this service is that your studies can be supplemented and enriched by someone who knows or specializes in your particular interest.

People anxious to register with the Exchange can do so by coming down to the Amherst Community Resource Center at the Jones Library or by calling 253-2591. If you'd enjoy helping the Exchange run, volunteers are desperately needed to perform a variety of functions. Academic credit is available. All that you need is interest and just a little free time to gain satisfaction by helping others help themselves to a different kind of learning experience. Individuals wishing to volunteer may do so by calling or visiting the exchange and talking to Mark Cheren, director of the Exchange

Medicine needs "people"

"Those for whom a child's mind is a sealed book, and who see no divinity in a child's smile, would read such words in vain: While for anyone who has ever loved one true child, no words are needed...Nothing would be hoped for but a little child's whispered thanks...". Lewis Carroll described thusly why he wrote Alice's Adventures Underground, the basis for his Wonderland book. It is the actual story which he, Lewis Carroll, told to Alice Liddell on their frequent boating trips in Oxford, England.

Carroll was a mathematician and the connection between that man who taught math and the man who wrote that beautiful story is a very curious one indeed. And yet I find it parallel to my feelings about the connection between theoretical sciences like Biochemistry, Zoology, or Microbiology and my desire to be a family doctor, a G.P.

I see a need for good, people-oriented doctors in this country. A family doctor must be highly competent in his medical studies but almost more important is that he have a good understanding of people. This understanding can not come from textbooks, it must come from living with people and going through crises with them. It comes from meeting and listening to people and working out with them their problems. The subjects of child rearing, sickness, and death are ultimately some of the most important in a person's life. That person deserves a doctor who is a "people" person not a book person.

If I could urge anything in regard to potential doctors, I would urge them to work at an understanding of people, not at maintaining the highest cum imaginable. From all indications Medical Schools look very carefully at grades but I would pray that grades would never the the substance of the admission decision.

I would urge all people who have a genuine interest in medicine to pursue it. The question should be one of ability and desire, not gradepoint average. So no matter what your cum is, keep your interest in medicine. We must also remember that the health profession is a large one and being a physician is not the only option. The Pre-Med committee has responded to this by enlarging and including as members people from departments in non-physician areas of the health profession. They have seen and answered a real need for counselling in all areas of the health profession.

The Pre-Med situation on this campus is very similar to that on many campuses. I am constantly terrified to see to what lengths Medical Schools have driven young adults. By sitting in a room and studying constantly one stifles his or her development and in no way allows feeling for people to develop. When a person sinks to the level of cut-throat competitiveness nothing is gained and much is lost.

We must begin to be human beings first and Pre-Meds second. I say that being a Pre-Med myself. We are destined to deal with people who are in trouble. Their very future and happiness is threatened by sickness and we must be able to deal with them compassionately and with competance. That compassion is not book-learned. It must be learned by being with people. We must work with the Pre-Med Committee to see that we, as a University, send the best candidates we can on to become our doctors. The Medical needs of this country demand it, and we must comply.

The new politics

It's a disturbing fact of life that politics is considered the most corrupt of professions — that those who regulate our every day activities and represent our legislative interests are, for the most part, corrupt old men with white hair and mistresses. It's perhaps more disturbing that there are fools like myself that plan on making politics their life's work.

But it's true that if you travel across this incredible land of ours, you'll find on nearly every campus a few staunch believers that all is not lost — that the New Politics is still alive — the politics of George McGovern, Adlai Stevenson and Henry Wallace — the politics that teaches that government of, by and for the people can be a reality, that freedom of the press is a fundamental part of a free society, and that politicians don't have to rely on illicit deals to win elections.

The New Politics looks upon winning an election as a matter of knowledge and skills. It's members look upon themselves as the true patriots of modern American government. It can be found at rallies and caucuses, at supermarkets and bars, and yes, even in smoke filled rooms.

But the atmosphere of the New Politics is as different as the smoke in those rooms. It's an atmosphere of expression and one that involves a deep feeling of participation. It's a mood that the future of America lies in the ability of the New Politics to keep itself alive. It's a dream that politics can be an acceptable occupation and that "serving the people" is more than just a worn out slogan.

The future of the New Politics depends on its ability to perpetuate itself without submitting to the corrupt pressures that surround it. It relies on the idealism that is so often criticized in the pragmatic political game, and it rests on the loyalty of its proponents to its doctrines. The eventual outcome of its survival will probably be a great step backwards in American political history — back to the days of "certain unalienable rights."

Civil disobedience: End of USA?

By ERIC FLEET

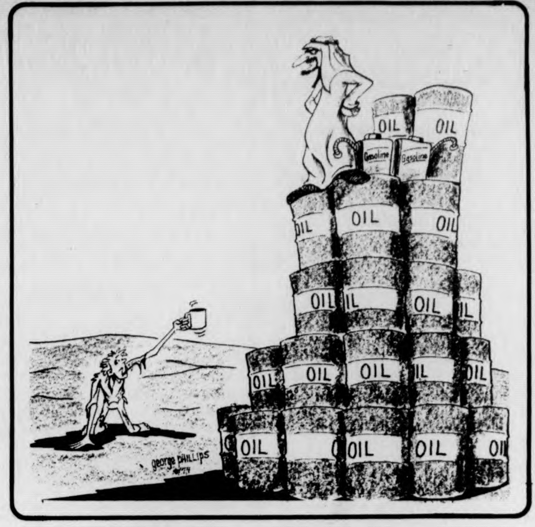
The concept of civil disobedience has been ruining the American way of life for the past ten years. To some that is good news. To most of us, however, it is tragic. For too long special interest groups and fanatic individuals have taken the law into their own hands, usually in spite of the will of the majority. Our judicial system has failed to make any substantive decisions on this question to date, as seen in the recent Lovejoy trial. This failure to act could destroy the American system at some future date.

The issue of civil disobedience has created a serious conflict in the national consciousness. The United States Government must oppose disobedience to maintain order in our society. Yet, because our nation was born out of civil disobedience, it is difficult to explain to citizens why they cannot break the law when they don't like something. It is not enough to say that circumstances alter cases. The U.S. was founded on the unbending principal that, "whenever any form of government becomes destructive ... it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundations on such principals ... AS TO THEM SHALL SEEM MOST LIKELY TO EFFECT THEIR SAFETY AND HAPPINESS." This is what Americans believe. Who is to say how far a person can go? Either it is left to the individual or the Revolution was a farce. This is the inherent conflict which must be settled.

I am not an advocate of civil disobedience now or at any time, past or future. The theory of civil disobedience is what leads to acts such as the assassinations of President Kennedy, Martin Luther King and others. If the government does not determine how much is enough (i.e. peaceful protest) then these acts will forever remain a part of the American scene. When the ends justify the means ANYTHING goes.

The judiciary must put down the history books and look away from the glorious days of the Revolution. They must face up to the realities of our society, that individuals are not capable of deciding what is extreme, and stop the destruction of life and property in America.

Eric Fleet is a Collegian Commentator



The Collegian... if you read it, pay for it.

Taxation is the backbone of the American economy. It's a system where everyone supposedly pays his fair share of the cost of government services as determined by the Federal government. It's a system where everyone must comply if it is to be successful.

It's the same here at the University. When a service is performed, everyone who receives benefit from that service must pay his share. The college newspaper is no exception.

With a circulation of 18,000, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian has three sources of revenue:

1. Advertising receipts (roughly $178,000)
2. Undergraduate student activity fees (roughly $78,000)
3. Graduate Student Senate donations (an equitable sum currently under proposal)

On an individual basis, the cost is $4.63 per student for an entire academic year. Faculty members are offered delivery on a yearly basis for $9.00. Of this total, roughly $4.40 is for the cost of delivery services, the balance of the $4.60 going directly into the Collegian's publication budget. In essence, the rate assessed to faculty members is the same as for students.

At present four hundred faculty and staff are paying their share, but many others regularly pick up free copies at the student union and elsewhere. This is unfair. Is it right for students to foot the total bill for a service which benefits others as well? Doesn't it make more sense for this expense to be spread among all the readership, including faculty and staff?

Some faculty members question why they should pay for the Collegian. The answer is self-evident. They read it, they should pay for it. Yes, they can go on furtively picking up a paper in the Student Union, and we won't have their picture on the front page of the next issue, but they should begin to think about what they are doing. Every time they do so, they're cheating all the paying students at the University.

Now is the time for all to accept their financial responsibility. As students, we cannot condone subsidizing faculty and staff at the expense of ourselves.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

Thursday, October 3

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — You will have to be strong of character today if you are to successfully resist opposition to your involvement in new endeavors.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Make up your mind to the fact that you will have to do battle, at least verbally, today if you are to have things your own way. Seek aid.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — An excellent day for getting ahead socially — but only if you are wise enough to realize an opportune moment when it appears.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A change in business or profession could bring you nearer to your goal. Take care, however, not to unsettle family or friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Financial affairs may suffer from inattention. Be sure you know precisely what your goal is if an when you turn funds over to another.

PISCES (Feb. 18-March 20) — A day for making friends of enemies. Don't hesitate to share information as to how to get ahead under the present circumstances.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Personal relationships are important to your success at this time. Take care not to alienate one whom you can use to your ultimate benefit.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Favored at this time are all cultural activities. Artistic interests can be indulged without any penalty. Take your time where children are concerned.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You should be able to outdo the competition today — if you are careful to meet it on your own ground. Don't try to stray far from home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Present interests may not be those that can head you toward definite financial gain. Take another look at an interest shelved some time ago.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A question of personal integrity brings you face to face with a moral dilemma. You know what you must do under the circumstances; do it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — So long as you are aware of the fact that you begin the competition somewhat "in the hole," you should be able to work your way out of difficulties.

REP. COLLINS

Amherst State Rep. Collins to debate Atkins in S-west

Democratic State Representative James Collins of Amherst and his Republican challenger William Atkins, also of Amherst, will meet each other for the first time in an open debate tonight beginning at 6:30 in Pierpont Hall in the Southwest residential area of the UMass campus.

The debate is being sponsored by the Political Campaigns Seminar of Project 10, the University's experimental college.

Rep. Collins is a first-term legislator serving on the House Education Committee. He is also a member of the liberal Democratic Study Group and was recently appointed to serve on a special legislative commission investigating conditions at Belchertown State School.

Atkins has served several terms as a member of the Amherst-Pelham Regional School Committee and is presently a member of the Amherst Finance Committee.

Seminar instructor Kenneth Mosakowski invites the public to attend tonight's debate and participate in the question-and-answer period which will follow.

GOOFING OFF -- Orioles' Boog Powell has a little fun during regular season finale against Detroit as he peers into novelty pen. Baltimore clinched East title Monday, and meets Oakland Saturday in the American League pennant.

Red Sox fall 8-6 in season finale

BOSTON [UPI] - Rusty Torres' home run and Oscar Gamble's run-scoring double in the ninth inning lifted Gaylord Perry and the Cleveland Indians to an 8-6 victory over the Boston Red Sox Wednesday in the season finale for both teams.

Perry went the distance despite allowing 10 hits to finish the season with a 21-13 mark while Dick Pole (1-1) took the loss.

Boston tied the score 6-6 with three runs in the eighth but Torres led off the ninth with his third home run to put the Indians ahead for good. Rookie Duane Kuiper followed with a single and Gamble knocked in his second run of the game with a double.

The Indians also got a homer from future manager Frank Robinson, his 22nd of the season and 574th of his major league career.

Rick Burleson, who had tied the score in the eighth with a run-scoring double, smacked his fourth homer of the season, a solo blast, in the fourth for boston.

Leron Lee drove in two runs for Cleveland with a seventh inning double while Robinson, who will be named the first black manager in major league history Thursday, drove in a run with a sacrifice fly.

PC depth downs Harriers; JV's sweep first five spots

By SCOTT HAYES
Sport Staff

The strategy involved in cross-country running is simple. The idea is to get five runners across the finish line before the opposition does. The UMass harriers had trouble carrying out that basic principle and, of course, were beaten by Providence on Tuesday afternoon.

A 41-second gap between the number four and five runners proved to be the downfall of the Minutemen runners, as the Friars placed six runners between the third UMass finisher, John McGrail, and Devin Croft, the number five runner.

Randy Thomas and teammates came through with some outstanding individual performances, but Providence showed why it gained the respect of Boston area coaches, riding excellent backup strength to victory.

Five runners will be battling for the all-important number five spot on the team. Devin Croft and Tom Maguire are both coming off a two week layoff due to colds, and other hopefuls include Frank Noto, Chris Farmer and Phil Broughton. The competition may help strengthen the team because one of the runners will have to earn the position. According to co-captain Randy Thomas, "Whoever wants it most will get it." The rivalry should bring times down and narrow the gaps between team members.

Bill Gillin, the squad's other co-captain, singled out the performance of Providence's Stetson Arnold as a big factor in the loss to the Friars. Arnold was questionable as the fifth man for PC, but the first year runner came through, beating Tom Wilson by thirteen seconds.

Both Gillin and Thomas agreed that Providence was impressive, and stated that the team was disappointed at first, but then the runners realized how well they actually performed. Gillin cited the fact that the squad has been a better team over the second half of the schedule in recent years. Gillin also mentioned Tom Wilson's gutsy performance and commented, "We were beat by a good team. There's no disgrace in losing to a team like Providence." In fact, the loss may provide the harriers with added incentive in the New Englands, because most likely, UMass will be entering the championship meet as underdogs. Faced with the same situation a year ago, the Minutemen runners captured the coveted New England title. Gillin feels that he and his teammates can bounce back and beat Providence in the New Englands if the team has a good day.

Thomas noted that the Providence meet showed that the squad has plenty of hard work ahead. "We definitely have the potential, we just have to develop it before the New Englands," added the team's top harrier.

Ironically, the junior varsity team, composed solely of freshmen, captured the first five places in dropping JV squads from Providence and Harvard JV's 15-50. Only thirteen seconds separated the top five runners, and nine runners dipped below the old course record. The harriers upped their record to 3-0 as UMass' Cliff Staples broke the previous record by 37 seconds. Staples lowered the standard for the course to 15:21. Bob Neil, Frank Carroll, Rolf Myer and Dino Lamacchia took the next four places, as the first year runners finished ahead of ex-varsity and New England finisher of two years ago, Chick Kasouf and Irish Junior Steeplechase champion Phil Campbell. Don Fisher and Tom Wolff placed seventh and ninth for the JV runners, and looking at the results of Tuesday's meet, the freshmen team probably would have beat Harvard's varsity if they ran against the Crimson.

UMass Sailors win regatta

By MDC Staff

The second annual 5-College Regatta hosted by Smith College was held last Sunday under variable wind conditions on the Ox Bow in Northampton.

Six races were set up each running for about 45 minutes. During the first three races winds ran from 5-12 knots. There were a total of 6 boats involved in each race.

Bill Kaull led UMass most of the way with 3 firsts with crews: Dave Herman, John Gould, and Sandy Atlas. Other skippers were Jim McMath, Victor Retynsky, Bill Sheedy, and Pete Kirh. Crews were Jean Retynsky, Mike Cohen, Craig Nickerson, Rich Austin, and Patti Tiunan.

During the second race a Smith boat collided with a UM boat and a protest was levied by UMass. As a result, UM won on a right of way ruling and Smith's no. 6 boat was disqualified.

President of the club Phil Sudenfield attributed much of the success of the day to Bill Kaull and to the large turnout of team members that competed. The originally FCSCB sponsored event had final tally of UM 37, Smith 45, and Mt. Holyoke 46.

Booters fail in home opener as Keene St. controls game, 3-0

To a stranded mackerel watching yesterday's soccer game from behind the net, this is how Keene State's second goal past goalie Marc Hanks looked. Photo was taken, of course, through a fish-eye lens.

By BEN CASWELL
Sports Staff

The unscored upon streak ended early and the undefeated streak finale soon followed as the UMass Soccer Minutemen were soundly shut-out by the Keene State Owls 3-0 yesterday.

In a game in which the outcome was not really ever in question Keene State coach Ron Butcher commented that, "we played our best game of the year today. We were passing very well, we played an aggressive defense and we stopped Tom Coburn. That was our main objective of the day and I think we carried it out to its fullest."

Keene's razor sharp passing showed up quite early in the game and they had a few shots at goalie Marc Hanks that he was equal to. UMass fullback Danny Ouellette broke up a couple of in close passes but it seemed that it was only a matter of time before Keene's pressure would break through the Minutemen defense. And that was the case. Before the game was three minutes old forward Jose Neves of Keene State took a short pass from halfback Mark McEvoy and fired it up high to Hank's right to make the score 1-0. Hanks could not be faulted on this shot that was perfectly placed and fired quite quickly.

Unfortunately this seemed like it would be a sign of things to come and it was. For the remainder of the first half Keene State virtually controlled the play except for a few instances. UMass forwards combined for a few nice pass plays but they could not convert any of them. Keene State goalie Brad Steurer was not severely tested too many times but there were a few instances where he had to make some fairly difficult saves to preserve his shutout. One of these was a corner kick play near the end of the first half that he went quickly to his right to scoop.

Overall in the first half the play was controlled by the Owls. UMass was having alot of trouble moving the ball past midfield and it seemed that wherever a Minuteman was there were two Owls. UMass' wings were passing the ball to Keene Staters more often than to their teammates. The score at the half was 1-0 Keene State and it would turn out that that would be all they need.

In the second half the wind changed but that was all that did. The wind was certainly a factor though. In the first half it was across wind that was not affecting the play that much. In the second half it seemed that the gods too were against UMass as the wind switched and was blowing strongly into the Minutemen goal. Any kicks that the goaltenders would make during the rest of the game would be badly brought down by the strong winds.

The scoring in the second half was started with a strange play in front of the UMass goal mouth. A Keene State player lofted in a high shot, there was a few player collisions out front, and all of a sudden the ball was in the net. That made the score 2-0 and all that was really left was to play the game out.

Another Keene State goal came on a bounce shot that beat Hanks to his left. It seemed that the angle of the shot was not cut enough by the goaltender on this play.

Coach of UMass Al Rufe said, "they came out really good in the first half. They were very quick in the first five minutes and that was where the game was decided."

"Our passing game was not that good," he continued, "we had a lot of kicks up the middle that were to nobody and we did not use our wings enough. We have got nine games to play still, what we have got to do is sit down and work out our playing as a unit a little more. We have a game Saturday versus W.P.I. and we have got to get back up for it."

QUICK SHOTS--UMass' next game is Saturday versus W.P.I. here at 11:00 a.m. These two teams tied 1-1 last year.

Pirates grab NL East flag

PITTSBURGH [UPI] - The Pittsburgh Pirates won the National League East title Wednesday night when they tied the game on a freak strike out - passed ball in the ninth inning and then beat the Chicago Cubs 5-4 in the 10th on a bases-loaded infield single by Manny Sanguillen.

For the Pirates, who spotted Chicago a four-run lead in the first and didn't catch up until Cubs catcher Steve Swisher led an apparent game-ending strikeout get past him in the ninth for the passed ball that tied the score, it was their fifth Eastern Division championship in six seasons.

They won it by 1 ½ games over the St. Louis Cardinals, who led until a week ago. St. Louis was rained out of its scheduled regular-season finale Wednesday night at Montreal.

Chicago reliever Ken Frailing struck out Richie Hebner to start the bottom of the 10th but Al Oliver then lined an opposite field triple into the leftfield corner.

Willie Stargell and Gene Clines, pinch hitting for Miguel Dilone, then were intentionally walked and righthander Oscar Zomora was brought in to face Sanguillen.

Sanguillen fouled the first pitch for a strike, then sent a slow grounder in the direction of third base. Bill Madlock tried for a bare-handed pickup but couldn't come up with the ball. Oliver scored the winning run and many in the crowd of 22,725, shivering and rowdy in 38 degree weather, stormed onto the field.

The Pirates' victory assured Pittsburgh of playing host for the opening of the NL Playoffs Saturday against Western Division Champion Los Angeles.

Trailing 4-2 starting the bottom of the ninth, the first two Pittsburgh batters--Richie Zisk and Sanguillen--drew walks from Cubs starter Rick Reuschel.

Following a sacrifice by Ed Kirkpatrick, Dilone, who ran for Zisk, scored when Dave Parker hit a bouncer off Reuschel's hand and was thrown out by second baseman Rob Sperring. Sanguillen took third on the play and then came the strikeout-passed ball incident that may someday take its place alongside the passed ball by Mickey Ownes that killed the Brooklyn Dodgers in the 1941 world series.

ATLANTA [UPI] — Home run champ Hank Aaron hit his 733rd homer in what was expected to be his last appearance at the plate as a Brave Wednesday night in Atlanta's season finale against Cincinnati.

When he came up with one out in the seventh, the crowd rose to its feet and gave him a roaring ovation and he responded by hitting a 0-1 pitch off lefthander Rollie Eastwick down the leftfield line and over the fence at the 330-sign.

It must be a fairy tale

The Miami...Fish. The New York...Midgets. The Los Angeles...Sheep.

That is what their names might have been anyway, because that is what our boys made them look like each of the past three weeks. By our boys I mean the team that this past Sunday won more hearts than Shirley Temple ever did, that made more magic than Merlin the Magician, that did something more unbelieveable than jumping a canyon, (or trying to jump a canyon).

The team is the New England (sshhh, somebody might hear me and think I am crazy), no damn it, I am not crazy, the team is the New England (can it be that I really have flipped my lid or is this all a Communist plot to undermine the government and get that, oh pardon me, why of course I'll pardon anybody, jock out of office), the team is the New England, our very own Foxboro freak outs, the team is the New England Patriots. But I'll tell you they sure have not been too patriotic of late. I mean what right do they have to be messing things up like they are.

First they go and beat the World Champions, kind of like Cuba really firing those missiles at us way back when football was what you played during recess and after school. Then they go and beat our vice-president to be's home club (horror of horrors, they better watch it or he'll buy the team and ship it to India to start a new league, the World Starvation League). Then the ultimate, they go out and without even thinking about the complications of defying the oddsmaking Scotty the Greek Hayes they beat the team that was picked in the preseason polls as the team most likely to rip your head off and the team it would be the best idea not to show up against.

Are these guys for real? Is this the team that was down in the dregs (the dregs? even that is a compliment) of football society last year? Is this the team that everyone thought would be better off forfeiting this year's schedule completely? It has to be. I mean it looks the same or actually it appears to be the same. What must have happened is something similar to what happened to that beautiful fake-out favorite of yesteryear.

"Hi, hello, how are you, what's happening, I am your fairy football phantom," said a figure quite heavy, heavy set that is, and dressed so that he definitely looked like an athletic supporter.

"I am here to help out your team," he continued from afar. "What you need is a dose of this potion I just happen to have in my helmet. It is made of an ancient concoction of the blood and sweat of former gridiron greats. It will make your squad arise from its present state and achieve feats never dreamed of by man or beast."

Obviously our football favorites took the potion and obviously in overdose quantities. The Pats are doing those things that are only just dreamed of. This team that was last in the vaunted pass rush defense last season (our grandmothers could have gained 100 yards in a game against them never mind O.J. Simpson) is now first in that same department. Their offense which was not much too marvel at last season also has taken a turn for the super. Ever try and tackle a miniature Mac truck? Herron has set this squad running game as straight as it ever been. And the front line, well if Plunkett had any more time to throw he might fall asleep before he got the pass off. And John Smith, the Patriots are thinking about letting him go because he keeps losing the balls when he kicks them out of the stadium.

What all this does lead up to is a 14 point favorite over the Colts for this week and not being bored until the Celts and Bruins get started.

It must be a fairy tale.

Sam Lovejoy & the tower of power

"The plant will not be built"

by Mike Kostek

It was last February 22 that Sam Lovejoy loosened the guy wires holding up a thin 550 foot high data collecting tower erected by Northeast Utilities, the proposed builder of two nuclear plants in Montague, an interesting collection of hamlets fifteen miles from Amherst. The crash made by the falling tower has echoed through this Valley for nine months now, and the sound waves are building in intensity rather than declining. Indeed, they seem to have established as Lovejoy claims, "the beginning of civil disobedience in the environment movement."

Samuel Lovejoy, 28, was found innocent last week. He had been charged with malicious destruction of personal property, and was freed as the judge decreed the prosecution had not proved the tower to be personal property rather than "real" property. The penalty for destroying personal property is up to five years. The maximum penalty for real property destruction is six months. The prosecution went for it all, the big five, and lost.

There are several other proposed plants being fought in other areas of the nation, but none being fought in the maverick manner of Montague's. The others are Liberal, Straight fighters, conventional in ways and means. What Sam is ostentatiously the head of is a unique movement designed to bring about wholesale changes in the way of life for Montague and the surrounding area. By denying the plant, Sam is saying yes to an entire new system.

The following interview was conducted August 27, 1974 in the Nuclear Information Office in downtown Montague, and September 30, 1974 over the phone.

Below The Salt: This is a fascinating, fascinating conflict going on here in Montague. You've got a moribund town being 'brought back to life' through this nuclear power plant, and you have all the elements the town opposes anyway — hippies, liberals, college professors — trying to take this great boon away from them. A classic struggle.

Sam Lovejoy: It's all based on education. The people you worked with this summer on the Montague Highway Department just aren't taught to handle the world they're living in. And that's the entire fucking use of education, that's the entire basis of it: human expansion and the ability to deal with what's out there, those are the two things. So you've got bootlicks running around out there that just don't know what to do.

The whole idea of me handling my own case is, well, even lawyers think I'm out of my mind. Civil disobedience and all that, I think I should be handling my own case. Everybody in society thinks you gotta have a lawyer. For one reason: these people were never taught in school. The function of schools should be teaching how to add, subtract, read, write and all that, but they should be taught the simple rudiments of law, like handing in your own deed and being able to handle a simple land transaction between two human beings without paying $300 to some lawyer.

That's where it all comes down to. Even with these two petition drives. We're going around with these two petitions, one opposed to the plant in Montague, and the other one asking that our state senator, it couldn't be more weak and moderate (Sam assumes a weak and moderate voice), asking that the senator give a resolution asking for the shutting down and dismantling of Rowe and Vernon (two nuke plants thirty miles from Montague).

First, people won't sign it, even though this is only a petition drive to put the thing on the ballot, in other words, they're not even taking a position by putting their signature on it; they're helping the Democracy that they tout so highly.

The second thing is that even if it gets on, it'll probably get shot down by the Secretary of State, who's completely paranoid about tampering inter-state (Vernon is in Vermont). Which is total bullshit, 'cause this is a resolution that has no binding, legal effect, it's just like a sense of the society at the moment. It's like a poll of the legislature.

BTS: Just like the resolution in favor of the plant passed 3-1 by Montague last March ...

SL: Not really, as that showed that a quarter of the town was adamantly opposed to the plant. And that's where there's a funny turnaround. Everything in this society is geared for a certain amount of momentum, in that what you see in the end of that vote is that since a majority of the town voted for it, there's no hassle involved. Northeast Utilities (the proposed builder) is already coming in with the plant. So a vote in favor does nothing. But a vote in opposition, if and when — and we will have a majority of the people in this town opposed to this plant — as soon as that happens, suddenly everything changes, because then this town will be on record and be willing to hire a lawyer to stop the plant. Once that happens, the town as a legal identity will be willing to stand in opposition to the plant. That's never happened before.

BTS: And those people across the street (gestures to a green van from Rapunzel's organization, formerly known as the Brotherhood of the Spirit), they make for another interesting variable.

SL: (laughs uproariously), then assumes an official, spiritual voice filled with hollowness) But they're not political. They're spiri-tu-al. They're worried about inner self. They're not concerned with external reality ... (drops line)

BTS: I hope you know that most people in town see no difference between them and you. And they despise them.

SL: I know, I know, I realized that, and it's always blown my mind. But that's cool, cause that means that I'm dragging them in rather than their dragging 'round with me.

BTS: The prevailing party line with them seems to be in favor of the plant. They're in favor of anything they say is helping man progress.

SL: There're some over there who are against the plant, the freaks over there ...

BTS: They certainly are ...

SL: Some of them are freaks, the rest are just assholes. The vast majority of them believe Michael's (Rapunzel) line that you don't engage in politics if you're a spiritual hoolie. That's his corruption ...

BTS: Have you had any contact, any dealings with them in this whole business?

SL: A couple. They've all been dismal failures and disgusting. They're hip capitalists. From my view, those people aren't much different from the people working on the Highway department. There you've got yourself one hell of a conflict.

BTS: I guess so!

SL: And I'm not saying I'm not spiritual. I'm not saying the people on the Highway Department aren't spiritual. They're just so confused.

BTS: Who has the final say about the plant?

SL: Nobody does.

BTS: Nobody?

SL: Well, the AEC (Atomic Energy Commission) does, but they're nobody. They're a crock of shit organization if I ever saw one.

BTS: Legally, can the AEC put a plant in a town if the town votes against it?

SL: Yes. Totally. Emminent domain.

BTS: But they wouldn't if a majority of the town were opposed ...

SL: No, when it comes to the nukes, no, they don't want that. And I'm not crazed like some of the people who would run over there and do some sabotage when the uranium is in the plant. And that would be a nightmare, 'cause that's involuntary for everybody around the area. If that tower had any uranium in it, I wouldn't have gotten near the goddamn thing.

BTS: Do you think Montague will actually vote against it?

SL: Definitely. Definitely. I'm an optimist. You saw the pessimistic side of the town working on the Highway Department. Do you think I'm going to be able to penetrate them?

BTS: No way.

SL: Well, you see, you're basically a pessimist, but you've got some reality over there. I don't think all the people in the town are like the Highway

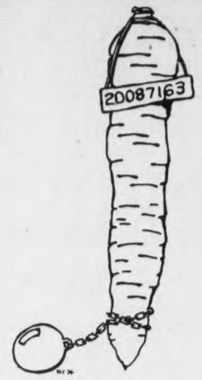
None dare call them carrots!



by Daniel Finneran

Once upon a time the annual meeting of The Royal Order of Knights of The Sacred American Standard was disrupted by a man with carrots tied to his fingers.

In the middle of a speech by The Grand, Exalted, and Mostly High American Standard, the man quietly walked into the Grand Ballroom of the DC Hilton. Tied to the first two fingers of his left hand were two carrots dangling from two seperate pieces of string. For several seconds he just stood in the back, and then, as quietly as he entered, left. For a full minute those in the Ballroom were speechless; that such a thing could happen in America was more than they could stand, so they sat down. No longer able to continue, the meeting was adjourned. That night the red lights burned late.

Hearing of the incident, the Vice Prexy called a Press Conference for two o'clock the next day.

"It is," he said, "much more than just an attack upon our way of life. What happened was a deliberatedly planned personal insult. It was no secret that I was to appear at the Knight's convention tonight. It is also known that I cannot knowingly be in the presence of carrots without becoming violently ill. If you stop and ponder the meaning of last night's outrage you will understand why I have asked the FBI to investigate."

Fulfilling the Vee Pee's request, the FBI quickly launched a five alarm investigation. After a week of questioning almost sober Knight's, the FBI called off the search. The final report said that the incident was likely a trick perpetrated by the other party.

Two weeks later the stranger struck again. Before the second appearence only the government seemed determined to bring the offender to justice. But after his second attack only the most unpatriotic Americans did not clamor for his arrest.

It was during the coronation of that year's Miss. America that the villian quietly walked into the back of the Atlantic City auditorium being used. This time, instead of hanging from string, the carrots were tied directly to the first two fingers of his left hand. He stayed in the back for a while, then stepped forward and waved his left hand at newly coronated Miss. A! Overcome with shcok, she fainted. At the same time a hush fell over the auditorium; and for the first time in the many years he had been Master of Ceremonies, the teeth of Bert Parks could not be seen.

Under much public pressure, the FBI resumed the investiagtion. Anything having anything to do with carrots was carefully scrutinized; vegtables stands were staked out, gardens were bugged, and Playboy Bunnies were frisked frequently. But to no avail, no clue could be found.

Two months had passed since the "carrot man", as he was being called, had made headlines. That night the Prezz was to be on national tv; his speech was to explain why-that when he said we weren't, we really were. To make matters short in the middle of the Big Pee's speech the "carrot man" appeared once agin. This to the great horror of those present, and the ten or twelve ppeople watching at home.

For this appearence he had tied ten carrots to his ten fingers. To this day nobody knows how he did it. Calmly, he walked up to the Prexy and waved his becarroted digits in the face of the Main Pee, a direct violation of a recently passed amendment to the Constitution. He then looked into the camera, blew a kiss, sang two verses of "Hooray for Captain Spaulding", and bit the tips off all the carrots. In a matter of seconds he was surrounded by SS men, who quickly carried him from the room.

As he was passing through a door, the Veep (remember him) approached. Getting close enough to speak, and fighting an urge to throw up the VP asked, "Just what do you think you're trying to prove?"

Wherupon the "carrot man" replied, "Buzz off before I shove a carrot in your ear, or some less mentionable orifice."

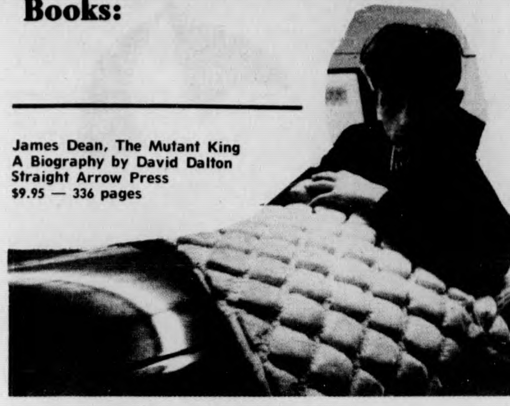
James Dean: Haunting Star

James Dean, The Mutant King
A Biography by David Dalton
Straight Arrow Press
$9.95 — 336 pages



When they shut the lid it squashes your nose.

reviewed by Frederic Charles Weiss

In his pictures, James Dean let the same kind of emotion pour out that Salinger's fictional Holden Caulfield made so popular in Catcher In the Rye. The first time that I saw Dean play the part of Caleb Trask in the film classic East of Eden, I noted that finally there was someone who "understood what the struggle to find truth in a world of false propriety and hypocrisy was all about." The fact that Dean had been dead for over a decade seemed almost incidental.

James Dean was many things to different people. David Dalton who has previously written biographies of the Rolling Stones and Janis Joplin, has energetically combined a collection of "I remember Jimmy" type interviews and Dean memorabilia in a chronological style that attempts to put both Dean's career and life in some type of logical order.

Dalton notes that "Teenagers were the first to recognize this beautiful monster (Dean), this creature of a new species: James Dean, the mutant king. He appealed to them through the desperate and infectious condition of the mutant: I need creatures who resemble me!"

The book reads as if it were a CBS documentary before the editors perform their final cuts. The book is simply not tight enough, and in spots the author indulges in too many overdrawn descriptions. These descriptions are not so much irrelevant as unnecessary. ("James Byron Dean was born on February 8, 1931 in a small town in Indiana. He was delivered at home and given the first name of the attending physician...")

However, in dealing with his subject, Dalton has overcome some substantial handicaps. Unlike truly historical figures, there are very few documents remaining that give us any real idea what James Dean was all about "on the inside", (and that is where it does count the most). The fact that Dean is dead and many of his close friends refuse to talk about him did nothing to help make the author's job easier.

Dalton has put so much energy into this book that his slight indulgences should be excused. He has shown us James Dean, the driven young man who wanted to do everything well: the young boy mourning over the early loss of his mother; and the angry young man who could never really seem to find happiness, even after personal fame seemed assured.

Dean's ability was a product of his driving intensity. His constant misery also drew its origins from the same source. From the set of East of Eden, Dean wrote a friend, "I don't like it here. I don't like people here. I like it home (N.Y.) and I like you and I want to see you. Must I always be miserable? I try so hard to make people reject me. Why? I don't want to write this letter. It would be better to remain silent. Wow! Am I fucked up!"

The inner turmoil that was so self destructive in Dean's personal life, seemed so artistic on the screen. People could relate to a hysterical young man, crying out to be loved, and Dean was in both East of Eden and Rebel Without a Cause.

During the fifties, Dean became the symbol of the "angry young man" to whom truth was a matter of substance and not cosmetics. His angry moods were interpreted as evidence of his burning desire for truth, and not a contradiction of his search. During the fifties people looked for symbols to represent their inner doubts, hurts and hopes. If the majority of "solid citizens" found it easier to hide behind the truth of Joe McCarthy or the austerity of Dwight Eisenhower, it isn't hard to see how an entire generation of young people could find in James Dean's turbulent search for real truth and real emotions much more important than the superfluous circus of political farce that permeated the so-called tranquil fifties.

As a symbol of hope and energy, Dean seemed to promise that emotions were more important than traditions and being "misunderstood" did not separate you from the masses, but on the contrary initiated you into the brotherhood of your peers; a brotherhood filled with doubts in a society that rejected truths of the heart.

Dean was just one of a group of such "angry young men" who came in on the heels of Marlon Brando's bravado. During the fifties Paul Newman and Steve McQueen were competing against Dean for the parts that eventually made Dean immortal. In fact Dean barely edged out Paul Newman for the part of Caleb Trask in East of Eden.

Dean was a "method " actor, and had studied under Lee Strasberg in New York to master the technique. The actor immersed himself within the character that he was playing, and exploded on scene from within. Dean didn't recite lines, he incorporated them. Caleb Trask was not "played by" James Dean; by the time the cameras started to shoot James Dean was Caleb Trask. This technique might have been the source of his talent, but it was also the root of many of his sullen moods.

During the filming of Giant, his third and last film; Dean, angry because he had to sit around all day without getting a chance to shoot his scene, decided not to show up the next day. The Director of Giant, George Stevens, was so angered by this move that he "took him up to Jack Warner's office and threatened to kick him out of Hollywood." After Stevens finished. Dean replied, "....Let me tell you something. I am not a machine. I may be working in a factory, but I'm not a machine. I stayed up all night Friday to do that scene. I prepared all night for that scene. I came in ready to work and you kept me sitting around all day. Do you realize I'm doing emotional memories? That I'm working with my senses — my sight, hearing, smell, touch? Can I tell you that every day you make me sit, there'll be two days next time (that I don't show up)? Then three, then four? You'll pay for it. And you're not going to stop me from working."

The book's strongest passages concern Dean's early days in New York, living the life of the starving actor trying to catch on. The image of James Dean in the city is a captivating study of one man's personal struggle. Dalton's general view of the early days of television (Dean's first role was in a T.V. commercial) and the sudden strain put upon the entertainment industry is also quite interesting.

After Dean was killed speeding along a California highway, his popularity grew to proportions unprecedented with the possible exception to the death of Rudolph Valentino. The rumors that Dean was alive but crippled and deformed on some island, spread that same way that such absurdities would follow John Kennedy after his death. People claimed that Dean spoke to them from the "other world". One man claimed that he was the second coming of James Dean.

Despite all this identification with James Dean after his death, few really knew or understood him during his life. After the fatal car crash of 1955, many tried to exploit the public's emotional reaction to the death of the twenty four year old Dean. Jimmy Dean products spread over the entire world, varying from records to busts of Dean.

When Marlon Brando was asked to narrate The Jimmy Dean Story, an exploitation, grade B flick, he actually considered taking the job. "It could be important," he told author Truman Capote in an interview. "Toward the end, I think that he was beginning to find his own way as an actor. But this glorifying of Dean is all wrong. That's why I believe the documentary could be important. To show he wasn't a hero; show what he really was — just a lost boy trying to find himself."

Brando was wrong. For while James Dean was "lost", he was a hero nonetheless; an imaginary hero of every young man who also felt lost, reaching for that wordless truth with a sense of perpetual hope.

Dalton has caught both the elements of confusion and the charismatic aura that so marked James Dean's life, both on and off the screen. David Dalton's James Dean: The Mutant King does not quite succeed in letting you know how the actor felt about things on the inside, but it must be remembered that with Dean dead for over a decade, Dalton had to depend on secondary sources. However, while he doesn't quite let you know what made Dean tick, he gives you quite a thorough look into how the wires were laid out.

David Dalton has put together a book that does justice to Dean without either patronizing or exploiting him. When you're dealing with a legend that is no easy task.

THE SPOT

By Richard Malanga

It was a fiery autumn day when I entered Southwest, People lazily walking, enjoying the pretty foliage and the light breeze.

When I got to my room I noticed everything was the same as I had left it; my bed unmade, my desk cluttered with books and papers, and my roommate sitting at the window.

We lived on the seventeenth floor and from our window we commanded a beautiful view where one can see for miles the beauty they call New England.

My roommate always had the best spot at the window. Night and day he would sit there, not talking not moving. I really doubt whether he goes to classes because I know he is afraid of losing his spot at the window. He doesn't want me to see the trees of the sky he thinks he owns it all.

After finishing my homework I looked to the window... at first I couldn't believe what I saw.

He was sitting there, but not in his spot....he was on the ledge. He had removed the screen from the window and was actually sitting on the ledge!

I stood there quietly — a million thoughts raced through my mind — the trees, the buildings, the mountains, I could see them all if I only had the spot!

But, he was starting to move — to get up — to get back in his spot! I breathed deeply and lunged at him he slipped and with a monstrous scream he fell.

I told the police simply that I was studying when it happened — I didn't notice that he fell until I heard the scream.

All went well until the next day. I was standing at the window, at what was now my spot, looking at the people below, who still avoided the place where he landed, when I heard a knock at my door.

It was the floor councilor and another person who I had never seen. The councilor said that this person was to be my new roommate.

He walked into the room, this being his new home, and walked to the window. As I watched him my body started to tingle as if I were being struck by a thousand pins and my clothes were wet with perspiration. He walked to the window and stood in my spot.

"Ya got a nice view," he said.

I looked at him with eyes as cold as ice and concealingly said, "Yeah ain't it."

i remember
standing in the rain on the corner,
(the horrible, delinquent, and distasteful corner) watching the good Americans go by,
in their self impressive autos, watching the race car drivers
go by.
and watching people watch my world
go by.
i remember
the cool pure rain dripping off my nose and smoothly sliding slow down by back.

i remember
a seemingly long time ago, but probably only yesterday, trying to hold on to something when nothing was there

Then the rain touched my face!

This Wonderful Old Mill Wants to Introduce Itself . . .

The Old Mill

It has been, for many years, a country store — plus, catering to the selective tastes and cravings of Amherst. Where else can you find flower presses imported from Europe, pine incense that smells like you have the fireplace burning, or Racey Helps postcards (you know, that English artist who draws animals all dressed up and acting like human beings).

The friendly people who work in the store encourage browsing through this rambling old mill. Through the stationery and greeting card room (the nicest selection in the area!). To the clothes department, featuring the best in distinctive country clothes. Through the room that is stocked to the rafters with an extensive selection of candies and spices. And finally to the ultimate gift room, which has everything from Pewter, Copper, Stainless Steel table and cooking wares to spirits hip flasks to Winnie the Pooh books.

The store is a quick five minute ride from campus. Or take the UMass bus that goes past Puffton Village into North Amherst. Or just walk — The Old Mill is really closer than Amherst Center to Campus. The Old Mill is just one-half mile past Puffton Village, directly after the North Amherst Post Office.

Weather Report's Gloomy Forecast

by Michael Peppe

In Concert:
Weather Report
Symphony Hall, Boston
27 September

So there's Dom Um Romao running around behind his smorgasbord of instruments, randomly choosing toys to play with, banging this, shaking that, never playing anything for more than a few bars before grabbing something else, and it all seems so arbitrary because you can't hear him over the cymbals anyway. The drummers (there's two) are in the corner smashing bashing away like a couple of drunken high schoolers playing to Chuck Berry, drowning out all the subtlety in the music, which didn't have much to begin with. The song they're suffocating is called "Nubian Sundance", from Weather Report's latest album, Mysterious Traveller, and apparently these two bangers feel that the best musical approach is to play exactly the same beat as fast and as loudly and as unimaginatively as possible hundreds of times over. And there's Joe Zawinul behind his keyboards riffing away looking bored, and Wayne Shorter staring at his fingers gently kissing his alto sax, looking lost and maybe thinking about sometime trying to toot a few notes over the racket. And here I am in my $7.50 seat wondering why all the Jazz-Rock concerts I've been to lately have been Rock concerts and why all my favorite musicians are copping out for the big beat and the big bucks and why does it have to be so LOUD?, I said — WHAT?, my friend said — I SAID WHY DOES IT HAVE TO BE SO LOUD?, I said — WHAT?, he said — FORGET IT, I said, and slumped back into my seat sneering even though no one was looking.

With the first number so comprehensively destroyed and the corpse neatly disposed of, I'm hoping it was just their Flash Opening Number and now they'll get into something a little juicier, and I'm right. Romao comes jigging out from behind his instrument table looking like some cantankerous old Afganistani goat-herder, impatiently thumping and kicking his gong and singing quaint little foreign-sounding ditties. Then he switches to an instrument that looks like a telescope and sounds like sliding beach stones, and pretty soon the whole band (minus the drummers) is into it and playing really beautiful music and finally it turns into "Scarlet Woman", also from Mysterious Traveller. The third number looks hopeful too, but just when things are sounding really nice again, there's this horrendous crash from over in the corner and a sound like a cement mixer starting up and one of the crash-crazy kids is back, furiously hammering out a breakneck rhythm bearing no resemblance whatsoever to what was being played, and it is so awfulandincongruous that the rest of the band just stops playing and stares at him, as if a stranger had just interrupted their performance. After a few moments of stunned confusion, Zawinul seems to want to make it look like it was supposed to happen, so he tries a few hesitant notes, but it doesn't work. A little later, after a few bars of attempted participation, all three of the non-drummers give up joining in and try to start their own number over the chaos, but they simply haven't the volume. At long last the drummer stops, and the rest ot the band soon after, giving our battered eardrums some much appreciated respite.

Then, like a heavenly oasis emerging from the desert mists, appears Joe Zawinul and a grand piano, alone, with no electric instruments or other musicians, playing music, and I mean that in the deepest and holiest sense of the word. One wonders how such spine-tingling, soul-tingling beauty can be produced by the fingers of mere man. For ten minutes I am in ecstasy, my ego pawing the ground and straining at its spiritual leash. Soon Shorter comes in, and I can't believe my grateful ears. But as suddenly as it begins, it ends, like traffic at an intersection, and just as noisy. Only this time the beauty stops for the last time. For the remainder of the evening Zawanil riffs, Romao unobtrusively experiments, bassist Alphonso Johnson buzzes (His bass sounds like it's being played through a five-inch tweeter with a hole in it), the drummers bash and Shorter thinks about it. They didn't even do an encore, and fortunately so.

The story is all too familiar. And its not like Zawanul and Shorter haven't got what it takes, either: it has been an established fact with just about everybody for over two decades that these men can play music like nobody's business. Yet here they are farting around with riff-rock at 200 decibels, getting screams and wild applause and standing ovations before they even step on the stage. And this is at Symphony Hall! (which, incidentally, is acoustically less suitable for rock n' roll than anywhere, don't let anyone kid you) And Herbie Hancock has gotten even worse! And Larry Coryell even louder! Do they take us for idiots?

QUAH — JORMA KAUKONEN with Tom Hobson (Grunt BFL1-0209)

Ever hear a song that you really liked but couldn't remember how it went? Quah will be that joyful experience. Quah features Jorma Kaukonen and Tom Hobson who really do some fine picking together.

Quah is very low key — a kind of Country and Western lullaby. Vocally, between Jorma and Tom, they burn off a healthy slice of tomato (4 caolries). Their vocals, of which Tom is slightly superior (especially in "Blue Prelude"), just serve as a background for their fine guitar compositions.

It would be tough to pick out an outstanding cut in Quah and equally to deny that Quah isn't good.

Quah is a perfect choice to put while studying because it will not make you take notice of it, but will make your time much more enjoyable.

SONNY STITT — GENESIS PRESTIGE

Never have I heard Sonny Stitt as inspired as he is on this double reissue of 1949-51 recordings. The perennial bebopper, only 26 years old here, is matched with some of the most complimentary and capable rhythm sections of the time. These include painists John Lewis, Kenny Drew, and Duke Jordan, bassists Nelson Boyd and Tommy Potter and drummer Art Blakey. The most powerful trio here, though, consists of our good friend Max Roach, bassist Curly Russell and the amazing Bud Powell on piano. Teamed with this awesome triumvirate, Sonny on tenor sax tears through eight well-chosen tunes, including a very hot "All God's Chillun Got Rhythm" and three Stitt originals, reconstituted but catchy. All 2 to 3 minutes in length, the pieces feature maximum music as Sonny and Bud leap into every chorus with mad abandon, somehow never slipping as they resolve one lightning riff and leap immediately to the next. Stitt's tone and execution are infallible throughout on alto, tenor and even baritone sax and he avoids the cliches that he often falls prey to now. The cuts with Blakey and J.J. Johnson are also of high quality, but the less talented sidemen on the segments of sides 3 and 4 do not challenge or inspire Sonny sufficiently. Overall, Sonny's expertise is spotlighted well here and a good taste of the bebop era comes through.

SKINNY BOY — ROBERT LAMM
Columbia

Skinny Boy is, at best, a toned-down Chicago. Robert Lamm spares little effort to imitate previous Chicago successes and create new melodies I'm sure Chicago turned thumbs down on.

Skinny Boy has the Pointer Sisters helping out Mr. Lamm in a couple of vocals. But Lamm, with the help of no one, is able to make a so-so song a flop by his new style of singing — being afraid of the mike.

After Skinny Boy, one will wonder if this is the same Lamm that wrote so many of Chicago's smashes. Save your money for the Campus Center fee.

DOUG SAHM — GROOVERS PARADISE (Warners)

Michael lives in Texas these days and calls me in the middle of the night to tell me the place can be a Groover's paradise. If anyone knows how to groove in Texas ought to be Sir Douglas, and the boys he has on this album can follow where he leads. Stu Cook and Doug Clifford (from Creedence) show up here and you can hear Doug fade out on the title cut. There are no surprises here, no frills, but if you want to get the feel of the San Antone-Austin Tex-Mex life, this is a fine and hones album, and it's as good as a phone call from a stoned Texan at 3 a.m.

Zappa/Mothers, Roxy & Others

Roxy & Elsewhere
Frank Zappa & The Mothers Of Invention
Discreet 2DS 2202
Time 68:35 (2 discs)

(Opening theme: "Kibitzer" by Copperhead)

TM: Dudes & dudies, the Music Editor of Below the Salt.

Mike Kostek: Thank you. I will open with a short statement after which I will entertain a few questions.

My affection for Frank Zappa began in 1966 with Absolute-Free and Freak Out! I have followed him faithfully since then, through each and every album, bootlegs included. I have been disappointed with his recent literalism and lack of bold daring, but have appreciated the newer carryings-on, on their own level. He is still, in my judgement one of the best lyricists and writers around, and continues to lead, though at a much slower pace than before, a new path in the world of music. Yes, Mr. Powell.

Adam Clayton Powell: Mr. Editor, what is your opinion of this set of Mothers, most of whom have been on the last two albums, Apostrophe' and Over-Nite Sensation?

MK: There is quite a difference between the four sets of Mothers of Invention, none of whom fall into the dull or null sets. The first group, as exemplified best on Uncle Meat, had their brilliance in their crudeness. They couldn't cliche because they'd not played enough to know the cliches.

The second group, the Flo & Eddie Mothers, was mainly a decently weird rock band backing up two excellent vocal and mental talents, Volman & Kaylan. See the Live At The Fillmore East 1971 album.

The third group was the rather short-lived 'big band' Mothers of the Grand Wazoo genre. This was the first ensemble Zappa had that could actually play together for any length of time, but its size was unweildly, being upwards from fifteen people. Now the difference between this current band and the others is two: 1. They play together quite well in most areas of music, and 2. They tuck in their shirts. This shirt business of course modifies how they play. They are not as demented as the first two outfits, but who is? Zappa, as always, uses his strengths, and here it is the band's playing together through some outrageously complicated pieces that is the main feature.

Maddy Pryor: Any other differences, mate?

MK: Yes, there is the continued literalness from Over-Nite and ', mainly through George Duke on keyboards. Zappa sings "I heard them chokin' in the street", and the band will literally gag. The old boys would've choked musically.

Frank has also, I presume, in order to stay as different as possible, continued his stepped-up surrealistic lyrics.

Neil Armstrong: What about his guitar playing?

Below The Salt photo by Lori Anne Yeslow

MK: I'm glad you asked me that. In a word, it's excellent, with great varieties in tone, timbre, tempo, timing, temper and all the other T words.

Richard Bean: How about the tunes, man? I mean, don't most of them bite? And don't evade my question. I want it straight!

MK: Well, Mr. Bean, that's being pretty narrow, I think. While there are some real dumb things like "Dummy Up", and half of "Be-Bop Tango", there is a lot of meat, so to speak, on sides two and three. "Cheepnis" is great, especially that sped-up part in the middle; "Son Of Orange County" and "More Trouble Every Day" are given fine new coats of taint; "Village Of The Sun" is a good example of Zappa's sensitive melodic side. And let's not forget the fine improvisational job done in the clean ween song, "Don't You Ever Wash That Thing?". Just rinse it one time.

William C. Dunkerfield: Ah, Sir, what would you say then would be the final evaluation of this tasty enchilada?

MK: Not one of Frank's finest, I'm afraid, although it still stuns most anything out today in the rock world. I'd like to take this opportunity to give credit here, as our space runs out, to drummers Ralph Humphries and Chester Thompson, Napoleon Brock for vocals and presence and Ruth Underwood on vibes and various.

Senior "Rolling Stone" Correspondent: Thank you, Mr. Editor.

It's hard to believe that this is the same Frank Zappa whose coat-of-arms had an upraised middle finger at the end of each limb and who wore the curse of the music industry, "No commercial potential", like a title of nobility. Here we have some of the best music since Grand Wazoo, but old Frank's famed wit seems to have been somewhat blunted over the years; either that or he is deliberately catering to his newly-found album-in-the-top-100 audience, the very existence of which I find highly suspicious.

Who needs topical humor set to music, no matter how good the music — I wish he'd offend me once in a while. Beautiful arrangements, and a gold star to George Duke for "Bebop Tango", but I'd prefer a little less polish and a lot more Zappacity.

WHEN THE EAGLE FLIES — TRAFFIC (Asylum 7E-1020) — time 38:45.

Amazing, no? How TRAFFIC could deteriorate down to a three paragraph review status like this. After the sustained brilliance of their first four discs, the killer fog descended in a thick layer, beginning with the jive Welcome to the Canteen snooze. Things cleared a bit with Low Spark, but we're leery, leery after the last two slippers, Shootout and On The Road.

And why? Why indeed. Intensity. Work. Not enough of those factors and too much noodle filler. Six minute cuts. Eight minute cuts. Ten minute cuts. There are certain snatches of the old Traffic magic, a great run or a catchy phrase, but they are hopelessly diluted in stock formulas and bland playing in that sleepy music style that has dominated their form in the last few years.

When The Eagle Flies is dull and diffracted. Winwood is his usually highly silked self, and his lyrics are often more than good, but they never form anything remotely new. There ought to be a law against good groups breaking up. Bring back Dave Mason.

WHO'S AFRAID OF THE BIG BAND MONK? — THELONIOUS MONK
(Columbia KG 32892) time 93:27 (2 recs)

Thelonious has always had this...angular feel about him, and it is, shall we say, amplified, in this varied big band context. Record 1 is all live and long, with all sorts of solos, 1964 Monk style. My favorite? "Four In One", an intense swirl of lines, and "Oska T.", a monklodic standout.

Disc No. 2. is 1968 studio big band bands, with the cuts in the 4-7 minute range. Hungry? Try "Let's Cool One", the ever-swinging "Rootie Tootie" and the ever-turning, ever-great, "Brilliant Corners". The bits of Monk's piano-playing personality that get lost in the band's noise are made up for, at least for humble reviewer, by hearing a big band go through the paces of Thelonious' peculiar soundscapes. This reissue (a steal at $6.98 list) is primarily for those who like Monk's music more than his playing.

A 'four in one' B+.

LEADBELLY — LEADBELLY (Playboy PB-119) —time: 58:56

If Hefner comes up limp tomorrow and the Playboy empire folds, one of the few things worth saving is this, the only live tape of Leadbelly on record.

Recording quality is sufficient, and the album is generous in time (nearly an hour long) and content. There is a rich and varied assortment of Leadbelly's (Aka Huddie Ledbetter) artistry, from field hollers, blues, spirituals and rollickers. It's a very pleasant, courteous Leadbelly performing here in front of an audience at the University of Texas, and the only aspect of his persona not on here is the strong, hard "John Henry" Leadbelly.

A 'he was one of the giants' B+.

FROM GENESIS TO REVELATION — GENESIS
LONDON PS 643
Total playing time: 43:37

It's certainly not uncommon for record companies to dredge up old tapes or release hitherto unsalable recordings when a musician or musical group suddenly becomes popular or recognized in the public eye. It is inexcusable though, if this chronological information is not mentioned on the record, passing off an old recording as a new one.

From Genesis To Revelation was recorded about six years ago and was the first Genesis album, pre-dating the recently re-released (after it appeared in the budget bins) Trespass by almost two years. FGTR is best described as a collector's item, and is certainly not recommended for anyone who hasn't yet been introduced to the recent music of this often spectacular, often apocalyptic band. For the uninitiated, Live, Foxtrot, or the recent chartbusting Selling England by the Pound would do much better than this interesting, but obviously primordial recording.

While talking with keyboardist and guitarist, Tony Banks, we obtained a bit of additional info. To wit, Jonathan King, who is probably best remembered for his hit, "Everyone's Gone to the Moon", turned producer after he tired of singing, and produced several acts, of which, according to Banks, "Genesis was probably the only one which wasn't successful". It was King who gave the group the name Genesis, though when this album was recorded, the group was considering changing their name to Revelation as there was an American group also named Genesis. (This other Genesis recorded an album entitled In The Beginning, so beware.) Anyway, the other Genesis broke up, King encouraged England's Genesis to stay together, and Genesis decided to produce their own material from then on.

From Genesis To Revelation is pre-Phil Collins (drummer extraordinaire) and Steve Hackett (present guitarist), but contains the bands current songwriting nucleus in its earliest stages. Peter Gabriel's voice isn't bad, just unpolished. The songs aren't bad, merely pleasant. The record isn't bad, only skeletal. Hopefully not too many unassuming record buyers will mistake this for new, and maybe next time the record company will be a bit more honest. Don't bet on it.

HIGH ROLLER — JAMES MONTGOMERY BAND
(CAPRICORN CP 0142)
Total playing time: 36:46

Prior to Capricorn's signing of the James Montgomery Band in early 1973, the group was a living legend in and around Boston and Cambridge. Their funky white style of bar-rock and blues led them to frequent bookings at Boston University and Harvard, as well as all of the heavy and smokey hot spots in the area. Montgomery's name spread, the popularity radius grew, they began to do more original material, and finally, they got that recording contract.

But now, instead of being the top bar band in the area, the James Montgomery Band was but one of zillions of recording artists. Their first album, First Time Out, was poorly produced and failed to deliver the essence of the band, that which is so apparent on stage. That essence, the foot-stompin', beer drinkin' rhythmic rock centers around Montgomery's lead harp, Peter Malick's guitar, and David "Expose Yourself" Case's keyboards with gritty vocals by all.

provement over First Time Out, it again falls short of doing the band the justice which their live presence demands and warrents.

Except for three standout tracks, the material has an unfortunate sameness and stiffness to it which is only somewhat overlookable because of the proficiency of the musicianship. "Brickyard Blues", the Allan Toussaint song which is suddenly getting recorded by as diverse likes as Bonnie Raitt and hitsters Three Dog Night, is a real keeper, putting TDN's pablumatic version to shame. Drummer Chuck Purro's "Sing You a Love Song" is a fine change of pace belly-rubber and the band's best ballad to date, and "Schoolin' Them Dice" is typically funk-tional, a high school harum, marked by its Magic Dick-like harp break and some fine guitar.

By now it's obvious that James Montgomery has what it takes to be bar room, even concert performers, but as recording artists, it will take a live Full House type recording to adequately show their wares. Anyone who has heard any live JMB tapes knows that they make their studio albums look pale in comparison. Got that down in Macon?

In Concert:
Kennedy Center
Washington, D.C.
Saturday, Sept. 21, 1974 — 8 p.m.

A (BIZARRE) NIGHT AT THE OPERA
whereupon guitarist extraordinaire Roy Buchanan thrills and chills the audience

If you have reason for fear and loathing, Washington's Kennedy Center for (select) Performing Arts is a vicious place. One enters the building into the vaulted ceiling of the indescribably imperialistic 'Hall of Flags'. As you stumble onward toward the concert hall, you begin to notice the eleven-dollar-a-yard white carpet that covers the thousands of yards of walls. Above you hang huge, garish and expensive glass and electric chandeliers. The building itself is so absurd and such a waste of public funds that you could laugh at it, if there weren't people in evening dress all around you taking it seriously.

Despite all of these distractions, Roy Buchanan was gripping and excellent. He is a joy to watch, and is clearly in that league of guitarists among whom it is frivolous to compare for speed or accuracy. He can play some things that no other human can, but his act is far from perfect.

The band that accompanies him has to be one of the least talented to even cross the rock stage, and it's hard to see why he still plays with them. Outside of one or two songs, Roy has no material at all, so that his concert literally is a collection of other people's blues and country songs in fairly unimaginative arrangements. Just the same, the performance had its moments and certainly was more than him just riffing for three hours. Roy Buchanan is more than the 'technician' that he often is accused of being. Because of Buchanan's style he doesn't record well at all, but live, the wailing, screaming, weeping guitar that he plays is simply amazing.

Roy Buchanan is one of the best Southern white blues musicians around, and the more than a decade of dues he paid shows in every line. He delivered the best version of "Hey Joe", a song almost universally maligned by various bands in the mid-60's, that I have ever heard. Where he comes from, the song makes some sort of cultural sense. Although it sounds corny, his only real 'original', "The Messiah Will Come Again" has to be seen to be believed.

Buchanan has been around for a long time. It is rumored that Chuck Berry had him in mind when Berry wrote "Johnny B. Goode." If so, Chuck certainly knew what he was talkin' 'bout. By intermission all of the evening dress had disappeared, I guess those people just don't 'preciate culture.

The Vets, Amnesty and History

by the Veterans Coalition

Amnesty in the United States.

1. George Washington — July 10, 1795, granted a full, free and entire pardon to those involved in the insurrection in Penn. against the United States.

2. John Adams — May 1800, granted another amnesty for another insurrection in Penn.

3. James Madison — 1815, granted a free and full pardon of all offenses touching the revenue trade and navigation in the vicinity of New Orleans.

4. Abraham Lincoln — Dec. 8, 1863, granted a full pardon to those participating in the existing rebellion who were prepared to take a perscribed oath.

5. Andrew Johnson — 1865, 1867, granted a partial amnesty. July 4, 1868 Johnson granted a full pardon to everyone who participated in the late insurrection or rebellion except for those under indictment for treason or a felony.

+Dec. 25, 1868, Johnson granted a Christmas amnesty for the offense of Treason against the United States.

World War I

Wilson considered the critics of the war to be traitors. He would not even entertain the possibility of Amnesty.

Warren G. Harding — Released 24 prisoners (political) including Eugene Debs aged 65.

Calvin Coolidge — granted amnesty for those who deserted between Armistice and the technical ending of the war.

Franklin D. Roosevelt — granted amnesty for persons convicted under the Espionage Act and conspiracy to violate the Selective Service act of 1917 and who paid the penalty of the law imposed.

World War II

In August of 1945 there were 15,805 prisoners being held for convictions of violations of the Selective Service act. Truman ordered a three man Amnesty Board (whose ideas were genuinely hostile to the beliefs of most of these political prisoners) whose net result was 1,523 pardons which took effect on Dec. 23, 1947. This pardon did not include Jehovah's Witnesses or political prisoners. (Truman had granted an earlier amnesty on Dec. 25, 1945 to all former prisoners who had done at least 12 months honorable service regardless of their criminal record.)

Conscientious Objectors

These figures are listed to show the correlation between the amount of involvement in the Vietnam War and the attitude of the military regarding those who applied for C.O. status while already in the Army:

(Discharged Honorably)
	Those judged Sincere	No. of applications	Percentage
1963	29	69	42
1964	30	62	47
1965	26	101	26
1966	5	118	4
1967	9	185	4

The important fact to note is that when our commitment of troops increased, our judging of C.Os. became more severe. Also by 1970 due to certain court cases (involving civilian revue of military court decisions) the percentages had climbed back up towards 50 per cent.

The point being made is that the judging of Conscientious Objectors does not even have the pretense of being an objective review of a client's religious beliefs, that being the only justification for a C.O. status at the time.

Welsh v. United States 1970

The Supreme Court determined that Orthodox or Traditional Religious beliefs are not essential for conscientious objection.

Amnesty

The Encyclopedia of Social Sciences says; Amnesty by any Government is nearly always a sign that the government feels its position secure...

John W. Swomley Jr. Professor of Christian Ethics at St. Paul School of Theology, Kansas City, Mo. Author of The Military Establishment, The State and The Schools, and American Empire, Religion.

Professor Swomley provides us with a very reasonable argument for Amnesty.

"Amnesty is generally granted only for political or military offenses against a state. In each of the presidential pardons prior to World War I described above, the offense involved actual insurrection or war against the United States, which the Constitution calls treason. The men in prison or exile today are not charged with military action or insurrection against the United States. Their offense is either that they valued freedom too much to submit to conscription or that their consciences did not permit them to prepare for, participate in, or even indirectly contribute to the war in Vietnam. Americans may differ about the wisdom of their actions, but it is quite clear that their acts in no way involved the destruction of life or armed revolt against the United States. If Presidents could grant amnesty for the more serious offense of armed insurrection, why should amnesty be withheld from men who were apparently motivated by humanitarian opposition to war?"

Conclusions:

Due to the President's recent action on the question of Amnesty I feel it is necessary to look into the possible reasons behind the type of amnesty that has been decided upon.

1. The President is trying to heal the wounds of the country. (This is incredible since it has only served to reopen old wounds between differing factions of society) Official Position.

2. The President only granted the limited amnesty that he did to sooth opposition to his pardon of President Nixon. Denied

3. The government does not feel secure enough to grant an unconditional amnesty. This implies a distinct threat from within. (Could this possibly be related to the Presidential elections of 1976?) Denied

4. The government may wish to have the freedom to embark on other military adventures for reasons as invalid as Vietnam and an unconditional amnesty would encourage more draft resistors and military deserters in such an event. (If the draft was deemed necessary.) Denied

There is another position that is held by many of those in Congress as well as the majority of veterans in the V.F.W. and the American Legion and the past and present administrations and that is that an unconditional amnesty would make a mockery of those who were killed or wounded in Vietnam. This the hardest pill for the American People to swallow. They can't believe that those Deaths, as well as the deaths of thousands of Asians was a mockery of American Policy throughout the world. Until we can admit that we were wrong in Vietnam, then we cannot expect an atmosphere conducive to unconditional amnesty for all those injured as a result of the Vietnam War. We are all casualties.

"It's confrontation in the mind"

BTS: But you really think that these people, with an average income of $8,000 per are going to be responsible enough to be educated to vote against this?

SL: We're using the electoral process, we're using as little money as possible 'cause we have next to none. Our budget since we got into the nuke riff has been a total of less than two grand, and that's been mainly for rent on this office and the phone here. I'll bet you Northeast Utilities spends two grand a day. Radio ads, booklets like you would't believe. We're going to get them into a very embarrassing situation, 'cause when they push the button for a media campaign, it's a very, very oily button. There's a lot of stuff behind the button. Maybe in October we'll release a little statement saying 'Here's what we've spent. We'd just like to see an answer and maybe get some sort of Fair Campaign Practices Act', hoolie-hoolie bullshit, hernia Liberal crap-ass. But that's where these people are, and so you have to talk with them on these terms. The Electoral Process — I reject it; it's a total fucking joke. You should have community spontaneous politics. It should just peak right up until everybody knows everybody on a total trust basis, that's the only way it can work.

BTS: Is that realistic for this town?

SL: Not at this moment. I certainly think it's realistic for the future.

I think the best way to educate these people is a combination of educated logic, emotional appeal and confrontation. But, very weak, in my estimation, moderate, human, nothing confrontations, but to them very real. Now you're saying that it would take me five years to convince one of those Highway Department people that the Vietnam way was bad. But what if I just have long hair? Isn't that an immediate signal to him that the war was bad, at least as far as I'm concerned? Therefore he has to confront the idea that the war is bad, summed up in no words, little energy, boom, lifestyle. Same with the tower. Everybody's walking round saying hoolie hoolie hoolie hoolie hoolie. And boom, the tower goes down. Someone, holy fuck, out there is so concretely against this thin, and it's confrontation in the mind. That's the whole idea. I personally don't have the time to walk around to every house in Montague and tell them. I don't have the time to do it right on a one-to-one basis. It's a definitional impossibility.

BTS: A lot of people believe that would have been a better way ...

SL: What they're saying is: "Give them the definitional impossibility and we'll kill them with that." It's bullshit. I don't even want to hear that, that's how sick that fuckin' argument is. This is saying 'Oh, be so nice to me that I can't even think about napalm in Vietnam, or I can't even think about the assassination of three of the heaviest political people of the sixties.' Fuck that, man.

BTS: Do you think the confrontation over the tower caused alienation?

SL: No alienation that was new. All it did was focus all the alienation that was out there anyway. What about Donald Skole (Montague Selectman) quoted in the paper the next day saying what would I think if he wanted to burn down my house 'cause he didn't like what I was doing. Is that the way a responsible public person talks on the front page of the newspaper? Is that correlating the lives of the eleven people in a wooden house to a fucking tower that's unrelated to nobody except the person who tipped it over and could've gotten hurt? Fuck that pig. Sure there was hysteria but that's their problem. Shock makes education just as much as ten years of experience. And we don't have ten years like I told you.

If we weren't around trying to hassle them everyway we know how, they'd be in here in three months, ziip, just like slippery elm. And we're just small assholes hassling these guys.

BTS: Who's building these plants? Who's pushing them?

SL: It's technology running rampant, totally crazed, and these totally greedy capitalists worried about their empire crumbling under them, on which they base their entire personality and ego. If we stop this think, you're going to see hundreds of people jumping out of windows, because society didn't prepare them for their riff falling apart.

BTS: Was knocking down the tower the only way?

SL: No, it wasn't. I had to signal to this town, this utility company and this nation that Sam Lovejoy and the human beings of the world refuse to allow them to ratfuck our lives. I had to find a nice straight, complete symbolic way of gesturing this, in the least harmful way I could. Not only that, but when you call an open meeting of everybody opposed to the plant and ten people show up, and then you go out and tip over the tower and one hundred people show up after that, you kind of wonder what you did. You have to do something to get people moving, and that's what I did.

BTS: What if you're eventually found guilty?

SL: Great, send me to jail.

..BTS: Do you think the townspeople will say that's good?

..SL: Sure, a lot of people will say that's dynamite, 'Send him away forever. Burn down his house! Torture him! Kill the fucker!'

BTS: Would that end the cause?

SL: Oh no. The first ecology person that goes to jail means there's going to be ten more acts in this country within three months. And if they go to jail, there'll be a hundred acts in three months. And if they go to jail there'll be a thousand acts. There'll be literally thousands of people in jail for ecology acts.

BTS: What about your trial? Do you think they'll appeal to a higher court?

SL: I hope so. That means more fun, more free advertising for the cause, which is what it's all about.

BTS: What if you weren't released on the technicality? Would you have won?

SL: I have a private report that eleven of the fourteen jurors were ready to vote 'not guilty' before the judge's instruction to stop it.

BTS: How about the impact of the trial? Is it incomplete?

SL: Not really. It means the beginning of civil disobedience entering the environment movement. This marks the beginning of the recognition that the environment has rights just like blacks, women, dogs and everything else.

BTS: What about the year's delay in the plants' timetable announced by Northeast?

SL: That's it, that's the end. Besides the 770 supporters we can count on from the election, I estimate I convinced a quarter of Montague and Franklin County during the trial. And all this has been done with only half the organization we have now. The final decision now comes in August of 1976, and we can delay and delay that through the election, and there'll be a lot of closet case politicos who will be forced to come out against it by then. By late 1976 there'll be such a mandate around here that they won't be able to ignore it.

I got a letter from the Editor of The Boston Globe, saying "Congratulations on your courageous act. Please don't be disappointed at what I'm about to say, but you know no one ever recognizes the role of anyone standing up for anything until after they die. Don't expect anybody to get behind your bandwagon until after you're dead, either. That's the way People Are", capital letters. Now that's heavy. He's telling the truth, and it's scary, but I don't want to even believe it. I want to confront that truth by denying it. I think people can come around, people aren't that way in a permanent sense like he's saying. I guess I'm just an optimist.

University dancers: Rhythmic leotards and scarves

by Ann Murphy

Below The Salt photo by Chris Bourne

The University Dancers and Concert Dance Group presented their fall concert on September 26, 27, and 28. In the performance were a variety of dance numbers ranging from very serious, symbolic numbers to fun and lighthearted ones.

The first number was a modern jazz routine choreographed and performed by Bill Foster, Carolyn Colby, David McCauley, and Michelle Taylor. It was a very rhythmic dance with precise and fast movements. The composition of the dance followed a definite pattern with each dancer doing a solo of different jazz techniques.

The group as a whole showed many different approaches to the meaning of dance. No two dances were alike which helped hold the audience's attention. One dance in particular was especially successful in showing four different techniques under one theme. It was called "But Fall, Well — It Really Does" and was choreographed by Andrea Watkins. The dancers portrayed the moods of the four seasons starting with winter, proceeding through spring and summer, and then to fall. The winter dance included four dancers in leotards, scarves, hats, and sweaters. The comical elf-like antics were presented in the true spirit of winter. Spring was portrayed by a male and a female ballet dancer who were exaggerating their movements to show what "typical" ballet dancers are supposed to act like. In doing this the ballerina came across as uncoordinated and clutzy, putting absolutely no grace or effort into the dance which actually is what made this one so entertaining.

"Summer" was an exciting number in which gymnastics stole the scene. Jodi Hitt back-handspringed her way into the hearts of the audience showing incredible moves. She was accompanied by two male dancers who were supposed to be fighting over her heart during the summer at the beach playing the muscle beach routine.

"Fall" was performed by Andrea Watkins who depicted the typical bored tap dance student and centered her movements around the impression that she could not bear what she was doing. by this she showed what an exceptional performer she is because not only did her body movements come across strongly, but her facial expressions enhanced the meaning of the number.

"Circles With Sound", a number choreographed and performed by Janice Schleiger was not accompanied by any music but it did not need any. Her costume was a long full dress and helped intensify the images of circles. In this number every movement flowed with each other and if it was set to music, it would probably have spoiled the effect.

"Hoedown For Uncle Dunk" was a typical square dance which was 'nice' but really did not do anything for the show.But the musicians were very good so they enhanced the dance a bit.

"Rain, Water, and Other Containers" was a number choreographed and performed by Andrea Watkins. A large trash can and a thermos were used for props which symbolically communicated an intense feeling of loneliness. The containers were used to show the contrast between the emptiness and fullness in the character's life.

The last dance, "Flash Back", was the major production of the show. It was choreographed by Richard Jones and performed by Richard Abbott, Richard Guimond, Scott Hayward, Richard Jones, Joyce McGowan, Joseph Orlando, Donna Potter, Bruce Smith, and Andrea Watkins. This dance actually told a story of a man who was being hanged and when the rope was cut he falls into a dream sequence in which Richard Jones laments his lover. During this portion of the dance Richard Jones and another female dancer demonstrate the force of two lovers who must part from each other. It then focuses back into reality and the first part of the dance of the execution is performed and he is finally hanged. This dance centers around the extreme body movements of Richard Jones who can rouse the emotions of any audience.

There were a few technical problems which made some of the numbers come across not as well as they could have. In one dance which was accompanied by a narrative tape, the voice was not clear so it hurt the total effect of the number. Considering the short time in which this concert had to be put together it was a satisfying show and the efforts of the dancers were well appreciated by the audience. I hope we can look forward to more performances of this sort because it shows that the university dancers are truly serious about their work and are improving with every presentation.

MANCE LIPSCOMB — VOLUME 6
Arhoolie 1069

Out of the latest batch of records from California's Arhoolie records comes this little gem from Mance Lipscomb. Mance is one of the few remaining practitioners of the country blues, (i.e. the real blues), that came from the South many moons ago, only to remain unheard for the most part until quite recently.

This record isn't exactly like the blues that you're probably used to hearing. It's just Mance and his guitar and that's enough. His voice isn't your typical deep, heavy, and foreboding blues voice. Mance has more of a friendly voice, and a friendly guitar that keeps your foot tapping most of the time. He is a musical storyteller who is plodding through life along with the rest of us, trying to make the best of it.

It's the kind of blues that makes you happy, even though it's the blues. It's a good album to listen to while you're sitting around the house (or dormitory cell, if you prefer) trying to relax. Mance and his contemporaries can tell us where the blues came from, and show us that blues don't have to be sung with all the electrified flash that you might see in the concert halls or on the Midnight Special.

Biased Political Note: It might be a good idea to add to your collection a few albums from companies like Arhoolie which are dedicated to preserving the roots of American music. It makes more sense than buying everything that the big brother corporate record companies tell you to buy.

"Colorless Green Ideas Sleep Furiously"

WEEKEND
Compiled By Jim Paulin

ALFREDO, ALFREDO (1973)+++
A very funny Italian comedy starring Dustin Hoffman as a henpecked-to-be husband. Dubbed in English. At the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield.

ANIMAL CRACKERS (1930) +++
Not my favorite Marx Brothers flick, but of course there has never been a bad one. Groucho is Captain Spaulding (horray!) and if you're fortunate to catch a decent print, you might be able to hear some of his best vibes with the various stuffed-shirts. Harpo is insane; running around in his underwear, goosing the guests, and sitting in on an incredibly ludicrous poker game with Chico. Zeppo is in his only funny scene, but still takes the rap from Groucho, who is dictating a letter to him. The only flaw in the film is the direction, as you feel you are watching a dress rehearsal of the Broadway play it was based on. At the Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

JEREMIAH JOHNSON +
Robert Redford goes off into the woods to get away from it all, but ends up battling with the Indians, getting married and dealing with assorted hucksters and hermits. He endures everything for an extended period of time and becomes regarded by the Indians and hopefully by the audience as a supernatural figure. Now playing at the Amherst Cinema.

ESCAPE TO NOWHERE ++++
A French physicist working for the Russians is captured by the Russians who force him to divulge top secret information. Once they're done with him, they release him, forcing him to run for his life from the vindictive Russians. If you can't understand French, you can read the subtitles. Now playing at Mountain Farms 4.

THAT'S ENTERTAINMENT ++++
A collection of musical moments from nearly 100 great MGM films produced between 1928 - 1959. The singing of Liza Minelli, Frank Sinatra, Judy Garland and "more stars than there are in heaven". Also the offstage music of Cole Porter, the Gershwins, etc. as Frank Sinatra says, "You can wait around and hope...but you won't see the likes of this again." Playing at the Mountain Farms 4.

TAMERAND SEED (Directed by Blake Edwards) ++
Russian Spy Omar Sharif falls in love with British secretary Julie Andrews. Sharif is a bore and Andrews should have stuck with an umbrella and super califragilistic-expealidocious. Playing at the Campus Cinemas.

2001. A SPACE ODYSSEY. +++++
Technically brilliant. This bit of pop philosophy has become a classic.

PINK FLOYD ++
A dull, static concert filmed without an audience and that's what this film deserves. Playing at the Showcase Cinemas in W. Springfield.

ENGLAND MADE ME +++
From Graham Greene's fourth novel. About pre-war tensions in Europe. Playing at the Mountains Farms 4.
